Though the more active campaigner, Callahan will have to overcome the unbroken history of Republican D.A.'s in this district and Grife's incumbent position, something always difficult to beat in an election campaign like District Attorney.

However, many traditional Republican strongholds in the area have changed to Democrat in registration figures. And Callahan's vigorous campaign may be enough to overturn his Republican rival, Grife.

UMass Student Runs For State Representative

All State legislature seats for the Amherst electorate are unopposed. State Senator David Barrus from Goshen, who last year proposed an investigation of the University following the Humphrey incident, and State Representatives John Olver and James R. Nolen will all return to the legislature.

In the Hampshire County race for Commissioner, Republican Fred Grinnell faces Democrat David Musante. They are running for the vacated seat of retiring Hiram Brownell.

For Eighth District Governor's council, if Democrat Edward O'Brien, defeats Republican George Wilde will make the council completely Democratically controlled. This fact has become the chief issue in the campaign for the race for the vacated seat of Raymond J. Fontana

In a race that will not be voted on in Amherst but is of local interest, UMass undergrad Democrat F. James Gensheimer is running for State representative in the first Franklin District against Jonathan Healety, who is aiming for the seat now held by his retiring father Republican representative Winston Healey.

Gensheimer is not that well known in the heavily Republican district, but he has been aided by a split in the Republicans due to a bitter primary battle between Healey and George Bell. Bell is waging a sticker campaign that could hurt Healey.

Healey is a Williams College soccer coach and was an activist in last May's student strike.

Gensheimer has campaigned on the platform of returning government to the local level.

War, Voting Questions Spice Referendum

Questions on troop withdrawals from the War in Vietnam, vote age and registration law changes and a proposed change in the property tax law highlight a series of referendum questions on next Tuesday's ballot.

The multiple choice question on Vietnam asks voters which of the following they prefer with reference to the future course of action by the U.S. in Vietnam:

A. Win a military victory.
B. Withdraw our armed forces in accordance with a planned schedule.
C. Withdraw all our armed forces immediately.

Forces in Massachusetts' antiwar movement are pushing for the third alternative, so-called Proposition "C" contending that it is the only genuine antiwar proposal on the ballot. They contend that the second proposition, "B", will be interpreted by the Nixon Administration as support for its stated policy.

The bill was proposed initially by Maurice A. Donahue, president of the Senate, as a kind of legislative sequel to a bill filed by the late state Rep. H. James Shea, designed to test the legality of the war. The Commonwealth has asked the U.S. Supreme Court to rule on that statute.

Question No. 3, a proposed amendment to the state Constitution which would reduce the minimum age for voting in a state election from 21 to 19, is also drawing considerable attention.

Only in Georgia and Kentucky can 18-year-olds vote. Alaska allows 19-year olds and Hawaii 20-year-olds to vote. All other states are 21.

A Federal law signed by President Nixon June 22 gives all 18-year-olds the right to vote, but it is not effective until Jan. 1, 1970. The Presidnt questioned the statute's Constitutionality when he signed it, and asked that it be quickly tested in the courts. Several suits have already been filed.

The proposed amendment was approved by the Legislature in joint session twice—on Oct. 9, 1967, when it passed 142-102, and on May 14, 1969, when it passed 222-49. Support for the proposal appears to be fairly widespread, particularly among those under 21, and there appears to be no organized opposition to it.

Another question, Question No. 2, proposes an amendment to the state Constitution which would abolish the requirement that in order to vote in a state election a person must have resided within the Commonwealth one year.

If amended, the Constitution would require only that a voter have resided six months in the town or district in which he claims a right to vote.

A ruling by a three-judge Federal Court panel last summer struck down a state statute requiring six months residency beyond the period of six months in a city or town to vote in a U.S. Congressional election.

The proposed amendment was approved by the Legislature in joint session twice. It was approved 237-0 on Oct. 9, 1967, and 262-4 on May 14, 1969, and appears to have minimal opposition.

Perhaps the most complex proposal is Question No. 1, which would make changes in the Commonwealth's real property taxation system.

A summary of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, contained in an informational phamphlet sent to every registered Massachusetts voter by the Secretary of State's office and required by law, reads:

"The proposed amendment to the Constitution authorizes the Legislature to classify real property according to uses, and authorizes the assessment, rating and taxation of real property at different rates in the different classes so established, but proportionately in the same class.

"The proposed amendment to the Constitution authorizes the Lesgislature to classify real property according to uses, and authorizes the assessment, rating and taxation of real property at different rates in the different classes so established, but proportionately in the same class.

"The amendment further authorizes the granting of reasonable exemptions and abatements."

The interpretation of the language of the question is a matter of dispute among proponents and opponents.

State Sen. James R. McIntyre (D-Quincy), also mayor of Quincy and the legislator who filed the bill proposing the change contends that "rigid Constitutional restrictions give local governments little latitude in assessment and collection practices," and that the governments need more flexibility in such practices.

McIntyre says such flexibility would result in decreasing property tax amounts for homeowners and increasing amounts for "income-producing properties" like business and industries.

But the language of the proposed amendment is "not clear" according to Lyman H. Ziegler, director of technical services for the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, which opposes the change.

"In the first place, it doesn't meet the real problem which is that everybody's property taxes are excessive," Ziegler says.

He contends that the "looseness" of the language in the proposal leaves little assurance that "the classification, if made, would be equitable," and suggests that the sole rationale of the proposal is merely "a political embrace of the homeowner."

Ziegler says that ample legislative machinery exists to except specified classes of taxpayers from inequitable rates.

Questions on local referenda are concerned primarily with the granting by municipalities of licenses for the sale of alcoholic beverages, or authorizations by various counties of pari-mutuel systems of betting on licensed horse races.

Weed Describes Basic Witchcraft

By KERRY KELLEY
and ELAINE JOHNSON Staff Reporters

The speaker stood silhouetted by the eerie light in the darkened dormitory basement. A crystal amulet swung slowly from a thin chain which he held in his hand. He was explaining the mysterious and misunderstood profession of witchcraft.

This is the atmosphere that Larry Weed sets at his talks that have been given this past week in two dorms on campus. He explains the basics of witchcraft, from the degrees a prospective witch earns to the different types of witchcraft practiced today.

Mr. Weed explained the three predominant forms of witchcraft as being white, black, and practicers of the black arts. The latter, he warned, are the most dangerous group, as they still practice canibalism and are extremely violent towards disbelievers.

The Black Mass, a particularly bloody ceremony, is performed by these Satan Worshippers. It usually consists of twelve people, and if a thirteenth person is present, it's the Devil.

Witches, Mr. Weed said, are basically the same as everyone else . . . they just believe differently. Most witches are either black or white, and are fortunately not concerned with the blood-sacrifices connected with the Black Arts.

Mr. Weed warned against witches who advertise their magical talents to earn money. The vast majority of these, he said, are fakes out to prey on the ignorant. One of the basic characteristics of being a witch is that you deny it at all times.

Ghoulash Falls Flat

By SHARON MILES
Staff Reviewer

At 7:40 p.m. last night in Mahar Auditorium the lights went out and somebody gave a faint put-on scream. And that was the high point of the Horror Flicks" sponsored by the Maroon Keys (and Maroon should be the color of their faces after that one).

Somehow, Boris Karloff is not as spooky a Frankenstein or Mummy when his film is edited into a five minute flick - in fact, he's no more ghoulish than Flash Gordon.

The horror of it all was paying 50 cents to see four five-minute segments of Frankenstein and his reluctant Bride, A Mummy (or so the title said), Dracula and Abbott & Costello, and an unshaven Lycanthrope (werewolf). Of course, if you went to see Bugs Bunny and The (Beep Beep) Roadrunner, you maybe got your money's worth.

Looking Forward To '72: The Soft Shoe Derby

WASHINGTON (AP) - Every day, at 8 a.m., Donald E. Nicoll strides off an elevator onto the 10th floor of a downdown office building, juts right and then left, and disappears for 12 hours behind the door of suite 1004, busiest back room in American politics.

While Edmund Sixtus Muskie busies himself up north stumping for re-election, it is Nicoll's singular, ongoing task to put the junior senator from Maine in the White House.

Not that the cheerful, bearded Nicoll runs the only encampment of its kind. On Maryland Ave. is the newly established "other office" of Sen. George S. McGovern. And while aides to coy, cautious and available Sen. Birch Bayh refuse to say whether he has one, they note that "We're not hurting for space." Which means he has one, or will have.

Such are the shadowy, quasi-anonymous outcroppings of the men who have emerged from the 1970 off yer campaign trail with enough public encouragement and political IOW's to commit themselves, at least privately to the quest for the Democratic Party's vacancy at the top.

Many other names get dropped in fanciful conversation over prospects for a White House turnover in 1972. Names such as Lindsay, Humphrey, Mondale, Jackson, Clark, Shriver, McCarthy. And, of course, Ted Kennedy, the cinch nominee until he drove off a bridge.

But so far only four men come close to having accomplished the self persuasion and crucial early footwork that marked the bids of Kennedy and Nixon. They are Muskie, McGovern, Bayh and hustling Sen. Harold Hughes of Iowa.

Each looks to the primaries more than a year away as the most important test of all, shirking notions of masterminding any sort of last minute coup at the convention.

The Campus Center Cafeteria will be closed on weekends beginning October 31. The Campus Center Coffee Shop and Hatch hours will remain the same. Weekend specials will be served from 11:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. in the Hatch.

UMass Gets Halloween Spirit

by LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Attention all ghosts, witches and goblins! The Halloween season at UMass is in full swing with lots of ghoulish fun in store for ghostly spirits hardy enough to brave them.

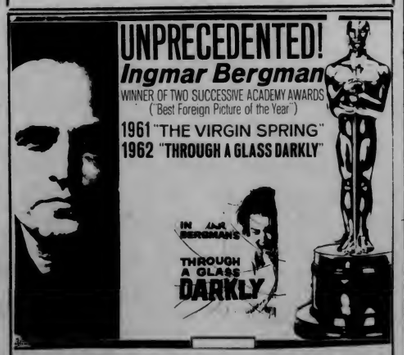
The season was given alively send off at a Halloween party held last night for school children and their parents in the Commonwealth Room. About 50 children attended the party sponsored by members of education department.

The spirits generated at that fest will be continued throughout the weekend as various groups and organizations hold masquerades, seances, horror movies and other activities designed to raise ghostly spirits.

Primary among these events and certain to be among the most ghastly and funfilled will be Orchard Hill Halloween Party. Designed to provide a variety of witch-like fun the party, sponsored by the Apple Corps will feature a Costume Ball complete with prizes, a speaker on Witchcraft and a horror flick. The highlight of Saturday's program will be a horror tunnel running between Field and Grayson. The tunnel will be filled with errie lighting effects and music designed to horrify even the heartiest soul.

Other organizations will be using the Halloween season as the opportunity to conduct campaigns for charitable causes. These include UNICEF which conducted its annual canvassing campaign on campus last night. The group will continue its canvass tonight and tomorrow. Also being conducted is a campaign to raise money for the sidney fund through the sale of Halloween candy.

One of the most unusal offerings this weekend will be sponsored by Free University. The Retinal Circus, a group of media artists who work with lightshows, media exhibits and their own version of "kidnap" theater will present "Sensory Overload" tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium. The pumpkins and local media freaks night's offerings will include and musicians as well as "Hot music, lights, films, slides, Stuff".



These are two of the fifty children who attended last night's Halloween Party held in the Commonwealth Room as part of this weekend's activities which will include parties, seances, talks on witchcraft and a horror tunnel designed to please and frighten. (MDC Photo by David Bernstein)

RAFI Formed To Project Israeli Image On Campus

by JOYCE KACOYANIS
Staff Reporter

RAFI, Regional Alliance for Israel, was recently formed by several students to combat alleged false images of Israel and Zionism.

RAFI president, James Michaelson commented to The Collegian, "the Regional Alliance for Israel was created to provide an honest and just understanding the Middle East conflict."

He explained that RAFI was founded on the beliefs that:

(1) Israel, as the expression of the Jewish People's right to national self-determination, must be allowed to exist.

(2) All peoples of the world have a right to self-determination and freedom from oppression.

(3) Progressive Zionism is the movement of national liberation of the Jewish people from assimilation, marginality, and oppression to a revitalized communal and cultural life; and especially, control of its national destiny.

"As human beings we abhor the various acts of terrorism perpetrated by the so-called "fedayeen" upon the Israeli and Palestinian peoples. We also condemn the destructive role played by outside powers in the Middle East and reject any form of imposed outside solution," Michaelson continued.

RAFI's activities, Michaelson explained, will be chiefly educational, but many of its activities will take place outside of classrooms and lecture halls.

The next meeting will be on Sunday, November 1, at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center. RAFI extends membership to all undergraduates.

Michaelson also added that included in the group's activities are speakers, information tables, cultural activites, demonstrations, and correspondences.

Student Panel To Interview Health Services Applicants

Last year under the sponsorship of the Student Health & Welfare Council, a student panel was formed to interview candidates for positions on the professional staff of the University Health Services.

Students participate in informal discussions with the applicants in order to estimate non-professional qualifications, such as ability to communicate with students and understanding of problems pertinent to college students.

This is an opportunity for students to have a direct voice in the selection of the professionals appointed to serve their health needs. This panel has continued to function, but additional members are needed.

Any student who wishes to be included on this Interview Panel should send his or her name, address, phone number and class schedule to Jane Zapka at the Health Services.

The Student Mobilization Committee welcomes all to help with the making of signs and banners for the Saturday Oct. 31 Peace demonstration on the Amherst Common. We will begin a 9 a.m. today in the Mobe Office (Plymouth Room S.U.) Join Us!

From long to longest

No matter how long or how short your eyelashes are, they can only improve with Maybelline Ultra Lash Mascara. Because Ultra Lash lengthens and thickens each lash with every stroke. It works with a special formula hidden deep inside the brush that comes out only when it strokes your lash.

Ultra Lash darkens and curls lashes. Separates them, too. No matting. No messy fibers. So why settle for long when you can have long, longer... longest lashes with Ultra Lash Mascara from Maybelline.

Indians To Present Music, Drama, Dance

The India Association will present India Night, a cultural program of music, dance and drama in the Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday evening November 1 at 7:00 p.m.

Indian music will be performed on Indian instruments, with an additional demonstration on Western instruments. Also in the program will be skits entitled "A Western Boy in India" and "An Indian Boy in the U.S." Free Indian refreshments are included in the $1.00 admission charge.

India Night is only one of a number of events organized by the India Association. It also presents debates, exhibitions of Indian movies, and special celebrations on Independence and Republic Days.

Open to all interested students, faculty and staff of any nationality, including U.S., the India Association has over 100 members.

There are some 60 Indian students enrolled at UMass, the largest number from any foreign country except the Republic of China.

The India Association adds a significant international dimension to the life of the University. Its members are interested sharing their views on contemporary topics and on the social-cultural aspects of Indian life with interested groups and individuals.

Supported by the Student Senate through the Office of International Programs, the Indian Association has obtained an Indian musical instrument, the Harmonium; it was purchased in India by an Indian student on behalf of the Association and brought to UMass for use in cultural events. Persons coming to India Night will see and hear this recent import.

APO Awards Tickets In Homecoming Raffle

A Homecoming ticket raffle sponsored by the UMass chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, national men's service fraternity, was concluded last night. The winning ticket was drawn from a barrel containing 2000 stubs. Winner, Bonnie Frazer, will receive two sets of tickets to each Homecoming event.

Proceeds of the raffle will be donated to "Git Go," an organization of UMass students and faculty who want to offer alternative environments to 7, 8 and 9 year old children living in the Riverview housing project in Springfield.

The brothers of Alpha Phi Omega wish to thank all those who participated in the raffle.

Dr. Hodges Glenn Chosen

New CCEBS Head Named

UMass has announced the appointment of Dr. Hodges Glenn as director of the CCEBS special educational opportunities program.

The announcement was made by Dr. R.W. Bromery, special assistant to the chancellor for student affairs and president of the CCEBS committee.

The committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, (CCEBS), is a faculty-administration group that founded the CCEBS special educational opportunities program three years ago and still continues to formulate operations policy for the CCEBS program and its director, Dr. Glenn.

Dr. Glenn holds a concurrent appointment as assistant professor of education. He comes to UMass from Pennsylvania State University where he was an assistant director of admissions for the university's Educational Opportunity Program. He also served as an admissions counselor and coordinator of a recruitment program for the disadvantaged at Pennsylvania State's 10 colleges and 20 campuses.

Dr. Glenn is a graduate of Florida A. and M. University. He holds master's degrees from Florida A. and M. and Pennsylvania State Universities and a Doctor of Education degree from Pennsylvania State. His research area is in the field of specialized educational problems of disadvantaged students.

Dr. Glenn's first concern in trying to operate the program under what he calls a "critical" financial situation. The CCEBS program is supported by state, foundation, federal, student government and other funds. Drastic cuts in the CCEBS budget request by the Governor's office and the General Court have produced a program deficit of approximately $450,000 for this academic year. The CCEBS committee is currently exploring several private and federal sources in order to raise funds to cover this deficit.

"It's a squeeze all around," according to the CCEBS director. "We're hoping we can at least finish out this year and fund the current student program." The program now totals approximately 520 freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors.

Another of the new director's concerns is helping CCEBS students who are having serious social adjustment problems. He has added a student affairs component to help students evolve a more relevant cultural and social environment on the Amherst campus. "This will help reduce the black students feeling of alienation in this large, predominantly white university campus," he explained.

In the academic area, a liaison person has been designated in each of the University's schools and colleges to work with CCEBS students, and a continuing monitoring system has been established for the tutoring program. Tutors consist of 60 UMass graduate students who teach half-time in the program.

DR. HODGES GLENN has been appointed the new director of the Collegiate Education Program of Black Students (CCEBS) special educational opportunities program.

For Whom The Polls Toll

Miss Wilcox told us not to bother any of the politicians who were passing out buttons and bumperstickers in the parking lot as we came in from recess. But I went over to this big fat lady anyway and came away wearing an Adlai Stevenson button on my shirt. Miss Wilcox took the button away from me and I had to stay after school for 20 minutes; I cried.

Elections were bad even in 1956, but at least at age six no one pressured you about being political, about working within the system, about helping the Democratic system survive by voting for a handfull of candidates who you barely know and never the less loathe.

It's drummed into your head from the time you can read. Vote; you duty as a citizen; vote; save the world; vote; you're an incomplete citizen if you don't.

The League of Women Voters, the D.A.R., the Young Republicans, the Young Democrats all shout the stupid cry. You're not patriotic if you don't vote.

This is ludicrous. It makes no sense to urge people to vote for candidates they dislike, for candidates in whom they don't believe, for candidates they don't know. It is insulting to be told for all of your life that for one to live under "American liberty" one must exercise his "duty to vote."

Tell a Panther that he must vote for a rich White man to insure his own liberty. Tell a student he must vote to preserve a political system he has come to hate. Tell an unemployed man with six children that he must vote to insure that his stake in the American Dream will remain safe.

When the every other year public conscience watchers argue that everyone must vote to preserve the American system they mean exactly what they say. The system they speak of is the system of Nixon and of Agnew and of Mitchell and of Laird. It is the system that depends on a "silent majority" of misled and uninformed to perpetuate a government of cold men, men who put themselves above the people they are supposed to represent.

So vote. Vote for the candidates you don't really like, for the candidates you don't know, for the candidates who are the "lesser of two evils." Do this and agree to let the Nixons and the Agnews and the Mitchells and the Lairds do what ever they wish.

Vote and forfeit your right to complain about the country, help to perpetuate a Government you dislike by voting for its politicians.

Callahan For D.A.

Local elections have the bad habit of always being won by the incumbent. It seems that people won't take the trouble of voting in a change because it's so easy to pull the same lever every year.

The trouble is that a responsive and hard-working local public servant can have a much greater effect on the people than statewide candidates who get most of the publicity.

So it has been with the local District Attorney office. Republicans have held the post since the office was created. There has never been a Democratic District Attorney for this district. And Republicans have got complacent in a job that can greatly influence community-police relations.

This year a Democratic candidate, John Callahan has run a strong campaign to upset this history of Republican D.A.'s And Callahan should have the support of the voters of the Amherst area.

Callahan is a young, eminently qualified candidate for the position, and has proposed several progressive measures for his office that could be of great influence in this community. One such proposal is to have the District Attorney's office be available to local police 24 hours a day for any question police might have. This would help eliminate incidents of false arrest, unlawful seizure, etc. that have plagued the area.

Callahan's opponent, incumbent Oscar Grife, has not been a notable performer during his two years of office. He has displayed the tired unleadership that his Republican predecessors have displayed.

The District Attorney's race is a race that all local voters will have definite effect upon, and more importantly, will be definitely effected by.

The election of John Callahan to District Attorney would be a favorable outcome for all area voters.

Student's Union

Last week a meeting was held to find out how many students were interested in a student employees union. Ten people showed up. This was due to either lack of notice or interest. This turnout is much to small, as fifty per cent of an employing unit is required for a quorum. Other factors which seemed to keep students from attending were:

1. fear of retribution on a part of employers
2. preconcieved notions of unions
3. feeling of futility in respect to unionizing
4. in the feeling that everything is all-right

Everything is not all-right!

There are wage differences where there shouldn't be, people can be fired with no cause given, employer-employee relations are based on an all power to bosses no power to employees situation, and pay checks are distributed every two weeks, maybe. Will the union solve any of these problems?

Any of these problems are open to contractual agreements. This does not mean highly rigid contracts as the agreements are relative to the special needs of the employees. There are many areas in which the needs of student employees different from other workers while some areas are the same. Part-time student employees should not be paid less than fulltime employees for the same work. This allows management to hire less fulltime workers and operate on higher profits. Yet this does not mean that students should have the rigid time schedules that fulltime employees have because in this respect students are in a different situation. This type of union activity does not leave one open to the wims of your boss. The state law of Mass. states expressly that no one may be fired or discriminated against for union organizing. To be fired while organizing one has to be found quilty (not the accused of) of gross misconduct or a felonly. According to the law one may also bring suit against an employer who results to harassments or threats as adeterrent.

We have been in consultation with a lawyer for sometime on this issue and as plans progressed I was hit by one very strong realization. Students are not children! The university is not an incubator, yet this is used as a rationalization for a plan of inaction. People, students, have to live and their status as students should not interfere with this process. Does it matter if you're twenty, thirty, or fifty when survival is in question. Yes, even students have the right to be human beings.

A meeting to discuss these issues will be held at six p.m. tonight (Thursday) in the counsil chambers of the student union.

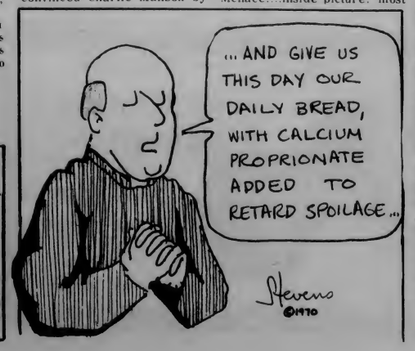
Question Five

Two referenda on the Massachusetts ballot are going to have nation-wide impact. One, Question 3, would lower the voting age to 19. The other, Question 5, is the Vietnam Referendum which gives the voter three options to vote his opinion on the war.

Question 3 should be voted yes. Simply, the voting age should be lowered. And really, it should be an obvious question.



Question 5 gives three options. Option A reads win a military victory; Option B, withdraw our forces in accordance with a planned schedule; and C, withdraw all our forces immediately.

The Vietnam war is an abomination, an insult to the sensibilities of the American people. It has lasted too long, has killed too many people, has ruined our economy, has destroyed the country of Vietnam and has divided the nation to a dangerously polerized crisis point. It must not go on anymore.

Vote Con Question 5 to withdraw all U.S. forces from Vietnam now.

Freedom I

And the infant of a thousand years cries out for help
Like a train speeding so quickly
You miss the scenery,
Yet know it's there
The sun reflects off the window blinding you at times
And you're cut off from the outside by the pane.
But you feel the train will reach a destination:
You don't know where.
You sit for a while wondering, shuffle restlessly in your seat and decide on really nothing.
The pain of sitting for so long hurts and makes the ride uncomfortable.
But when you try to get up you're pushed back by the inertia.
Time to open the window and jump to freedom.
The destination was death,
not Life.

Neo Ozymandias Returns

I once met a survivor
From a now nonexistent land,
Whose words were: Across the horizon
There stands the ruins of a country
That was at one time grand.
Comtless are the wreckages
That may be found
For every known institution
Has been leveled to the ground.
Of any civilization small evidence
Has come to appear:
For only wind swept wastes
Are to be found there.
Yet words scribbled on a wall
Perhaps tell it all:
"America--united we stand
And divided we fall."
Nothing else remains.
And this survivor told me
Not one person cares.
For it has been said that if You live like hell,
You only get there faster.
And even a country cannot escape
Forever the wrath of God;
Or so he told me.
However, he seemed mad
So I did not argue with him
And left.

New Hospital Key To UMass Medical School Future

WORCESTER - Massachusetts finally has its own state medical school, temporarily housed here in a half-remodeled tobacco warehouse cluttered with blueprints and swarming with more construction workers and faculty than students. But what kind of school will it be?

The quality of the UMass Medical School, like that of 19 other new and developing medical schools across the nation, rests with Washington. And there the omens are not good.

Despite the Administration's insistence that the doctor shortage must be wiped out before the nation embarks on a national health program, it could hardly be credited with going all out to help establish these 20 expensive but vital new schools.

Example: although $210 million in grants for medical education projects has been approved by the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, the Administration has budgeted only $90 million for this purpose. This works out to a mere $4.5 million for each new school, not even considering the expansion plans of virtually every existing institution.

But there is no such thing as medical education on a shoestring. The currently projected cost of the finished UMass school is a sobering illustration: $135 million.

However, Washington doesn't seem entirely to blame for the school's present predicament, which could result in the ending of 20-year hopes for a first class medical school with its own teaching hospital.

Informed observers agree that if state politicians, special commissions, university trustees, medical educators and governors had not collectively bungled countless opportunities for federal funds since the school was authorized in 1962, it would now be established and well on its way to graduating some sorely needed doctors.

The record since the school's beginnings contains years of public debate on whether more doctors were needed at all, where to put the school, who should design it, who should be dean, even how much to pay him. While such matters were consuming newsprint and time, the price tag of the medical center zoomed from $2.5 million in 1952 to $124 million in 1969. when Gov. Sargent, in the throes of a so-called taxpayers' revolt, narrowly missed deciding to abort the whole project.

Meanwhile, a dozen other states managed to launch new medical schools, including neighboring Connecticut. While all of them are weathering stormy fiscal seas,the Massachusetts school may be the one most gravely harmed by temporizing at a time when Vietnam was ransacking the Federal budget and construction costs were escalating 12 percent per year.

Just how does money translate into quality medical education? At stake in this case is not the construction of the $61 million medical school itself -- that is assured by prior committments of state and Federal funds -- but the $64 million teaching hospital, which depends on an already-approved but unfunded $16.5 million Federal grant. (Release of the state's share is contingent on Federal funding).

A university teaching hospital, with its laboratories, surgical amphitheaters and specialized equipment, interns and residents, academic atmosphere and flow of referral patients from other hospitals, is vital to the education of up-to-date physicians or surgeons.

"It's the primary teaching resource," says Dr. Lamar Soutter, the indefatigable dean of the school who has fought for its survival since he was appointed in 1963.

Adds the associate dean for academic affairs, Dr. Richard H. Saunders Jr "A teaching hospital is essential to the kind of program we're planning here. Without it, we'd be a different kind of institution, lacking a great deal of the quality and polish that we aspire to."

Dr. Richard A. McDonald, chairman of the school's pathology department, is more blunt. "If the hospital isn't built, I'll have to reevaluate my position here," admits the pipe-smoking pathologist. "There would be a danger of its becoming a second-class type of place."

He was echoed by several others on the 21 member faculty. Asked if he would consider leaving if the hospital were not built, Karl J. Hittleman, associate professor of biochemistry who came here from UCLA, replied:

"I would have to say yes. There's something very exciting about working in the total aura of a university medical center. And I think a teaching hospital is indispensable from the students' point of view too."

WORCESTER IN 1870-This was the way the University's Medical School sight looked a hundred years ago. Funds for the school's hospital are needed to complete the project.

But uncertainty over the hospital is already handicapping the fledgling school. It lacks a chairman for its department of medicine, certainly one of the key spots in any medical school faculty. The top candidate for the job has said, in effect, call me when you hear about the hospital.

Except for a chairman of surgery (Dr. H. Brownell Wheeler) the school has been unable to recruit any clinical faculty, as opposed to basic science faculty, and is filling this gap to some extent with "volunteer faculty" from the Worcester medical community.

Since the first two years of medical school are concerned mostly with learning basic medical sciences anyway -- although the school is trying to build some patient contact into the curriculum from the very beginning -- the current students are not likely to miss a teaching hospital acutely until their final two years.

The proposed hospital would be ready for at least partial use by 1973, and the school plans on jumping the class size from 16 to 100 in 1974.

The possibility of building strong affiliations with the four local community hospitals (Worcester City, Memorial, Hahnemann and St. Vincent's) and doing without a university hospital is a poor alternative, but it may be the only one if the money is withheld.

Among the problems:

- The primary committment of a community hospital is to the private doctors who practice there and their patients, not to the University's objective of turning out top-quality doctors and contributing to medical science.

This basic fact has implications for everything from the school's freedom to plan its hospital-based programs to the likely conflicts between the school and local professionals unaccustomed to the presence of interns and residents and fearful that some of their beds will be usurped for teaching purposes.

- The difficulty, already encountered, of recruiting good clinical faculty to work in community hospitals. Such top-notch faculty members are attracted by the opportunity to teach, do some research, practice some medicine and associate with academic-minded colleagues. It might be some time before UMass could offer such opportunities in an existing Worcester hospital.

Community hospitals draw only from the local population, while the proposed university hospital planned for the school's 128-acre site would draw only the most difficult patients from all of western Massachusetts and parts of surrounding states. Access to this type of patient is vital to both the teaching and research functions of the school.

The school would be hampered in its hopes to develop innovative programs for paramedical personnel without a hospital-laboratory of its own.

Everybody at the new school is aware of these and other difficulties likely to beset the institution unless a miracle happens in Washington. But the surprising thing is, nobody seems to be depressed about it.

In fact, if any school can overcome overwhelming problems by dint of sheer enthusiasm, UMass Medical certainly will. Most of this feeling derives from being unencumbered by the hoary traditions weighing on most medical schools.

"We're not bound by 'the way things have always been," said H. Maurice Goodman, who left Harvard Medical School's faculty to become chairman of UMass Medical's physiology Department student Leonard M. Finn of Newton, a Tufts graduate looking forward to the school's four-year community medicine program agrees:

"There's no inertia here to be fighting, as in institutions where the course has been laid out for five years in advance. And the faculty is very eager to try new things. We don't have to push them."

All the 16 students thrive on a faculty-student ratio that works out to 1.31 to 1. Richard V. Aghababian, a student from Newton who attended Harvard College, reports that his friends at Harvard Medical School envy his small classes.

The infectious mood of bouyancy around the school largely reflects its intimacy combined with a pioneer spirit. "They're all a great group, very close," said Mayre B. Coulter, a vivacious woman whose official title is registrar and whose duties range to mother-confessor and house painter.

"We're all joined in a common mess."

Buffy Comes Home

Homecoming 70: Rock, Folk, Satire

Traffic

TRAFFIC, the magical musical union of Steve Winwood, Jim Capaldi, and Chris Wood, is back and will be appearing at UMass Saturday, November 14 in the Saturday night Homecoming concert. They will be "getting it together" in the Cage at 6:30 and 10:30 p.m. Tickets for the concert are $3.75 and go on sale Monday at the Student Union ticket office.

David Frye

Buffy Sainte-Marie

Buffy Sainte-Marie's songs have been performed by the great names in pop, rock, folk, country, jazz, and even symphonic music. Her concerts have been described as "splendid and somehow mysterious." Buffy herself is a petite soft, and pretty girl who has been given the title "ambassador of peace and strength."

Born and raised in New England, Buffy Sainte-Marie graduated from UMass a philosophy major and "beatnik." Her homemade, shockingly truthful songs were performed in an area coffee house and later in New York City before recording and appearance offers started her professional singing career.

Says Buffy, "I don't write for any reason except that there's a song in my mind. I don't know where songs come from, but they end up in my dreams and at my fingertips like stray dogs and wild blueberries. They appear naked on my lips like kisses and that's the feeling with which I offer them to you."

Buffy Sainte-Marie will be performing in the Saturday night concerts of Homecoming weekend. Tickets go on sale Monday.

Is Nixon coming to UMass? Is LBJ coming to UMass? No, David Frye is coming to UMass November 14, and make no mistake about that.

Today, the name David Frye is synonomous with political caricature and mimicry. He is one of the most in-demand comedians in the nation and there is hardly a video variety show or late night panel program that has not had him as a guest.

His fame further increased recently with the release of Elektra Records' "I Am The President," an album containing original sketches of Frye performing as the President, Vice President, Humphrey, Johnson, David Susskind, Henry Fonda, and others.

David Frye will be appearing with Buffy Sainte-Marie and Traffic in two shows, 6:30 and 10:30 p.m. Saturday night of Homecoming weekend. Tickets are $3.75 and go on sale Monday.

Wilder Comic Saga To Satirize Men

Tim McDonough, a graduate student at UMass, has the lead role of George Antrobus in Mount Holyoke College's revival of the American classic, The Skin of Our Teeth.

The play, directed by Jim Cavanaugh, is running November 6, 7, 8 and 12, 13, 14, 15 at the Laboratory Theatre at Mount Holvoke College.

In The Skin of Our Teeth, Thornton Wilder, author of Our Town, examines mankind's progress in an expressionistic, satiric saga of that good old American family, the George Antrobuses, and their sexy maid Sabina, caught in the Ice Age, the Flood, an Atlantic City bathing beauty contest and the next (?) war. The play mixes elements of great comedy

Pianist Dwight Peltzer will be featured in the next Music Department Faculty Recital Series in Bowker Auditorium on Sunday evening, November 1st at 8:00 P.M. The program will include works by Charles Ives, Arthur Custer, Alban Berg and Beethoven.

Recital To Feature Piano And Soprano

Dwight Peltzer, pianist, and Marla Waterman Peltzer, soprano, will give a joint recital Sunday, Nov. 1 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. They will be assisted by Peter Tanner, percussion.

Mr. Peltzer is a member of the University music department faculty. Mrs. Peltzer is a music teacher in the Amherst Public School System.

He has performed with such groups as the Berlin Hochschule fuer Musik Chamber Orchestra, the Victoria Symphony, the San Francisco Symphony and the Vancouver Chamber Orchestra. Solo concerts have been given at the University of Minnesota, the University of Illinois, the San Francisco Conservatory, and UMass. He is presently the head of piano instruction at UMass.

The recital program will consist of Charles Ives' Three Page Sonata; Claudy Debussy's Fete Galantes; Alban Berg's Seven Early Songs; and Beethoven's Sonata No. 31 in A Flat Major, Opus 110." Mr. Peltzer will also perform Rhapsodality Brown for piano by Arthur Custer, a recent work written for Mr. Peltzer which he has recorded for the Serenus label.

The recital is open to the public without charge.

Fesano Ensemble Will Offer Two Baroque Music Programs

The second of this season's Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series will be two concerts by the Virtuosi di Roma under Maestro Renato Fasano.

The concerts, scheduled for Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 5 and Friday, Nov. 6, bring to the attention of Western Massachusetts audiences one of the world's most distinguished ensembles devoted to baroque repertoire.

Two entirely different programs will be offered. On Thursday, works by Albinoni, Corelli, Paisiello, Marcello and Vivaldi will be heard. On Friday, the ensemble will perform three Concerti Grossi, Opus 6 by Corelli and the complete Four Seasons by Antonio Vivaldi.

Maestro Fasano was born in Naples and completed his studies at the San Pietro Conservatory of Music. He is now the director of the Santa Cecelia Conservatory of Music in Rome.

Reserved tickets to the two programs by the Virtuosi di Roma are available through the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before each concert.

CANVASS AGAINST THE WAR

This fall the people of Massachusetts will be given the unprecedented opportunity to vote on the question of war in Southeast Asia. The University of Massachusetts Student Mobilization Committee (SMC) is working to get out as large a vote as possible for the choice "C", IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL, on the Vietnam war Referendum.
Nixon's cease fire hoax announcement makes this more important than ever.
The antiwar movement cannot do anything but continue to demand an immediate withdrawal. If you wish to join us in canvassing the Springfield community for immediate withdrawal, please come to the MOBE OFFICE (Plymouth Room S.U.) UMass Soccer's Brown, Alves & Matuszczak . . .

"They're The Bull Work Of The Team's Offensive Success

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

You name the sport and it has its standouts. Football focuses the center of attention on a flashy signal caller and his rambling backfield. Baseball portrays a blend of the hotshot hurler battling the determined slugger. And basketball extends its limelight to the sharpshooting guard or the towering center who dines beneath the bucket.

Virtually the same analogy can be applied for any collegiate sport going. Particular names are commonly associated with the success of a unit.

Soccer, which has greatly reduced its backseat status within the UMass athletic program in recent years, is one of those sports that doesn't revolve around the playmaking of one star performer. And whenever mention is made of the enviable campaign that Coach Peter Broaca's Redmen are pursuing, not one--but three players usually come to mind; namely Duane Brown, Lindo Alves and Rick Matuszczak.

While this trio of booters has been the framework of the UMass scoring punch thus far, there are other players who have contributed in different respects to the 5-1-1 mark which the squad currently boasts. As assistant skipper David Jekanowski puts it: "They're the bull work of the team's offensive success. These are the players that are in the action all the time, the ones that the fan notices the most. They can be compared to your quarterback and halfbacks of football."

Lindo Alves, a talented junior halfback, scored seven points a year ago while stashing away a first team birth on the All-Yankee Conference squad. He has already scored five goals in league competition this season.

The graduate from Ludlow High displayed an illustrious schoolboy career after captaining three sports as a senior. Alves established himself on the All-Western Massachusetts club for two years in both soccer and baseball.

After pointing out that his involvement with soccer began at age 11, Alves commented: "Soccer has been the trend in Ludlow ever since I could remember. You sort of have to play. With Ludlow being one of the leading soccer powers in the country there's no other way."

Team mates Augie Calheno, Dick McCarron, and Dave Ouellette are also from Ludlow, by the way.

Assistant Coach Jekanowski distinguishes Alves as the all-around performer. "He's a very skilled player who can dribble well, pass effectively, and carry the ball consistently. Lindo is quite proficient in these types of things. He's just an excellent soccer player."

Unlike one of those natural players who developed skill through years of experience, Duane Brown is a relative new comer who caught on fast. The senior veteran credits his high school coach for having introduced him to the game.

He excelled on the baseball diamond in his junior year at Teaneck High (New Jersey) where he earned All-State honors. It was here, however that his interests shifted to soccer. "It was one of the best things that ever happened to me", remarked Brown. "Having never played before, I discovered that I had the sufficient amount of skill to compete in soccer. Later I found out that it was going to be my sport."

Lindo Alves
An Excellent Player

Brown added a phenominal finish to a short high school stint by amassing an astronomical total of 25 goals to pace the Northern New Jersey Inter-Scholastic League the following fall.

"Duane, as opposed to Alves, doesn't have the great abilities but is more of an American style player, a more physical athlete. Being one of the all time leading scorers here at UMass, he works very hard to perfect his skills. He hasn't played soccer all his life but then again he's an all-around athlete," stated Jekanowski.

Brown led the Redmen in scoring during his first two years and seems a pretty safe bet to do it again--he's the top man in the Yankee Conference at the moment with seven goals.

Rick Matuszczak has held the post of co-captain for two campaigns and is perhaps the oldest veteran of the three. Matuszczak claims he's been kicking the heck out of a soccer ball since he was nine and said his attraction to the game was due to recreational work of a school committee man in Chicopee.

The Chicopee High grad lettered seven times, and as was Alves, an All-Western Massachusetts choice in both baseball and soccer. In fact Matuszczak and Alves occasionally fought against one another in Pioneer Valley League clashes.

Jekanowski compared Matuszczak to Brown in his style of game: "Rick is responsible for setting up the offense and helping out defensively. He's similar to Brown in that he's not a highly skilled performer, but a dedicated athlete and a real team leader. Being co-captain for two years is something in itself."

In reference to their immediate satisfaction from soccer and what the season holds in store for them, here are a few of the comments that the players themselves made.

Alves: "Soccer is a sport where you don't have to be gifted to play. You just fit in with everyone else and learn from playing with better ball players.

"What has attributed to our success so far is our confidence. We pull for each other. Some teams have individuals, we have a team."

Duane Brown
An All-Around Athlete

Brown: "I found out in soccer that you have a lot of freedom to do what you want in the realm of the game without being inhibited by restrictive devices. It's a fluid game which requires the coordination of the individual. It's a beautiful sport to play.

"I feel that, primarily because of the fact of experience and playing together coupled with a real good attitude, we are going to attain the most successful season in UMass soccer history."

Matuszczak: "I get a real kick out of facing a person bigger than myself and being able to beat him. This is a sport where size is irrelevant. When the ball is on the ground we're all equal.

"Indications to our future success stem from our ability to put the ball in the goal and the least number of defensive lapses we commit."

NEW YORK (AP)-The Baltimore Orioles were rewarded yesterday for blitzing the Cincinnati Reds in the World Series with winning shares of $18,215.78 per man-ironically just short of the record established by the New York Mets a year ago.

The Orioles awarded 31 full shares of the $18,215.78 prize money and 13 partial shares or cash awards. The Reds handed out 32 full shares of the losers' spoils of $13,687.59 per man plus 13 partial shares or cash awards.

The Orioles thus pulled down $122.40 less per man than the Mets did in beating Baltimore the previous year when a winning share was worth $18,338.18 under the new system that guarantees the winners at least $15,000.

Of the two teams in the Series, the Reds made probably the most generous single award by giving a full share to outfielder Ty Cline, who didn't join the club until June 15. The Cincinnati club also voted a one quarter share of $3,421.91 to batboy Mike Long.

The Orioles voted three quarter shares of $13,661.85 to two part time performers-relief pitcher Moe Drabowsky and infielder Bobby Grich. A one tenth share of $1,821.58 went to batboy Jay Mazzone.

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP)-Dr. C. Clyde Jones, chairman of the Kansas State University athletic council, said yesterday the school has "found no example of willful and deceitful violation" of recruiting rules "with the exception of one coach who is no longer with us."

The statement was made in connection with recent action of the Big Eight Conference and the National Collegiate Athletic Association under which Kansas State was placed on probation for three years in football.

BUENOS AIRES (AP)-Oscar Bonavena of Argentina promised yesterday "to leave Muhammed Ali worse than if he had accepted to go to Vietnam" in their heavyweight fight, tentatively planned for December.

"Jerry's not going to scare me as he did Quarry," Bonavena said. "With my strength and my warrior blood I'll leave him worse than if he had accepted to go to Vietnam."

Another week of trash. Yes, the Great One is beginning to go along with his sensuous cynics and believe that his rhymes might not be relics of the rosy rhetoric written in his Romantic dreams. Yet he, like the market economy and the Wednesday night staff, has his ups and downs. And suffice it to say, the pollyannic poet is an e.e.cummings compared to the pathetic prose composed by his caustic critics.

With all that behind us, we must go forward, or, as the Managing Editor likes to say, Forward must go.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Heavyweight boxer Jerry Quarry, who lost a fight with Muhammad Ali in Atlanta Monday night, was in another battle yesterday.

Johnny Flores, who claims he is still co-manager of the California fighter, said he has filed an action in the Fulton County Circuit Court in Georgia seeking to tie up Quarry's share of the live gate receipts.

Bed Adachi, Flores' attorney, said this amounted to $41,000. He added similar proceedings were under way in New York involving Quarry's cut in the closed circuit television revenue, reportedly more than $250,000.

Attorney Paul Caruso, legal adviser to Quarry and his father, co-manager Jack Quarry, has filed court action here seeking to break Flores' contract.

The dispute over the contract, which Flores maintains has 1-1/2 years remaining, may come up next at a hearing before the state Department of Professional and Vocational Standards, under which the California Athletic Commission operates.

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Time was when Billy Cannon was bad news to the Kansas City Chiefs. The situation will be different Sunday when the world champion Chiefs, their back to the wall even though Coach Hank Stram says he isn't throwing in the towel, tangle with the Oakland Raiders in an American Football Conference game.

Cannon, an Oakland star for seven years, will be wearing a Kansas City uniform. That could be bad news for his old mates.

Stram isn't saying how much Cannon, a tight end will play. He doesn't even say that Cannon will play at all. However, the aging Cannon seems the logical replacement for the injured Fred Arbanas. He knows Oakland like a book.

"I know the character and the personality of most of them," Cannon says. "They know everything about me, too."

The Heisman Trophy winner from Louisiana State has played very little since he was cut loose by the Raiders and signed by the Chiefs less than a month ago. He made a brief appearance after Arbanas was injured in last Sunday's 27-16 loss to Dallas and caught one pass for 11 yards.

Sentiment will have nothing to do with it Sunday when Cannon runs up against the team with which he spent the best years of his football life.

"I have a lot of friends on the Oakland team," Cannon says, "but they won't be my friends Sunday. They know me well enough to be certain I'll be putting out 100 per cent. They might even play me a little tougher. They know that I'll get them once in a while."

Frosh Booters Host Springfield In Finale

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

In their final contest of the 1970 season, the little Redman soccer squad will host Springfield today, at 2:00. Springfield College, which as always boasted excellent varsity and freshmen teams, will be as tough as any opponents that the freshmen have faced this year.

A question mark that still remains for the frosh deals with their injured forward, Mike Nugent. Nugent injured two games ago, saw a brief 10 minutes of action in the Trinity game, and his return today could make a substantial difference for the freshman offense.

Another question mark will be the team's ability to bounce back after such a heartbreaking loss. The 2-1 defeat at the hands of Trinity was highly significant in that it ended the Redman's chances for an undefeated season.

For the last two years freshman soccer teams at UMass have lost only two games, losing once last year, and once this season. The single loss last season was to Springfield, the freshmen's opposition today, and a win would be extremely satisfying inview of that fact.

The frosh have had a great deal of success on their home field, winning 3-2, over WPI, and 5-2 over UConn. The ease with which victory was obtained in both of those contests is not likely to be characteristics of today's game. undefeated season.

Ruggers At Home

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

The UMass Rugby Club hosts the Boston Rugby Club's Pilgrams tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The ruggers will be placing their winning season, (3-2), on the line tomorrow, having suffered two straight defeats. For the first time in three weeks they are at full strength. Practicing hard all week, coach Dale Toohey feels the ruggers should play their finest match of the season thus far.

The Pilgrams are an experienced squad of mostly foreign players, but coach Toohey feels, "If we can play to our potential, we should win."

The match should be an interesting one, and could conceivably be a turning point in the Redmen's fortunes which at the beginning of the season looked like New England Championship material.

For a look at three of the top booters on the UMass soccer team, see page 17.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo enjoys taking a ramble. But the stakes have to be high — and there must be a sense of drama. Natives of this sign will make concessions on minor matters. However, where principles are involved, Leo stands ready to do battle. On aggressive side, Leo takes unnecessary chances and champions causes which are lost.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Excellent for concluding investment plans. Mate or partner now is ready to cooperate. Key is to be aware of fine points. Read between the lines.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Favorable publicity, reactions to your efforts — these are emphasized. Make some changes. But permit one close to you to share spotlight. Legal decision is apt to favor you.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Improvement indicated in health, working conditions, general welfare. Diplomacy gains much for you. Surprise compliment, gift could be a highlight.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Good lunar aspect indicates fun and games — combined with profit. Means you can successfully mix business and pleasure. Personal magnetism attracts one who can aid your cause.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Property you own or control may show price increase. Measure values. Plan ahead. Don't be rushed into decisions. Time is on your side. Stick with experience. Trust older individual.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Some apparently are confused by directions, instructions. Be patient with individual who may be late for appointment. Accent on association with relatives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Favorable for paying, collecting debts. Where money is concerned, state position in clear, forthright manner. No playing games. Original approach brings best results.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Hunch is correct. Follow through; keep up momentum. Cycle remains high; circumstances favor your special efforts. Judgment about persons, situations is correct. Go to it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 & Dec. 21): You find out what you need. You are provided with ways, means of obtaining it. Travel may be on agenda. Be versatile. Don't feel there is only one way to reach goal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You get what you want if willing to apply natural abilities. Means don't delegate responsibility. Be where you are supposed to be — and be prompt. Message becomes increasingly clear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Friends seem able to guide you along constructive path. But final decision is left in your hands. Key is to open communication lines. Then proceed at accelerated pace.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): If expansive in view, you go with tide. If petty, envious, you block own progress. Make peace within family. Be diplomatic in manner which displays your maturity. Then you gain.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you surprise many with unusual sense of humor. Many say it took years for them to really know you. Secret is you don't always know yourself. You will be on more solid ground in upcoming months.

Gridders Seek To Quench Thirst For Victory

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Comforted by the fact that UMass hasn't lost to the University of Vermont in a football game since 1954, the 1970 edition of Redman gridders take a hike up the pike to face a 0-6 Vermont football squad in Burlington with hopes of achieving a new lease on life.

Well, it's right there in print in UMass' "1970 Football Facts" brochure. The Redmen have beaten the Catamounts 11 straight times since last losing to them, 27-25 in 1954. Most of the scores have been lopsided, last year it was 48-7 in favor of the Redmen and, during the Redmen's 1968 fiasco they were able to salvage two victories, one of which came at the expense of the Catamounts, 49-0.

UMass' present record is 1-4-1, no indication of the Redmen's real prowess as a football squad, but more or less the end result of countless mistakes and a few extremely bad breaks. However, putting all of this aside, this football team must win tomorrow for the sheer sake of proving to itself that it is a good football team.

After losing four games in a row, the Redmen came up with a tie last weekend, 21-21, against favored UConn. This tilt witnessed the long-awaited arrival of the UMass offense, which answered the call with 21 points and 342 total yards, thanks a lot to the quarterbacking of Ken Hughes.

Now the guys in red should be able to win a few ballgames, starting tomorrow in Burlington and continuing the next two weekends at Holy Cross and at home against the University of New Hampshire. UMass plays Boston College the following week.

"I say, in all sincerity, that we've turned the corner," head Redman football coach Vic Fusia offered yesterday. He pointed out, as he had a week ago, that one of the chief UMass problems was the matter of pressing too much, the case of overtrying and falling all over its own good efforts.

He projected, "I hope that Vermont will solve the pressing matter."

Looking back a bit at that Connecticut game, Fusia conjectured, "Saturday was the first time since we donned our uniforms on August 28 that we looked like the football team I thought we were."

Fusia represents the outlook of this team when he talks about this Vermont game. He wants them to win it so badly. Another group of persons and he might not feel as strongly, but this squad has played with a special spirit since the beginning of pre-season practice, since August 28. Their spirit deserves its reward and, against the winless Catamounts, the reward should be there.

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES - Pat Scavone, the Redmen's fine offensive halfback and as dependable a UMass football performer as there ever has been, is suffering through a spell of mediocre games . . . He's played well in these games, but the old sparkle has been missing . . . Fusia was asked about Scavone . . . His first reaction concerned the matter of overtrying again, "I think he's been pressing so god . . . darn much." He continued, "He's been a fine team player. He's been hustling. He's been improving his blocking to help the team." . . . But, as for his actual game, a game that includes running and catching the ball with remarkable dependability, the head coach couldn't put his finger on the problem, "I can't answer it," but clarified, "I can't answer it for others either." . . . Fusia added one last suggestion, "He's got that feel for running the ball, but when you press, you lose this valuable thing." . . . One might remember that Scavone, as a sophomore, paced the Redmen to that 49-0 win over Vermont, one of only two UMass victories for the season . . . it was his second varsity start and he made the most of it at Burlington, rambling 55 yards for one touchdown, one yard for another. . . He wound up with 156 yards rushing for the afternoon, on 14 carries . . . Hopefully, No. 20 can do it again tomorrow . . . For the game, UMass will start the same personnel on defense . . . On offense, the line will have Dave Levine at center, Bob Pena and Jim Queeney at guards and Bob Donlin and Clarence Brooks at tackles . . . The ends will be John Hulecki and Steve Shubert . . . At QB will be Hughes; his backfield will comprise either Dick Cummings or Dick Heavey at fullback while one halfback will be Mark Russell . . . the other will be Scavone.

X-Countrymen Chase Yankee Conference Title Tomorrow

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Kingston, Rhode Island, the home of the URI Rams, is the setting tomorrow for the Yankee Conference cross country championship. Race time is set for 11 a.m. over this relatively flat and very fast 4.7 mile URI course.

For the first time in four years the UMass Redmen will be entering this championship as the pre-race favorites on the strength of their current 5-2-1 record and the excellence that the team has shown so far this year against the very best opposition that New England has had to offer.

In the three previous conference championships UMass has placed second on all three occasions to arch rival UConn by scores of 44-53 in 1967, 27-33 in 1968, and 27-29 last year. Over the past four years the Redmen have also had three individual champions and they will be out to make it four out of five tomorrow.

As far as the challengers to the Redmen shape up, the University of New Hampshire appears to be the front running challenger on the strength of an 11-1 record to date and a very fine team time split of 45 seconds in its last outing against M.I.T. Tom Dowling is the top Wildcat harrier and will be one of the top challengers for the individual title.

Vermont shapes up as the probable third place finisher. The Catamounts should pose no threat to the Redmen, but they do have a fine individual performer in Peter Bissett who finished second earlier this year in a tri-meet between UMass, URI, and UVM.

Maine comes into tomorrow's race with what appears to be a formidable 10-2 record, however, its calibre of opponents have been well below that that the Redmen have run up against. The outstanding Black Bear runner is Carl Warner. Maine should finish no better than fourth.

Then comes the three time defending champions from UConn. This year the Huskies were hit by the graduation of their four top runners from last year and haven't been able to put it together this season. Captain John Cody is the individual threat for the Huskies, but after him the ranks are pretty lean.

The host team Rhode Island is winless in seven meets and will have to put up its best effort to escape the cellar. Tom Grundy and Tom Bissett are the top two Ram runners and should give the leaders a battle with this being their home course.

Doug O'Connell

And now the favorites, the UMass Redmen. Coming off of their best team time split of the season against Holy Cross the Redmen are in top shape for tomorrow's meet. The weather has been real good this week and it has allowed the team to get in many hours of good hard practice.

As noted in the beginning the URI course is mostly flat and very fast. It's a speed course. This is not the type course that the Redmen prefer to run on as they are such a powerful distance team preferring tough hilly courses such as their home course behind Wolfe.

But this should be no hindrance to the team as it already ran the course earlier in the year and soundly defeated URI and Vermont in a tri-meet.

Ron Wayne will be out to capture the individual title that he won two years ago as a sophomore. He holds the record for this course of 25:55 that he set in the tri-meet earlier in the season. With good weather conditions tomorrow he'll be out to improve on this time.

Coach Ken O'Brien is looking for the continued good performances of seniors Larry Paulson and Leo Duart tomorrow. These two have been pictures of consistency throughout the season and should finish up with the leaders in the final results.

Sophomores Tom Fusman and Tom Swain have recovered pretty much so from their bout with the flu and should be up for good performances tomorrow.

Freshman Doug O'Connell and sophomore Rick Barry round out the seven man Redman attack for this meet. O'Connell has performed well in his two varsity performances this year and Barry has been recovering from illness and will be ready to go tomorrow.

With a line up like this it's no wonder that the Redmen are the favorites and with an on paper performance they will carry home the YanCon cross country title tomorrow.

Booters Ready To Get Back Winning Habit Vs. Vermont

Three teams moved into a tie for first place in the Yankee Conference soccer race, but much will be riding on this weekend's action when UMass travels to Vermont, Saturday, Oct. 31.

A UMass win would assure the Redmen of at least a tie for the crown. Connecticut would have to defeat Rhode Island and New Hampshire would have to upset the Redmen for the YanCon deadlock to occur.

Moving in for a tie with UMass (2-0-1) is upstart Maine (2-2-1) and Connecticut (2-1-1), while Vermont (0-1-3) with three conference ties, moved into fourth place.

For the third straight week, Maine's Manny Osode has been named to the weekly All-Star squad, as he registered three goals and one assist in two games last week. Against Vermont (2-2 tie), Osode scored both goals, including the tying goal midway in the fourth quarter. He also had an assist and one goal in the 2-0 win over Colby. In both games last week, Osode had a hand in every goal scored.

The other two selections are UMass' goalie, Bill Leary, who shutout Tufts, 5-0 and New Hampshire's standout defenseman, Henry Brealey. Leary recorded his third straight shutout and lowered his goals-against-average to 0.6. Brealey was the heart of the defense that led the Wildcats to two overtime wins against St. Anselm's and Plymouth State, both 3-2. Brealey broke up several key offensive drives by St. Anselm's and Plymouth State during the overtime sessions.

Honorable mention went UMass' Duane Brown (Teaneck, N.J.), who had two goals against Tufts and was outstanding on defense for the undefeated Redmen.

Parking Garage Popularity Climbing Upward

Despite doing a dissappointing business so far, the Campus Center Parking Garage is not to be judged a failure.

"We really haven't given it a chance," said Donald Witkoski, director of the facility. He says that the garage opened on October 11, over three months behind schedule, and that October 19 was the first day of operation with a full staff.

Although a walk through the garage seems to reveal mostly empty spaces, "the trend is definately upward," Mr. Witkoski said. During a five day period in October, the garage handled 1200 cars, with the daily totals increasing throughout the week.

When asked why response to the garage has been relatively slow so far, Mr. Witkoski again cited the newness of the facility, a lack of publicity on the garage's rates, and the fact that many people are not familiar with the roads leading to it.

Directional signs recently put up pointing the way to the garage, an expanded advertising program, the onset of bad weather, and most of all, time, are expected to show an increase in the garage's popularity, roads

Campus Judiciary System Explained To Area Heads

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

"The campus judiciary system is 10% punishment and 90% prevention" Randy Dahl, coordinator of all student judiciary at UMass told a gathering of Northeast area heads of residence and their student senators last night.

The group gathereed with Dahl to consider how the student judiciaries deal with security offenses.

Present house judiciaries are ineffective, said Dahl, because they tend to enforce specific regulations of each house.

Dahl, who was appointed by the Student Senate, and his committee, made up of 4 students, 2 faculty members and the Student Senator Legal Counselor are aiming their study of security offenses and punishments at the Board of Trustees. They hope to recommend a new proposal by the middle of next semester that will cover not only students, but faculty, and staff in academic and non-academic affairs.

The chief element in student judiciary until now, said Dahl, was participation. His new proposal, in a tentative planning stage right now, does not count so heavily on the students.

It will offer alternatives to civil court action, Dahl said, where the present system fails to.

Since jeopardy and suspension are the only real weapons judiciaries can wield at this time, he said that many minor offensed escape official attention because the repercussions of the courts can have lasting effects and students hesitate to take this step

Settling outside of court, or removing a disruptive student from the dorm does not work as effectively as the heads of residence believe, Dahl suggested. Informal controls and fines are not the way to deal with offenders, he stated, nor are notations on records.

"Outside of the University, offenders must deal with the law," declared Dahl.

He suggested that within the University community crimes should be punished accordingly.

Jack Richardson, head of residence in Northeast, protested that students don't want to send their contemporaries to jail. He added that in the new proposal there would be an excessive amount of paperwork and judges would have no sense of how individuals function in the life of the dormitory.

Dahl countered the attacks saying that the controls of current house judiciaries have not prevented security offenses. They are arms of the Senate, in any case, he added. They were created to enforce regualtions recognized by the Senate, and have little authority in civil matters.

The separate house judiciaries might try test cases of their own systems in punishment Dahl said, but the Senate would probably not uphold them

Chancellor's Coffee Hour

Chancellor Tippo will hold his weekly noontime coffee hour today in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. It will last until 2 p.m.

The Chancellor's open discussions provide an opportunity for any member of the University community, and especially students, to raise questions about general campus issues, seek answers to particular questions, or to hear first-hand what the principal administrative officers are thinking and planning

The practice of the regular open meetings with free coffee available to all, originated last year and is credited with allowing for greater two-way campus communication on issued affecting the entire University.

All students with particular matters to discuss, as well as those interested in just listening, are cordially in vited to today's discussion.

"Focus" Provides Election Analysis

Tonight at 10 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" will offer a preview of Tuesday's elections, will special emphasis being devoted to coverage of selected races in Massachusetts.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski will present an in-depth analysis of the U.S. Senate race in Massachusetts with similar attention paid to the state's gubernatorial contest.

Some coverage will also be provided concerning the race for State Representative in the First Franklin District, in which UMass senior F. James Gensheimer is the Democratic Party's nominee.

Commentary on other political races, such as the contests for U.S. Senate in New York and Tennessee, will be provided if time permits.

All registered voters are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM on the dial.

"Black Solidarity Day" Features Cartey, Thelwell

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"Black Solidarity Day" will be observed today with a five-college sponsored teach-in on the general topic of "The Struggle for Liberation: Black Students" and Black students" starting at 10:00 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and highlighted by internationally famous Dr. Wilfred Cartey who will speak on "Black Culture and Black Consciousness: The Road to Unity" at 3:00 p.m.

The teach-in, as parc of national "Black Studies Day" celebrations across the country, will also feature Michael Thelwell, Head of the UMass W.E.B. DuBois Black Studies Department, who will speak in the morning, after the introduction by a UMass undergraduate, on the subject of how Black Studies programs relate to struggles faced by the Black community.

After Thelwell's address, there will be a break for lunch with the teach-in workshops beginning at approximately 1:00 p.m. Discussions will concern the fate of the 5-College Black Studies programs, the concept of black education, and black students and their fuctions within the community. After Dr. Cartey finishes his speech resolutions of the conference will be voiced.

"The purpose of the gathering" said Thelwell, "is much more than symbolic. There is a glaring need for the black community of the University to come together and really evaluate their presence at the University. These are crucial times for black people and unless we can move towards our goals and collectively develop strategies and an agendum of priorities within which to operate, then our experience here will be of questionable value to the majority of us."

The organizers of the five-college teach-in described the teach-in as "a serious working day for black people. This will not be simply another rap session. We are going to discuss problems affecting the community and we are going to be testing out several proposals for new programs in the five college area which will add significantly to the value of the educational experience of black people in the valley."

The organizers hope that "a greater co-hesiveness and sense of purpose" will result from todays teach-in."

Schedule Of Day's Activities

10:00 a.m.-Introduction by UMass undergraduate to the days events and address by Michael Thelwell, head of UMass Black Studies in the Student Union Ballroom.

1:00 p.m.-Workshop discussions. (location and discussion leaders to be announced during the day.

3:00 p.m.-(approx.)-Address by Dr. Wilfred Cartey in Student Union Ballroom on "Black Culture and Consciousness: The Road to Unity."

The resolutions of the day will be heard after Dr. Cartey's address.

Dr. Wilfred Cartey, A Biography

Today's teach-in in the Student Union Ballroom will feature Trinidad-born Dr. Wilfred Cartey, professor of Comparative Literature as City College in New York and an associate at Columbia University.

Cartey is not only widely published but has also repeatedly participated in the development of the programs and ideas that directly relate to the international liberation struggles of Africans and peoples of African descent.

Among Dr. Cartey's more recent publications are The African Reader; a two volume study of African history, culture, and politics done in collaboration with Martin Kilson of Harvard University, and Whispers From a Continent; an exploration into the works of contemporary Black African Writers. Whispers From a Continent has been hailed in some quarters as "The Bible on African Literature." Dr. Cartey has also written extensively on West Indian, Carribean, and Afro-American culture and literature.

Along with these publications Dr. Cartey has also brought him into publishing and broadcasting lectures on such topics as Revolution, Race, the Poetry of Blackness, and Third world Writing.

He has also taped TVshows that were broadcast nationwide in 1964 on African religion" and "African Culture and Folklore."

Along with these contributions, Wilfred Cartey has served as a consultant to Southern Black colleges on curriculum development and to Head Start and Upward Bound.

Weekend Rally Concerned With Fighting Repression

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

An SMC rally held Saturday on the Amherst Common drew about 300 people who heard end-the-war and stop-repression speeches by speakers from Kent State, Amherst, and Boston.

The rally was preceded by a march from the Student Union terrace, through Southwest and on into the center of Amherst. The march picked up few people on the way, and as it moved through the center of town, a grizzled old man in a green pick-up truck drove by in the opposite direction and turned his thumb down on the marchers.

Rita Rubin, a student from Kent State, gave her account of the incidents las May 4 and claimed, "What happened was that we were tear-gassed and then murdered."

According to her, the repression in Kent is becoming very severe and that, "You can't call a pig a pig..You can't make barnyard sounds at a policeman." She said that the townspeople in Kent are trying to make sure that students can't do anything but that the most repressive thing they've done is to indict the Kent 25.

William Arthrell, one of the Kent 25, said, "There's a real question of how fair the Grand Jury was." He claimed that the indictments were invalid because they weren't handed down by his peers but by Kent businessmen and professional people." He said, "We're getting stronger. We're becoming a threat to the Establishment so they're getting repressive."

Arthrell was indicted for second-degree rioting or tumultous conduct, and claimed, "I think Kent is being singled out as an example....The best way we can fight repression is by sticking together."

Reverend Jeffrey Campbell of the Amherst Unitarian Church spoke after Arthrell and said that he had "sort of a Rip Van Winkle feeling" because he was related to anti-war movements in the late 1930's. He said that back then everyone was horrified to learn that war is a basic part of American society and he maintained, "Any steps taken to stop war will alter the basic society into which you were born."

According to Rev. Campbell, "We are now in the early stages of the third American Revolution..As the incident at Kent shows, we are openly turning against our young."

Rounding out the list of speakers were Elana Montiero from Female Liberation in Boston, and George Nees, from the United Farm Workers.

As it has in the past, cold weather plagued this rally and the crowd dwindled rapidly after the first few speakers.

Indian Culture Presented

By WILLIAM LONGRIDGE
Staff Reporter

A cultural program of music, dance, and drama was presented last night to a crowd of approximately 750 people by the India Association under the supervision of President R. Patnaik, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The intent of the program stated president Patnaik, "is to give American Students a wider appreciation of Indian culture, as well as moving beyond the stereotyped image of India as a land of maharajahs, poverty, and Indira Gandhi." This aim was accomplished, by the skit entitled "East is East and West is West". This skit, directed by Lawrence Frates and narrated by Khalid Mirza, pointed out the false image and attempted to correct it through the medium of satire.

Featured vocalists of the evening were Patricia Behenna, an English girl, singing a romantic Indian song; and Mrs. Chakravarti, an experienced classical vocalist in Hindustan music, who rendered two short pieces: one light classical and one orthodox selection.

Also presented, was an exhibition of Indian fashion which gave particular attention to the Indian Sari. This exhibition, narrated and arranged by Kukula Bam, ranged from the traditional floor length sari of the narrator to the "flipster" sari demonstrated by Nilusha Manji. "This particular model," stated Miss Bam, "has caused many traffic accidents at crowded intersections in India."

Demonstrating true East-West harmony, an experimental Indian rhythm was performed employing Indian and Western instruments. In this piece, the Western instruments seemed to transmit the high pitched Indian tones while the Sitar and Tabla, classical Indian instruments blended to produce harmony.

In conclusion, President Patnaik extended his warm thanks to the large crowd, whose size, Patnaik stated "was larger than he had expected." His conclusion was that he was encouraged by the large turnout and very grateful for the interest shown in the program. The India Association plans an even larger presentation next semester consisting entirely of Indian Music.

Nixon, O'Brien Seek Votes During Halftime TV Bids

NEW YORK (AP) - President Nixon and National Democratic Chairman Larry O'Brien, in final hour campaigning for congressional candidates, shared network television air time between halves of a professional football game yesterday to boost their parties' candidates.

Democratic Sen. Edmund Muskie, meanwhile, said he had asked the three major television networks for free air time Monday night "to respond to the Republican tactics of fear and division" which he said threaten to tear the country apart.

Also, spokesman at Columbia Broadcasting System said the Republican National Committee was buying a prime time slot, 9 to 9:30 p.m. EST, Monday night for political campaigning, and apparently was hoping to split the time and the cost with the Democrats.

There was no indication the Democrats would agree, the spokesman said.

All three networks had no comment immediately on Muskie's request for free time, the senator's aides said.

Nixon, on the halftime television spot, again concentrated on the appeal to elect congressmen "who will work with the President."

Touching on his record in crime control, the economy and Vietnam, he said, "We have made progress...but not enough. I need the help of the Congress, more help than I have had."

Nixon's message was taped in Washington on Tuesday, prior to his encounter with egg throwing demonstrators in San Jose, Calif., on Thursday.

He said of demonstrators: "....the violent few are not the majority of young Americans, and they are not going to be the leaders of the future. I am proud of the great majority of our young Americans today."

O'Brien, whose spot followed the President's, said Democratic candidates "are acquitting themselves extremely well, in my judgment, in this election," but he added, "there is one aspect of this campaign that deeply disturbs me.

"There are those who have been traveling the nation suggesting that somehow we condone violence, condone extremism, do not support law and order with justice."

Referring to the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, he said, "We know violence; we know extremism; we've experienced it; we've lived with it, and we abhor it."

An aide to Muskie said the free time on the major networks was sought "in the public interest." He said Muskie was backed in the move by "concerned Democrats" who included former New York Gov. W. Averell Harriman and John D. Rockefeller IV, West Virginia's secretary of state.

Nixon Reaction Rapped

CINCINNATI (AP) - Joseph Rhodes Jr., youngest member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, said yesterday that President Nixon has "deliberately ignored our real problems" and has "sought to play on our fears and hatred for his own political gains."

Speaking before 250 members of the Cincinnati branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for Jackson State "did not die because of campus unrest." He said the "Mississippi lawmen fired a 400 round volley into the girls' dorm basically because of the racial hatred that has characterized lawmen in the South and increasingly across the nation."

He also charged that the special Ohio grand jury, which investigated the killing of four Kent State University students last May 4, has made a "fundamental assault on the very system of justice of this country with its kangaroo court indictments of the victims of the Kent State tragedy."

The Commission on Campus Unrest warned in its report that the "issue of campus unrest was a nonissue," Rhodes explained. He said the report was "totally and irresponsibly ignored" by the Nixon administration. The grand jury indicted 25 persons in connection with disturbances at Kent State but exonerated National Guardsmen who fired at students.

"This president," said Rhodes in his speech, "has clearly written off the black community, and therefore I urge you, the American people, now to write him and his candidates off on Tuesday."

Ads Repudiated By GOP Candidates

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two Republican senatorial candidates have repudiated a series of newspapers advertisements linking their opponents and six other Democratic candidates to crime and violence, the Fair Campaign Practices Committee said yesterday.

Samuel Archibald, executive director of the private, nonpartisan organization, said he received telegrams from Nelson Gross of New Jersey and Andrew Carter of New Mexico.

Gross said, "Neither I nor any member of my campaign staff had any knowledge of the ad...prior to its publication. We in no way participated in its preparation nor did we approve its insertion."

Carter said he subscribes to the fair campaign practices code which condemns distortion of a candidate's record or views and that he repudiates "any activities on my part which do distort."

Archibald said the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee had lodged a protest against the ads run in at least 61 papers, and paid for by the Committee for Responsible Congress headed by Republican National Committeeman Carl L. Shipley of the District of Columbia.

Sen. Joseph Montoya, D N.M., had lodged a separate protest against his GOP challenger, Archibald said, and the Fair Campaign Practices Committee determined that Carter's answer was arepudiation of the ad.

Democrats said the quotations were taken out of context and National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien accused the Republican party of conducting a "desperate last minute smear campaign."

Britain May Resume S. Africa Arms Sale

LONDON(AP) - Political insiders say Prime Minister Edward Heath soon will end the six year old British ban on weapons sales to South Africa.

Any such action seems certain to rock and maybe wreck the Commonwealth, whose 29 member states embrace 800 million people of all colors and creeds.

Commonwealth leaders are due to meet in Singapore in mid January. By then the British decision most likely will have been taken. And if it is in South Africa's favor the big question will be whether the Commonwealth will survive in its present form. Right now it is a free association of like minded states sharing the common experience of having been led to independence by the British.

Rarely in Commonwealth history has a single issue generated so much heat and bitterness.

There are far more nonwhite states and people in the Commonwealth than white ones.

As things seems to be going, Heath's government is determined to confirm the intention it proclaimed last July-to provide South Africa with limited categories of maritime weapons like frigates in order to help secure the South Atlantic and Indian Ocean sea lanes.

Three African presidents-Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, Milton Obote of Uganda and Julius Nyerere of Tanzania-believe they have a moral commitment from Prime Minister Indira Gandhi that India will be alongside them if they feel they have to quit the Commonwealth.

If India goes it would be difficult in an Asian context for Pakistan and Ceylon to stay.

The departure of these states would spell the end of the Commonwealth as an effective or credible international system.

Jordanian Ceasefire Lifted By Government

(AP) Jordan's government lifted yesterday a night curfew in Amman that has been in force since the outbreak of the 11 day civil war on Sept. 17. The University of Jordan reopened and lesser schools were ordered to reopen next Saturday.

At the same time Jordanian army patrols were reported seen along the Israeli Jordanian cease fire line for the first time since the Middle East war of 1967. The return of the patrols was seen in Israel as a sign that the Jordanian army was taking measures to keep Palestinian guerrillas out.

The guerrillas had used the area before the Jordanian civil war as a launching point for attacks inside Israel.

The easing of the restrictions was one of the first administrative steps taken by the new government of Prime Minister Wasfi Tell who was appointed by King Hussein last week.

Tell said he is determined to see the peace agreements implemented and observed by both sides.

Word of the resumption of the Jordanian patrols along the cease fire line came from witnesses on the Israeli occupied west bank of the Jordan River.

Among developments elsewhere, Pope Paul VI appealed for an extension of the Middle East cease fire beyond its expiration date Thursday.

CAMPAIGN CLIMAX

? ? Describe National Senate Races

The demonic partisanship of the Nixon Administration campaigning has made many of the 35 senate races impossible to predict. The rhetoric of Nixon-Agnew has caused some states to swing Republican but this may be compensated by anti-Nixon feelings in other states.

Voter apathy is evident in some states further clouding the already cloudy election picture.

The President and Vice-President have embarked on an unprecedented campaign swing by an incumbent administration in hopes of shifting the senate Democrat margin of 57-43 into a Republican majority. Of the 35 seats up for grabs tomorrow, 25 are in the hands of Democrats while 10 are held by the GOP.

Democrats seem assured of holding nine seats: Muskie in Maine, Kennedy in Massachusetts, Hart of Michigan, Stennis of Mississippi, Pastore of Rhode Island, Jackson of Washington, Byrd of West Virginia, Proxmire of Wisconsin and Mansfield of Montana.

Republicans seemed definitely in control of three seats held by incumbents, Fong of Hawaii, Scott of Pennsylvania and Stevens of Alaska.

The President chose 22 states to campaign in and the 22 races are rated tossups. They are listed below, with the exception of New England races previewed elsewhere on the page.

NEW YORK-The race of the year. Conservative Party candidate James Buckley would vote for GOP control of the Senate. He is the Nixon-Agnew choice. Democratic Rep. Richard Ottinger is running close with Buckley for whom Agnew spoke at a private fund-raising luncheon in October. Incumbent Sen. Charles E. Goodell, the Republican nominee, may run third.

NORTH DAKOTA-Nixon's protege, Thomas Kleppe, a Republican Congressman, may be leading Democratic incumbent, Quentin Burdick. Nixon and Agnew were here.

OHIO-Rep. Robert Taft, Jr., the Republican, may be only slightly ahead of Democratic businessman Howard Metzenbaum. Nixon has been here to push the social issues, too.

TENNESSEE-Republican enemy No. 1, Sen. Albert Gore, has closed a large gap held by Rep. William E. Brock 3d. The " adical liberal" tag was placed on Gore early and often and both the President and Vice President dropped by. Brock still the favorite.

TEXAS-Very close between two conservatives, Rep. George Bush, perhaps the candidate who is most directly a Nixon product in this year's election, and Lloyd M. Bentsen Jr., who has Lyndon B. Johnson's blessing. Nixon and Agnew have come here for Bush.

UTAH-Another Nixon pupil, Rep. Laurence J. Burton, looks strong against Democratic incumbent Frank E. Moss. Very close with Nixon due yesterday.

VIRGINIA-The favorite is Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr., who is running as an independent but probably would vote for Democratic control rather than turn on the committee chairmen who were his father's friends, Ray L. Garland, the Republican candidate, has been ignored by the White House. He and Democrat George Rawlings are said to be behind Byrd by a good margin.

WYOMING-Sen. Gale McGee appears to have withstood an early Agnew visit and will prevail over Rep. John S. Wold, a Nixon-inspired candidate.

ARIZONA-Republican Sen. Paul J. Fannin considered holding a surprisingly thin edge over moderate Democrat Sam Grossman. Both Nixon and Agnew have campaigned here.

CALIFORNIA - Democratic U.S. Rep. John V. Tunney said to be narrowly leading Republican Sen. George Murphy. Murphy's age (68) and a recent conflict-of-interest charge are major issues. Nixon and Agnew have come to help.

FLORIDA-State Sen. Lawton Chiles, a Democrat, is leading U.S. Rep. William Cramer on the strength of a campaign on foot from top to bottom of the sunshine state. Nixon and Agnew have both come to try to stop "Walkin' Lawton". Cramer is a Nixon-picked candidate.

ILLINOIS-The "radical liberall" strategy has been tried here perhaps more than any other state. But its target, Democrat Adlai Stevenson 3d, appears comfortably ahead of Sen. Ralph Tyler Smith despite Nixon and Agnew visits.

INDIANA-Another battleground for the "radical" and social issues, U.S. Rep. Richard Roudebush, the GOP candidate, is leading Sen. Vance Hartke. Nixon and Agnew have both appeared. Nixon urged Roudebush into the race.

MARYLAND-Very close between Sen. Joseph Tydings, the Democrat, and U.S. Rep. J. Glenn Beall who is another candidate launched from the West Wing of the White House. Tydings is considered "radical liberal' and Nixon and Agnew have come into Maryland to emphasize the charge.

MINNESOTA-This state would barely rate mention were it not for the fact that President Nixon came here last week to try to cut down the wide lead enjoyed by his 1968 opponent, Hubert H. Humphrey, over U.S. Rep. Clark MacGregor.

MISSOURI-Sen. Stuart Symington is getting the race of his life after three terms but is considered almost safe. Nixon came here to help state Atty. Gen. John C. Danforth, the GOP candidate.

NEBRASKA-Former Democratic Gov. Frank Morrison has caused some stirring against incumbent Roman Hruska. This, and the fact that it's a 1972 primary state, attracted Nixon here last week. Hruska considered still strong.

V.P. Spiro Agnew
He Has Spoken

NEW JERSEY-Democratic Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr., is beating Republican Nelson Cross despite Nixon's visit at mid-month.

NEVADA-Reno D.A. William Raggio has run a tough law-and-order campaign against incumbent Howard Cannon who may hold a slight lead. Raggio was urged to run by Nixon who was scheduled to be in Nevada yesterday. Agnew came in September.

NEW MEXICO-Democrat Joseph M. Montoya was not called a "radical liberal" during an Agnew visit but the Senator's Republican opponent, Anderson Carter, has about called him equivalent. Nixon was due here yesterday.

Duffey, Muskie Closely Watched In N.E.

Three New England states will share the national spotlight tomorrow with three significant senate contests in Vermont, Connecticut and Maine. And New Hampshire will vote in agubernatorialrace that is an idealogical matchup of liberal-conserative.

In Vermont, incumbent Senator Winston Prouty appears to have a narrow lead over former Democratic Governor Phillip Hoff, in a vicious campaign fight that has featured personal slurs and visits from the Nixon-Agnew campaign express.

Prouty is a moderat conservative on most issues while Hoff is a liberal. The former governor has been hampered by a Democratic party interparty split that has been reported to have been healed. Hoff has been aided however by a massive democratic voter registeration drive in Vermont and a large amount of aid from Labor.

Edmund Muskie
Seeks Big Win

Winston Prouty
Holds Slight Lead

A big issue in the campaign was a Republican fund raising banquet. At the banquet, which was held for Prouty, the GOP state chairman made a slurring referrance to Hoff's well-Publicized drinking problems. Hoff, days later, admitted that he had drinking problems in the past but has cured the problem completely.

At the same banquet self-appointed social critic cartoonist Al Capp, said that Hoff was the person when Governor who brought "those rapist and criminals from New York", in reference to Hoff's institution of the Headstart program to Vermont. Republicans suffered from the quote.

It would seem that Prouty must remain the favorite in staid old Vermont but Hoff has pulled upsets before as is shown by his past election to Governor in the solidly Republican state.

Connecticut's senate race is being billed as the test case for the nation. It pits liberal, former McCarthy aid and national chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action, Reverend Joseph Duffey against Republican conservative Lowell Weicker, a hand-picked Nixon candidate and the independent candidacy of incumbent Democrat Thomas Dodd.

Both Agnew and Nixon have made Connecticut a major project in their campaign plans. Duffey has run an issue-oriented, youthful organization, that won the Connecticut democratic primary in an upset. He seems to be trailing Weicker, however, by a very slight margin.

The presence of Dodd may hold the key. The longtime senator was damaged greatly by his personal financial scandals of a year ago, and is given little chance to win. However, his votes may either help or hurt Duffey in Duffey's underdog bid to gain the Connecticut senate seat.

In Maine, the question is not who but how much. Democratic senator Edmund Muskie faces certain re-election over his Republican opponent Truman Bishop. However, Muskie is running a vigourous campaign to try and pile up a sizeable majority and boost his chances of for the 1972 Democratic Presidential nomination.

The Maine campaign was heated up this past weekend when an advertisement appeared in most state newspapers, linking Muskie to radicals and extremists. The ad was paid for by the Republicans. The ad had a boomerang effect on the voters and probably helped Muskie.

In New Hampshire, the stubborn third party candidacy of defeated primary principal Mildren Thompson seems to assure the re-election of liberal Republican Walter Peterson. Peterson defeated Thompson in the GOP primary.

Thompson's refusal to leave the race, has split conservative votes between himself and Democrat Roger Crowley to probably assure Peterson of his re-election.

The Balance

Throughout recent years, volumes have been written concerning the massive dilemmas facing the populace of the United States. Race, the Vietnam war, pollution, the military-industrial complex and the workability of the American political process have all become "relevant" issues to every American citizen, not differentiating between ethnic backgrounds, religious, professions or even sexes. The discussion, of these topics and it may be euphemistic, to call it that, has caused greater splits in the American society than this country has faced in most of our lifetimes. But everyone knows that.

Everyone knows that college students are now more radical than ever before. Everyone knows that the U.S. government has become more repressive than it has been since the Joe McCarthy era. Everyone knows that the political system is dying under the alias of true representative democracy. What, then, is the problem?

Just open your eyes and realize the way it's always been.

Yet these difficulties still exist. Apparently, everyone doesn't know. There is a wide divergence of opinion on whether or not this country is truly as decrepid as many of the more liberal thinkers of our time would have us believe. Many people in the outside world and, indeed, a few of our closer neighbors, still cling to the belief that the tenets of the founding fathers of freedom, liberty and democracy, are still existant and are for all intents and purposes, functioning as well as they have in any time in our history.

It might be easy to label this group as the "silent majority" or some other sillly pseudonym which casts this section of the country as a rhetorical figment rather than the real individual believers that it actually is. They are there.

Just open your mind and you will find the way it's always been.

Obviously, an enormous gap exists between the two sides, if one must truly employ the battlefield analogy. There, then, is the cause of the conflict. Different groups with different attitudes have come to different conclusions concerning the mode of life which is, if we must call it something, correct for the American people.

It seems an unlikely problem to solve easily. Indeed, there appears to be no observer on the scene at this time who can effectively bridge the gap and act as the cohesive unit which is demanded. Thus, the individuals involved, and that is all of us, must grab the reigns of leadership for themselves.

To some extent this has occured. Unfortunately, those who have moved to the forefront are those who are least able to lead effectively. They are the radical elements on both sides who seem more intent on winning the war than solving the problem. They have the right idea but the wrong direction.

The other alternative is understanding. Instead of turning our backs and running for cover, we might advance under the white flag of willingness. Advance not to conquer or castigate, but advance to comprehend.

It is imperative that we understand what is being said. We must understand what others think and why. People all have different backgrounds which foster different beliefs. One small step towards compassion might produce a giant leap towards compromise.

Just open your heart and that's a start.

The Human Condition

Women.

I remember Stephanian, my old biology teacher saying, "When you close your eyes, a horse's hide is like a woman's skin."

Nik used to say that men got energy from women. But he also said that "with women, if you are wrong, you must be right." When you turn out the lights, he would add, all women are the same.

Lenny Bruce spoke of men as dogs. A man could be wrapped in bandages, his arms and legs mutilated, his brain, half-conscious, but he would still make a play for that nurse. A woman would never do that. It's not in their constitution to go to bed with just anyone. So Lenny said.

"Women are irrational, that's all there is to that. Their heads are full of cotten, hay, and rags. They're nothing but exasperating, irritating, vacillating, calculating, maddening, and infuriating hags!" Henry Higgins was having his woman-troubles.

Brel, the French chansonnier, tells of the man who was waiting for Madelaine (who he loved so much). It was getting cold on that street corner, and Madelaine (who he loved so much), la catin, never showed up.

Let's say you like a woman, and you want to get to know her better. Ultimately, you say, it's the bed. But let's say that this time, you want more than just a bed relationship. Problem. How do you get through to the woman?

1) Develop a tactile approach or a "head" approach towards her.

2) Put on your impressing act. Never forget for a minute that you're Joe Cool (or if she's a freak, Fritz the Cat).

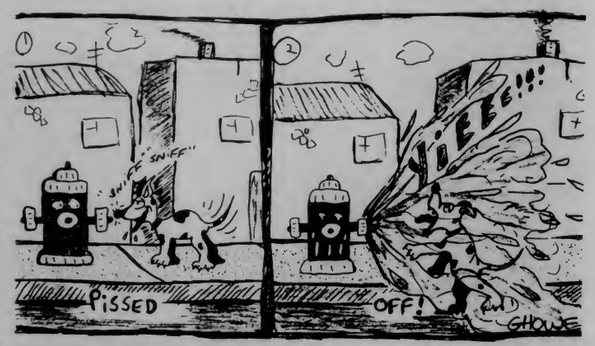
3) Act sincere.

The woman, if she is normal, will immediately initiate counter-offensive number 479(CO 479). She'll ignore you.

Then, it's CO 23. She'll talk about her other boy friends--"what-a-relationship-Bob-and-I-had"--and she'll leave you thoroughly confused as to whether Bob was a friend who was a boy, or whether Bob was a boyfriend, or whether Bob still is THE boyfriend. And you know, that whatever he was, he just has got to be an ass.

At last, CO23B--"encourage-the-new-victim". The woman will stare at you, blink at you, twitch at you, and put on a show so great that not even true lovers get to see it. But the show is in vain as she frustrates you with CO 781.

The woman will reiterate what a great time the gang had last Monday, and wasn't it too bad that you weren't in when she called to invite you.



Now, the bitch puts you on the defensive. She will ask you questions that you would really like to talk to her about--but alas, she has asked the questions with a minimum of thirty people in the adjacent vicinities.

As a coup-de-grace, she will mobilize CO345. She will never be seen in your company without her girlfriend.

You, destroyed and a fool, give up, because from the beginning, you haven't been given one ounce of honest feedback. The woman exults, for she has thwarted your invasions of her virginity, feelings, and humanness.

But after it's all over, you brood.

"How does it feel to be a woman?" my friend Dan wrote. "Maybe it's just like being a man."

Down The Drain

WASHINGTON--One of the big pollution problems seems to be the use of phosphates in detergents. It is believed that the dumping of phosphates in streams and rivers makes algae grow, which kills fish and other good things.

All the soap companies are working on new detergents that will eliminate phosphates and other harmful chemicals. The problem is "What does the housewife do with the detergent she already has in the closet?"

Burton Schellenbach of Mentor, Ohio, told me his wife has six $5-boxes of a brand-name detergent and, since she is ecology-minded, she tried to get rid of them immediately. But she couldn't. She was informed that if she and her neighbors dumped their unwanted boxes down the drain at the same time, Lake Erie would develop a frothy head two feet high.

Schellenbach thought to bury the boxes in the back yard, but a chemist friend warned him if he did this, the detergents would eventually drain and destroy all the well-water in Ohio.

An attempt to destroy the boxes by fire failed, as detergents just don't burn.

Schellenbach, in desperation, contacted the Nerve Gas Disposal Unit of the Army, who refused to help him. They said they had enough trouble getting rid of their nerve gas, and besides, if they dumped detergents off a ship, as they did with nerve gas, they'd only pollute the ocean.

A call to the detergent company, asking them if they would take Mrs. Schellenbach's boxes off her hands, was met with a cold response. "Once the detergent is purchased," the vice president in charge of phosphates said, "it is no longer our problem."

Every night when Schellenbach came home, his wife asked, "Did you find a way to get rid of it?"

Schellenbach always shook his head. "We could dump it in a junked car lot."

"But," his wife protested, "we wouldn't be doing anything for ecology that way. The stuff would still get in the streams. We have to dispose of it without destroying our environment."

After thinking about it for days, and being haunted by the detergent boxes in his closet at night, Schellenbach finally came up with a plan. It was so wild that he was afraid to mention it, even to his wife. But he called me in Washington because he needed me to get through to the right people.

"Listen," he said, "I have this idea how the United States can get rid of all its phosphate detergents and also strike a blow for the free world."

"Great, Schellenbach. Tell me what it is."

"We get an old cargo surplus ship and outfit it with a lot of phony spy gear on top and inside. In the holds, we load phosphate detergents. It may take some cramming, but we could do it.

"Then we name the ship the 'Pueblo II' and send it into the coastal waters off North Korea."

"I think I'm following you," I said.

"The North Koreans grab the ship and suddenly they're stuck with all our phosphate detergents."

"It might work," I told him excitedly. "Each month we could send a spy ship until all the phosphate detergents in the United States are gone."

"The North Koreans would be up to their ears in detergent," Schellenbach said, "and we would be the first country to destroy another with cleanliness."

The Movement's Moving On

To the Editor:

We attended the rally last Friday in support of the Kent State 25, because we believe these students are victims of political repression. We, and some of our organizations, were listed as supporters of the rally. We would like to state some of the reservations we have about that rally, and indicate some directions we would like our peace movement at UMass to take.

The Student Mobilization Committee leaflet calling for the rally made no mention whatsoever of the chief victims of repression in this country, the black people! We object to that. Recently, Black Panthers have been framed, jailed, and murdered, and Professor Angela Davis has been fired, framed on a murder charge, and put in solitary confinement. This is not to mention the day to day repression of black people which goes unnoticed because it is so common.

The Chicago people have been attacked, the labor movement has been attacked. But now that the repression has begun to hit white students, a big rally was called. And apparently, the Mobe is still unable to see that their repression and the repression of the black community are part of the same thing, for the stated purpose of this rally was solely "to defend the Kent State 25."

This approach can only reinforce cynicism about the student movement, especially among black students. It can only give validity to the charge that white students were outraged at the Kent State massacre and were almost indifferent to the murder of black students at Jackson State.

There were several arguments made in favor of the Mobe position. One was that they would talk to students at the rally about the repression of black people, but would leave it out of the publicity in order to insure a larger audience. But a rally isn't just a series of speeches, it is a public demonstration. And the Mobe publicity said that this demonstration was in support of white student victims of the government. Period. We can talk about anything we want once we get there--day care centers, black people, women, taxes--but the purpose of the demonstration is still as stated. What can the black people and the rest of the world conclude from a student movement that demonstrates in support of white people and not in support of black?

Mobe maintains that it's position promotes unity in the peace movement. We say that, on the contrary, it is splitting the movement and splitting it along color lines. They say that to drag the issue of racist repression into the issue of repression against the peace movement would be to lose those white students who oppose the latter but not the former. That shows a singular lack of concern over losing the black students by calling for a demonstration to support only the white victims of repression.

The peace movement can't afford to do that. The most valuable, most strengthening alliance that the peace movement could make is the alliance with the black people of this country. The reawakening of America after the 1950's began with the black movement. All our progressive movements have their roots in the struggle of the black people, and our fate will rise or fall with theirs. If the black people are crushed, we will not be able to avoid annihilation. White students who defend the civil liberties of the Kent State 25 and who do not defend the black community are tying a noose for the peace movement. The warmakers use racism to weaken us.

We support white students in their fight against repression, but we consider it very important that the student movement defend black victims of repression with equal vigor.

Another View

To the Editor:

I am glad to see that someone finally has taken a stand against the radicals on campus. I am in complete agreement with Mark Montague. As he says, it is not the Army which makes foreign policy. It is the fact the State Department and the President, with the aid of advisors, who make foreign policy. The Defense Department only takes orders from the Commander in Chief, currently Richard Nixon. If students really feel a need to demonstrate against foreign policy, then why not picket the State Department or use their constitutional powers to elect a new president.

Having worked in Army personnel (OPO) for three years, I can assure you that the Army balances its sources of officers so that the input totals are in accordance with public laws: the Officer Grade Limitation Act and other laws enacted by congress. The Army has many sources of officers: OCS, ROTC, Direct Appointments, Recall to Active Duty, the Military Academy and Battlefield Commissions. The Army has only to increase any one of these inputs to bring the total input to the same number if some source is reduced. Even complete elimination of ROTC from all schools would not hurt the Army for any length of time, since there are enough people in the Reserves and people who believe in the forgotten principles of patriotism and allegiance to country to keep the Army supplied with officers as long as we have an Army.

An Open Letter to the Community at Large:

My esteemed colleague, Professor Emerson, rightly castigates Buildings and Grounds for the out-dated and misleading signs which dot the landscape. But things aren't as bad as he caaims; they're worse. Not only is Psychology alleged to be in Tobin Hall (on the sign at Entry 5), which, the observant will note is still being built, but a sign directing the public to Linguistics, which is alive and well on the eighth floor of Thompson Hall, does not exist anywhere on the campus. I brought this lacuna to the attention of the appropriate official in July, 1969, and was informed that the process of change took at least six months. My own untutored opinion is that with sufficient energy and talent the whole mess could be straightened out in the Biblical six days. Linguistics may indeed by Nowhere, but I kind of hate to leave that decision to B & G.

To the Editor:

My "cousins" the Arabs just told me that armed struggle was the solution for the Palestinian today, and that the struggle would continue until the Israelis gave up defending themselves. So much for your genocide against Israel; you put it on a long term, high cost program.

I propose something different. If the Palestinian "liberator" terrorists really want to be the vanguard of the revolution, let the revolution be of peace and non-violence.

Revolution is not a bad word. It is a change that is rapid, profound, and also structural, in which people assume a maximum responsibility. Let the change be one of construction, not destruction. Organize, work everywhere, educate, and become noticeable to the conscience of the world. There will be many difficult moments, and you may feel overwhelmed. But if you work well among men, they will grow. You shall triumph by your work.

To what should your revolution be directed? Consider social equality, decent housing, food, medicine, clothing, education, and jobs. Consider organizing and electing a representative government. But more importantly for you, you want that strip of land your father lived on. If it is more important than the revolution, I suggest you redefine "oppression" and "liberation". If it is part of the revolution, then out of non-violent action you will ultimately succeed. I heartily thank you for saying that the Jews who are left in Palestine after the "liberation" will have full rights, but different than the Arabs. Such a policy is pursued today in South Africa; the Black people have "full rights, but different," and so I call your program today apartheid and racist. Have you ever thought that the Jews might even join you in a real revolution of liberation?

One last thought, don't wait for someone to give it to you on a platter. Seize the time, seize non-violence, seize peace now!

Guns A No No

To the Editor:

Loathe as I am to employ your column for regular clarification of issues where I feel that my position is misrepresented, I feel I must correct the impression left by the article on the Senate debate published in the October 29 COLLEGIAN.

The reporter suggests that I advised the Senate "that the firearms for these pacific (sic) groups could legally be permitted back on the campus."

There were two distinct issues under consideration at the time. One involved the return of devices that looked like conventional firearms but which had been sufficiently emasculated so that they are absolutely unable to ejaculate "a shot, bullet or pellet" within the contemplation of Massachusetts General Laws chapter 269 Section 10. The other involved the return of functional firearms.

In the first instance I advised the Senate that due to the impotency of the glorified "clubs" the statutory prohibition specifically did not apply. In the second instance I advised that only if the Board of Trustees or President Wood (and not Chancellor Tippo) authorized the return of such functional weapons then they might reappear on campus. This legal opinion was based on a cursory examination of statutory material on the Senate floor.

As far as the cited statute is concerned it may be construed as saying that the intention of the bill under consideration by the Senate was an appropriate subject for legislation which, if enacted, might be implemented if other conditions were subsequently met and over which the Senate has no control. Absent such conditions firearms are absolutely not legally on campus as the articla suggested.

Rip Off!

To the Editor:

...I demand, with my increased student activity fee ($18.), the present administration immediately hire an effective security system, WHY NOT STUDENTS (??), to protect my, yours, and our property !!!!!

The other night, eight laughing people, (assumedly students), walked calmly thru the basement level of the Waffle casually ripping off three cushions from one of the couches. -- Not a word was said, nor an eyebrow raised as they all sauntered out the nearest ELEVATOR EXIT!!!! - That's cool. Sure! The beat goes on and the sparsely furnished Waffle looks worse than it ever did.

I suppose someone will continue to complain, big shit!--DO something!! What would your first reactions be, if one of you walked into someone's apartment and found a purple, or brown, cushion on the floor? Personally? A bum rush. Why not give the Waffle a chance? Use it, without abusing it! (Is it possible)? And, finally, hire the people of the University, STUDENTS, to protect your property!!

Wednesday night I went over to the Hampshire Dining Commons to eat what I thought would be a HALF—WAY DECENT DINNER. I thought the chicken was alright but after several fork fulls of salad I found a half squashed worm in the salad. When I took the salad to the manager all he did was to confirm the fact that the worm was a worm. We pay enough for the food around here and the least we expect is to have food that is edible (we know it is edible to the worms and they do not pay for the food). If one worm got through into a salad, how many others have been mashed and eaten by unsuspecting students?.....We We do not pay for the "extra meat".

Faculty Plans Conference On Undergraduate Education

Last February many University faculty members met for a day at the Hotel Northampton to discuss undergraduate education. Another faculty conference has been planned for Wednesday, November 11, an official state holiday, on the theme "Creating A More Satisfying Teaching-Learning Environment." This fall's conference will include an address by University President Robert Wood and numerous discussion groups, all to be held in the Campus Center.

This year a limited number of students will be able to participate in the conference. All reservations should be made by contacting the United Christian Foundation offices, 319 Hampshire House, 5-2789. Registration deadline is November 6. Phosphate Debate

Tonight Dr. Warren Litske will moderate a discussion of "Phosphates as Pollutants of Water," with Dr. Robert C. Black, Research Director of the Soap and Detergent Association, as the featured speaker.

Dr. Black will present the soap manufactures' view of the effects of phosphates on the environment. He will discuss recent research, which seems to indicate that phosphates are not as harmful as has been thought, while other speakers will discuss phosphates less kindly.

If you are interested in a balanced presentation of the phosphate problem, please attend. The discussion will be held in Room 168 of the Campus Center, at 8:00 p.m.

Cuban Presentation At Tonight's Forum

The Militant Forum, a weekly socialist educational series sponsored by YSA will present a lecture/discussion tonight on Cuba: "The Cuban Revolution and the Nation's Consequent Progress". Stuart Singer will be lecturing from his own experiences in Cuba, and explaining the socialist's point of view of the country's recent history.

Stuart Singer was one of a delegation of thirteen socialists who went to Cuba in 1968, to witness first-handedly what is taking place in that country. Cuba has been a focal point for socialists and students as an immediate and real example of a nation responding to the needs of its people.

For those interested in obtaining further information on Cuba and literature concerning aspects of socialism, literature will be on sale by YSA at the forum.

The forum will take place in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union at 8:00 tonight. Coffee will be served.

Home EC Honor Society To Initiate New Members

Alpha Pi Chapter of Omicron Nu will hold initiation ceremonies on Wednesday, November 4 at 7:30 p.m. in the Conference room at Skinner Hall. Senior women to be initiated are: Kathryn Cornell, Mary Alice Herman, Patricia Jones, Geraldine King, Barbara McKinley, Mary Mason, Martha Rudy and Bettie Sarver.

Following the ceremony there will be a reception, at which Dr. Helen Mitchell, Dean Emeritus of the School of Home Economics will speak on "Home Sciences in Oriental Countries".

Omicron Nu is the National Home Economics Honor Society which recognizes scholarship, leadership, and research in the field of Home Economics. Members are elected in their junior or senior year, on the basis of scholarship, from the top 10% of their class.

Alpha Pi Chapter recently held election of officers for the 1970-71 academic year. The new officers are: President Edna Neuwirth; Vice President protem/-Treasurer-Bonnie Kuzmicki; Editor pro tem/Secretary-Bobbe Hart, all members of the Class of 1971.

P.E. Registration

General Physical Education Activity Registration for Second Quarter will take place today and tomorrow in Boyden Main Gym from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Students who have finished one or three quarters of their requirements are urged to sign up for an activity in order to complete a semester credit.

Correction

Last Thursday night's children's Halloween party was sponsored by the Program Council, not persons from the Education Department as reported in Friday's MDC.

Hollywood Cashes In . . .

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

In 1968 James Kunen was a sophomore at Columbia University. That spring he helped close it down and kept a diary which was later published in a funny, insightful book called "The Strawberry Statement." It sold a few copies. Meanwhile THE GRADUATE led the Hollywood studios to believe that youth was where the money was. EASY RIDER convinced them and MGM bought the film rights to Mr. Kunen's diary.

Hollywood had to make a commercial product, so they decided to move the college from Columbia to a smaller, San Francisco school. The logic being well, Columbia may have just been too real to sell tickets in Des Moines, Iowa. And they took the diary and gave the Kunen-character a girlfriend. Every revolution was born in love, look at Elliot Gould and Candice Bergan in GETTING STRAIGHT and then again it would give them some nice footage of San Francisco.

So they made the film a sort-of rags-to-riches revolutionary drama about how a jock on the crew team, finds a cause and a girl and then gets his head beat-in by the villianous police in the film's stunning climax.

It's not that it's a bad film, rather it is a false one. Though not as blatant as GETTING STRAIGHT, it attempts to play old Hollywood formulas in the new area of student protest and Andy Hardy does not make it as a bomb-throwing radical.

The Strawberry Statement will play November 5, 6, and 8 at Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest.

The same problem permeates ON A CLEAR DAY YOU CAN SEE FOREVER, the film version of the not-to-successful Broadway musical of some seasons back which will be about these parts this weekend. Again the studio moguls blew it in their attempt to cash-in on something, this time Barbra Streisand. She's a fantastic singer and can do no wrong as Fanny Brice; but as Daisy Gamble, the heroin of this film, she comes off camping herself, which is okay for someone like Mae West to do, but not Streisand.

The film is way too-long, with extremely static direction by Vincent Minelli (Lisa's father) who did some great early-Fifties musicals, but has gone down since. The dialogue is corny, the score has been ruined playing it all about Streisand, very good talent is wasted--namely Jack Nicholson and Yves Montand among others. It is an overall disaster and maybe the best reason possibly given for the death of the Hollywood studios.

During the next three weeks, the Southwest Film Series will present three films by "new wave" French director Francois Truffaut. The films will be shown on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at 7:30 and 9:30 Hampden Commons. Playing this Tuesday will be Truffaut's first feature-length movie, THE 400 BLOWS. Tuesday and Wednesday, November 10 and 11, JULES AND JIM will arrive. Finally, November 17, and 18, SHOOT THE PIANO PLAYER will be screened.

The Fine Arts Staff is looking for new members. If you are interested in doing art feature writing, interviews, reviews-of-any-sorts, all related to the arts in the Five College Area contact Robert Nesti at the Collegian office.

12-Man WMUA News Team Covers Election Races

The WMUA News and Public Affairs Department is preparing to bring to the university community the most accurate up-to-date coverage of results of Election '70. The Twelve Man broadcast news and production team assembled for this night will be bringing results on local, state and national races.

This year's national elections feature a variety of races whose results will be vital to the Presidential elections of 1972. The composition of the United States Congress after this election will tell much about the future of President Nixon's legislative programs. The results in the New York senatorial election will say a lot about Presidential influence in statewide elections.

Within this state, the races in the Third and Twelfth Congressional Districts will be of great interest to students, as the campaigns of Father Robert Drinan and Gerry Studd, respectively, have utilized student help to a large degree.

WMUA News will keep you in touch with the races, from County Commissioner of Hampshire County to the Josiah Spaulding-Edward Kennedy contest. Coverage will begin at 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday night. Station News Reporters Paul Garant, Hal Dash, and Dan Johnson will be featured, backed up by a ten-man newsteam of writers and editors. For the lastest election coverage, tune in to WMUA, tomorrow night for "Election '70".

BASS TACKS™ are for going places. Wherever your fancy takes you, great looking, Bass Tacks make the trip. Comfortable and easy. Pick a pair today from lots of new styles.

Frosh Booters Blank S.C., 2-0

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

Led by a brilliant goaltending job by Bill Beggs, the freshman soccer team knocked off a previously undefeated Springfield College frosh team by a 2-0 score. Their fourth victory of the season, and their third at home, was a typical of their first three in that the Little Redmen failed to dominate the action. But their outstanding defense turned the trick for the win.

The pattern of the game was established early as Springfield kept the ball in Redman territory throughout the first quarter. The scoring opportunities were plentiful for Springfield, while infrequent for UMass.

But the Redmen made the most of their opportunities and at 20:30 of the opening quarter they cashed in for number one. After a Mark Tyma indirect kick had sent the ball downfield, a scramble in front of the net involving Bruce Sibson and Herman Rodrigo saw the ball knocked right in front. Howie Spier was johnny-on-the-spot as he beat the goalie to the left side, sending the UMass into an uproar.

After the Redman score an inspired UMass squad started to move. In playing Springfield to a scoreless tie in the second period, the Little Redmen held their own, something they were unable to do in the second half.

The second quarter did feature one outstanding play. Early in the quarter Beggs, the Redman goalkeeper, batted away a hard line-drive with a Springfield forward right on top of him. But this was just one of Beggs' great saves, as he was to turn away shot after shot during the second half.

In the third quarter, with Springfield in control, Beggs made "the" play of the game. With the score still at 1-0 a Springfield forward sent a curving line shot at the goal from about 20 yards out. The ball appeared headed to the upper right corner of the UMass goal, but Beggs streaked across the net, and lunging, he knocked it away. Once again Springfield had been denied.

Although the majority of the action was in the Redmen's half of the field, they were able to add some insurance in the final period. This time it was Tyma with the ball near mid-field. Advancing some 15 yards past the center stripe Tyma let one go, and as the ball sailed over the goalie's head for number two the Redmen knew that it was all over. In bringing their record to 4-1-1, the Redmen posted their first shutout of the year.

Ruggers Nipped In Toughie, 9-8

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

The Boston Rugby Club's Pilgrims made a penalty kick in the closing minutes of a tough, hard-played match as they edged the Redmen, 9-8.

The Redmen controlled the first half as they penetrated deep into Boston territory in the opening minutes. Unable to score in that attempt, Mike Bull came right back and scored a try on a 35-yard run. Dale Toohey made the conversion kick.

After much back-and-forth play marred by Pilgram infractions upon which UMass was unable to capitalize, the Pilgrams scored a try, but failed to make the conversion kick, ending the half with the Redmen leading, 5-3.

Beginning the Second half, the Boston club came right back with another try, but were again unable to make the conversion. At this point in the match, Peter Harrison was lost to the Redmen due to a muscle pull.

Toohey put the ruggers back in the lead as he made a penalty kick. A Boston player held the ball after being tackled by Bull. The Redmen now lead, 8-6.

Next, both teams lost one man due to fighting, and this obviously hurt UMass more than Boston as the Redmen were now playing with only 13 men. Bill Y. Wilen was the UMass rugger asked to leave the field.

And in the fading minutes, Boston netted three more points on a penalty kick to put it ahead for the remainder of the match, 9-8.

The match was one either team could have won, and, as Coach Bob Laurence put it, "We should have won." The XV was obviously plagued by the fact that it could not get the ball from the scrum to the backs.

Mark Chenowith played his usual "rough and tumple" game. Frank Boksanske is shaping into quite the rugger. Captain John Long "played his heart out." It's too bad for tough breaks.

The scrappy "B" team won its third straight match, 13-0. Al Brown gave UMass a quick 5-0 lead as he ran 30 yards for a try and kicked the conversion early in the first half.

Late in the half, the B's scored their second try as Steve McElroy broke for a long gain and passed to Doug Knapp who passed to Paul Reynolds for the try. The conversion was no good as the half ended, 8-0, UMass.

In the second half, Brown broke for a 40-yard jaunt and his second try. He kicked the conversion and ended the scoring at 13-0.

Dave Culver did a fine job kicking while McElroy shone on offense and Knapp on defense. Both squads now stand with 3-3 records.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

When a dictionary defines astrology as a pseudo-science, it is not defining; it is editorializing. In actuality, astrology is a scientific art that treats of the synchronicity between planetary positions and mundane events. It is a study which has been under way for at least 5,000 years and is the parent of astronomy and other modern sciences — including medicine.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Emphasis is on publishing and other forms of communication. Travel continues to be accented. You are concerned with long-range goals. Think and plan ahead. You gain faith in personal aims.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): You may be object of search. Make yourself available. Trying to duck vital issues is not constructive. Aries person can aid. Know this and act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Lie low. Time is on your side — safe to play waiting game. Check legal aspects of any action. Perfect techniques. Avoid tendency to brood about past. Look to future potential.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Wise to keep sharp eye on those who serve you. Employees tend to take many things for granted. If alert, you could avoid costly error. Skip wishful thinking. Be analytical.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Good lunar aspects coincides with creative endeavors. Improved relations with younger persons. You are able to achieve desired results. Key is to abandon preconceived notions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Get frame of reference into focus. Know where you are going — and why. You can complete important project. Develop greater faith in your source of supply. Success is on horizon.

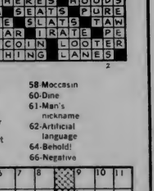
LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Accent on relations with relatives. You break restricting barriers. New projects are favored. Be versatile; exercise greater independence. Sense of humor proves wonderful ally.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Financial problems and opportunities are highlighted. Trust your own judgement. Some who mean well may not perceive what is needed. Collect your own data — then put it to use.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Do things yourself. Phone rather than write. Emphasize personal touch. Go places, do things. Cycle is high; people respond favorably to efforts, requests.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You may feel pinch of restrictions. Play game by the rules. By so doing, you gain confidence of professional superior. Sagittarius individual can show you the way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Much of what you do meets with favorable response. Social activity brings important, useful contacts. No time to hide natural talents. Express yourself. Make necessary changes.



PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Those who share your occupation want to co-operate. Know this and proceed without fear. Family member proves valuable ally. Stress diplomatic approach.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are emotional, keenly sensitive to surroundings. Persons who are coarse repel you. You don't always show it, but you are delicate and revere the quality of sincerity. Conditions are due to settle. They have been, to a great extent, chaotic.

Redman Gridders Win Second, 48-6, Over Vermont

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

BURLINGTON, Vt. - A rugged defense and a grinding offense paved the way for a revamped UMass eleven to demoralize the winless Catamounts of Vermont here Saturday, 48-6 before a sparse gathering of 3300 chilled fans. The Redmen are now 2-4-1 on the season while UVM is 0-7.

The opportunistic Redman offense turned three Catamount fumbles and one interception into touchdowns. All in all, UMass grabbed three fumbles and picked off three Earl Olson passes as the Redman defense completely dominated Vermont.

A look at the statistics is quite revealing. The Vermont offense limited to an unbelievable total of minus 12 yards rushing for the game, this despite the fact that the Cats attempted 31 rushing plays. They were a bit more successful in the air as they gained 169 yards in 36 attempts, an average of less than five yards a pass.

While the Redman defense was doing it's usual superlative job, the offense was continuing in the pattern that was established the previous week against UConn. That is, grind out the yardage on the ground and spice the offense with some passing.

UMass had over 400 yards in total offense for the second straight week, this time netting 456 yards. The bulk of this was gained on the ground as the Redmen garnered 272 yards on 62 attempts for an average of over four yards per try. That's the kind of offense that dominates a game.

But mentioning the UMass offense without putting in a word for placekicker Denis Gagnon would be an injustice. The junior booter not only had a season high of twelve points, but he also broke his own UMass field goal record with a boot of 46 yards in the second quarter. As an encore, he kicked one from 45 yards just minutes later. Coach Vic Fusia was not surprised at his kicker's performance. "He's always been a good kicker," the winning coach commented, "I think he's got his confidence now."

The Redmen broke the game open early. On the Cats first offensive series, UMass middle linebacker John Farrelly blitzed through the line, grabbed Olson while he was attempting to hand off and caused a fumble which was recovered by defensive end Jim Kelliher at the UVM 11-yard line. It took only three plays for UMass to get on the board as Pat Seavone swept left end for four yards. Gagnon booted his first of many and with only 4:28 elapsed it was 7-0.

UMass capitalized on another UVM miscue a few minutes later. Linebacker Joe Sabulis, who seems to be getting all sorts of interception opportunities of late, nabbed his first of two Olson passes at the UVM 29. Ken Hughes, one of three quarterbacks used by Fusia, scrambled for the score on a fourth and goal on the three when all his receivers were covered. Gagnon's kick made it 14-0 and it looked like the Cats were in for a long afternoon.

The second quarter was highlighted by Gagnon's phenomenal kicking. An ironic event was the fact that after splitting the uprights twice from outside the forty, Gagnon then missed a 20-yard attempt at the end of the half. But due to Gagnon's toe, UMass led at halftime, 20-0.

Two more fumble recoveries, one by John O'Neil and one by Skip Parmenter, led to two more UMass TD's in the third period. Both of these were due to halfback Mike Sawyer.

On the first one, with the ball on the UVM 18, Sawyer took a pitchout from Hughes and started sweeping right. Suddenly, the junior running back stopped, straightened up, and threw into the waiting arms of Bob Cabrelli for the score. The play has been in the UMass repertoire for a while but Fusia used it in this game because the Vermont defense was "ganging up on our end runs."

Sawyer himself scored the second one as he bulled over from one yard out. Gagnon then made it 34-0 with 14:03 gone in the period.

The other UMass scores were on a 16-yard sweep by Art Corsaletti and a four-yard burst by Dick Heavey. Heavey's TD was set up by a 55-yard scamper by, you guessed it, Sawyer. Gagnon's two conversions made it 48 points for the Redmen.

The Catamounts got their lone score on a 13-yard pass play from Olson to his brother, halfback Al Olson. It came with 3:40 gone in the final stanza and gave the freezing Catamount fans something to cheer about.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Corsaletti was the game's leading ground gainer with 94 yards in only eight tries. Sawyer had ten carries for 77 yards. The leading UVM ball carrier was fullback John Pelcher who picked up 18 yards...Dick Cummings saw limited action as he sustained an injury in the early going...Coach Fusia was able to use his entire squad in this one and everyone acquitted themselves well as far as he was concerned.

Harriers Run Away With YanCon Title

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

KINGSTON, R.I. - Taking five of the first eight places, and totaling a record 19 points, the UMass cross country team captured the Yankee Conference cross country title in the most convincing manner in Yan Con history here on Saturday.

With perfect weather for running the Redmen put together a second individual title by Ron Wayne, and unity in positions two through five by Tom Swain, Larry Paulson, Tom Jasmin and Leo Duart in outclassing their opposition, to return the team title to UMass after an absence of three years.

Second place went to Vermont with 66 points, third went to defending champion UConn with 69 points, followed by New Hampshire with 86. Rhode Island with 116 and Maine with 176 points.

For Wayne this was his second title in three years, his first coming as a sophomore two years ago. He broke the old course record he set earlier in the year by almost a minute, in clocking 23:56.7 for the 4.75 URI course. His performance was a solo after the half-mile mark when he took the lead and kept stretching it out for 40 second victory.

Swain, Paulson, Jasmin and Duart ran with the team unity that has been their trademark throughout the season. After two miles these four occupied positions six, seven, eight and nine.

In the next mile and a half Paulson took command of this pack and all four moved to the front of the group running behind Wayne. There they were challenged by Peter Bisset and Steve Dunham of Vermont, and Thomas Dowling of UNH.

These seven runners supplied all the fireworks at the finish for places two through eight.

With three quarters of a mile to go and Wayne well on his way to victory, Paulson and Swain overhauled Bissett and it appeared they were going to break this seven-man battle open. This was not to be as Bisset came right back with Jasmin and Dunham on his heals and Dowling and Duart not far to the rear.

The race was now on. These seven kept jockeying for position and on the last turn on the way to the finish line Swain burst from the pack with Paulson in hot pursuit and held on to finish second, Paulson taking third.

Bisset just had enough to nose out Jasmin for fourth. Dunham took sixth, Dowling seventh and Duart took eighth place to complete the UMass scoring.

Freshman Doug O'Connell ran well in his first conference championship finishing 12th, with Rick Barry, not fully recovered from a cold, placing 29th.

In looking back over the race, the team time split was 60 seconds and as Coach Ken O'Brien put it "it was a good 60-second split as Wayne had a real good day."

In further breaking the split down only 16 seconds separated second place Swain from eighth place Duart and only four seconds separated Swain from Jasmin who finished fifth.

O'Brien looked at this race as a good stepping stone for the rest of the championship season. With the split as impressive as it was, with Wayne performing with the strong breakaway power that is characteristic of his style, with Jasmin showing signs that he has recovered from that cold dismal day against Boston College, and with another consistent performance turned in by the trio of Swain, Paulson and Duart, the coach has all the reason to view this race as such.

During this week the Redmen will again be striving for the continued improvement that has characterized their performances over the past month.

Wednesday the team has a tune-up meet at Central Connecticut and then it's back to practice for the New Englands a week from today.

Sixth Victory Escapes Soccermen After Tying Vermont, 1-1

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

BURLINGTON, Vt.-Victory number six once again eluded the Redman booters, although the hard luck UMass eleven did move into undisputed first place in the Yankee Conference. On Saturday morning at the University of Vermont campus, two very fine soccer teams collided, and the result was a 1-1 stalemate.

If the booters had won the game they would have clinched at least a tie for the Conference crown. Now, instead, the whole season boils down to next Saturday's game here at UMass against an improved New Hampshire balclub.

For the second straight year the Redmen led Vermont heading into the final quarter. The visitors scored their goal early, at 14:15 of the initial period, when left-winger Marc Cantor banged home a Lindo Alves cross in a picture play. Duare Brown, the center-forward actually set up this score by his aggressive midfield play, feeding out to Alves who relayed it to Cantor.

The next forty-three minutes were scoreless, until at 13:51 of the final frame UVM was awarded a penalty shot on a questionable call. Goalie Bill Leary, who has already tied the UMass record for shutouts, had no chance on the play. The sophomore netminder turned aside 15 Catamount shots in one of his finest performances to date.

More so than in any previous contest, the wind was a factor in this game. In fact, when each club had the wind at its backs it dominated play for large stretches of time. In a game characterized by aggressive and at times extremely rough play, the long ball rather than the short pass was the order of the day.

Varsity soccer coach Peter Broaca was not available for comment after the game, but was obviously disappointed by the outcome, as was the entire Redman team. Assistant coach David Jekanowski, a former UMass soccer alumnus, felt that the starting fullback team of Dick McCarron, Joe Cerniawski, Dave Ouellette and Bob Grom played outstanding on defense.

Marc Cantor
Solo Redman Scorer

He also expressed the view that sophomores Jeff Hague and Ed Doherty, coming in for Rick Matusczcak and Tony Nunzinate, responded with excellent work under extreme pressure.

Gutsy co-captain Matusczczak personally blocked two booming Catamount direct kicks with his chest and also saved a certain score when goalie Leary was taken out of the play. Junior co-captain Augie Calheno played his usual steady game, going the full 98 minutes and taking all the corner kicks, direct kicks and even some goal kicks.

Tall forward Bill Davidson and skillful Abdu Thyra, as well as Larry Defelice, contributed to the UMass cause, pressuring the Vermont fullbacks late in the game. Dan Howle and Paul Slack at fullback and Gus Penon at forward did a fine job during their brief appearance. The game leaves UMass with a 5-1-2 record coming into its big game with the Chiefs of Springfield College, which will take place in Amherst on Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock.

SOCCER NOTES-What the tie means to the Redmen conference-wise is this: should they defeat the University of New Hampshire at home next Saturday, they would win the title outright. Should they tie and the University of Connecticut either lose or tie its game with the University of Rhode Island the Redmen would also win the title outright. Only if the booters lose to UNH and UConn beats URI will they fail to get even a piece of the crown. Here are the standings in the Conference:

	WON	LOST	TIE	PTS
CONNECTICUT	2	1	1	5
MAINE	2	2	1	5
VERMONT	0	1	4	4
NEW HAMPSHIRE*	1	2	0	2
RHODE ISLAND*	0	1	2	2

Thelwell Stresses Black Unity

see pages three and two

Students and faculty members discuss the problems of oppression facing the five-college black community. Black Solidarity Day featured a teach-in, five workshops and addresses by noted author Dr. Wilfred Cartey and UMass Black Studies Department Head Michael Thelwell. Topics ranged from the overall need of black students and professors to rely on each other to proposals for a newsletter and a unifying organization for blacks in the five-college area. Security Problems Again On Tippo's Mind

by KAREN DeGRACE
Staff Reporter

Problems of security have reached crisis proportions, said Chancellor Oswald Tippo at his noontime coffee hour yesterday, but "at the moment, we don't have the money to add to the present security staff".

Funding proposals have been submitted, but just now money is short. However, in response to rumors that $45,000 has been appropriated for renovation of Whitmore and $60,000 for the building of the Chancellor's home, Tippo stressed that no such appropriations have been made.

The possibility of emergency legislation is out of the question until January at least, when the legislature again meets. At present, though, it was suggested that consideration be given to the feasibility of utilizing students for security.

In discussing dorm security, one student suggested the possibility of including night reception duty as part of a counselor's duty. Also suggested was the installment of push-button combination security locks although even this system would not overcome the old problem of propping doors open from the inside.

Dr. Bromery, Special Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs, suggested that the biggest step toward security is the creation of community spirit.

Citing the fact that over a six week period, $23,000 in state and personal loss was reported (and, it is believed, this figure represents less than half of the actual loss), Dr Bromery suggested a three-front approach to the problem of campus security.

First, increase or better utilize the present sixty member security staff.

Second, utilize individual dorm security.

Third, initiate a long-term program of community responsibility for self-protection, beginning with change in dorm life styles.

Turning from dorm to parking security, it was suggested that a long-term plan for increasing parking sticker fees be adopted. I students were to pay $10 per sticker then approximately $150,000 would be available yearly to light and fence the lots. If not initiated campus-wide at first, at least one protected lot, it was suggested, should be set up on a trial basis.

Yesterday's Coffee Hour, attended by some twenty students and faculty, including Chancellor Tippo, Dean Field, Dr. Bromery, and Richard Story, was part of a series designed to promote discussion of topics of concern to all University members.

Next week Dr. Bromery will devote more time to a discussion of the campus security problem.

Black Problems Handled In Workshops

By Sandy Mitchner
Staff Reporter

Solidarity, unity, and strength were among the issues that the Black Five College area community considered important in reviewing the immediate problems they faced on BLACK SOLIDARITY DAY.

Between the opening address given by Black Studies Head of Department Michael Thelwell, and the speech given later that afternoon by internationally known scholar Dr. Wilfred Cartey, five workshops were held. The workshop, consisting of about 15-35 students had to decide what the oppressing problems were facing the five college area Black Community. Also discussed was what could be done to relieve some of the tension and anxiety of the situation in hopes of solving the problems.

They decided that a unifying organization should develope which would function as a spokesman for the community. The groups also discussed a five college news letter which, would keep the community informed and aware of important developments on the campuses and agreed that investigation should be done on the relevance of curriculum requirements and an understanding of how the university education can be applied in the students own community after graduation.

Upon comparing the ideas and decisions of each of the workshops it was agreed that the responsibility of each Black Student and faculty member was to each other. All the groups expressed a necessity for unity within the community.

Among the leaders of the teach-ins were many Black Studies faculty members including Professor Thelwell, Ben Wambari, Playthell Benjamin and former acting heads of the Afro American Studies Department Bernard Bell and Esther Terry.

Students for the five college area attended as well as a large number from the University of New Hampshire.

In the resolution presented to the community at the end of the day it was agreed that the formation of a Black political organization would be needed for the entire Black Community to come together and function as a whole.

Militant Forum Compares U.S., Cuba

by KERRY KELLEY
Staff Reporter

In a talk sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance and the Militant Forum, last night, Stu Singer discussed the results and prospects of the Cuban revolution, and how the United States can relate to it.

In addressing a crowd of about thirty people, Singer gave a short history of Cuba, and the events leading up to Castro's takeover. The revolution, Singer maintained, is not over, but still working to change conditions in Cuba. The Cuban revolt led by Castro is still in the process of what Singer called the 'evolution of revolution'.

For the past 12 years, the speaker told his listeners, the Cuban people have been involved in participating in rebuilding their country. In a visit to Cuba two years ago, Singer said that he could sense the attitude of the people that they feel very much a part of the revolution.

Singer said that the Cuban situation is important in that it typifies how a revolution resembles an organism. Cuba, he said, is in the process of "growing, maturing, and developing" – much like a human organism.

The speaker warned, however, that Cuba is not a utopia. The standard of living is much lower than that of this country, he explained. But, Singer added, a visitor won't find the extremes of poverty found in the United States.

Singer said that one reason for the success of the revolution is Castro. The leader did more than start a revolution he said, Castro educated the people in the reasons they needed it.

The revolution, in Singer's opinion, has resulted in an "extremely modern, extremely advanced" Cuban culture. The reason for this is that there is "an atmosphere as far as development of culture and of the ability of the individual to develop himself at a high level."

There isn't the repressed expression found in the Communist block countries, Singer said.

Socialism, which evolved out of the revolution, was another topic discussed by the speaker. The reason behind this, he said, is the result of a 'permanent revolution'. The theory behind this concept, it was explained, is that the goals of any revolution in today's world can only be met through socialism.

The attempt to maintain his goals is what led Castro to the nationalization of American industries in his country, Singer said.

The speaker concluded that because Castro did take over industries, and enforced laws against oppression, Cuba is now relatively free from the problems we face in America today.

The United States can relate to the Cuban revolution, Singer went on to say, by seeing what political enforcement of established laws can do. There aren't any politicians running in this country today who are for oppression and poverty, Singer declared. But, he added there also aren't any who will do anything about it.

It will be up to the people in America to organize demonstrations to make the government work for them, Singer concluded. And that, he added, is why the USA defends the Cuban Revolution, and what it can do for the movement in this country.

Humanities Committee Holds First Meeting

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Meeting for the first time last night, the newly formed Humanities and Fine Arts Committee agreed to let its Chairman appoint three members to an ad hoc personnel committee.

From the beginning, the group expressed its disapproval of the splitting of the College of Arts and Sciences into three parts; Humanities and Fine Arts, Natural Sciences, and Social Sciences. Most of the few present felt that to agree with the policy begun in the Faculty Senate and approved in principle by the Board of Trustees, to set up personnel committees for each College, would complicate matters considerably.

The Committee did not take a formal vote on that subject, however, it was felt that there were not enough members present to represent the College of Humanities and Fine Arts since two of the largest departments, History and Music, were totally unrepresented at the meeting.

Some Committee members argued that there was no good reason that interested parties could not have come. If no vote could be taken, why hold a meeting at all? It was pointed out that mailed ballots often varied greatly from votes taken at committee meetings, probably because the majority of votes came from faculty members who had not heard the discussion at the meeting. Perhaps it was time that the faculty at large learned that meetings could decide things, someone suggested.

As the Committee meeting went on, many members complained that they were facing issues they did not like at all in this division of Arts and Sciences – and, in fact, issues they had just now heard of. The Chairman, who had to read the relevant documents several times, replied that a clear statement of the situation had gone out with the Faculty Senate ballot.

Finally the meeting agreed to follow the recommendation of the Acting Provost, and enpower its Chairman to select three members to serve on a joint ad hoc Arts and Sciences Personnel Committee.

Panthers Call Rally In New Haven

The Black Panther Party has called for a mass rally noon today on the New Haven Green in support of Bobby Seale and Erika Huggins.

Speakers at the rally will include: Elaine Brown who recorded "Seize the Time"; Michael Tabor of the New York 21; Penny Jackson, sister of Jonathan and George Jackson; and Dave Dillinger. The Committee to Fight Repression has announced its support of the rally and again urges everyone who can go to be in New Haven this afternoon.

New Haven is the site of a trial where Bobby Seale and other Black Panthers face charges stemming from the murder of Alex Rackley, another Panther. A spokesman for the committee said that this trial is only one more example of the continuous repression of the Black Panther Party by attempting to railroad party leadership into prison.

Freshman Candidates Present Themselves

By Beth Goodell
Staff Reporter

Candidates for Freshman Class officers explained their qualifications and described their plans for leading the class at an open forum last night at Mahar Auditorium.

A primary election will be held today for the positions of President and Treasurer, with only two candidates seeking the vice presidency and one person running unopposed for Secretary.

Today's contest for Treasurer is between Cindy Roy of Wilbraham, Fred Scalese of Watertown, and Sherry Woodcome of Lancaster. Candidates for President are Wayne Clark of Sudbury, Bob Kinkead of Wellesesley, John Long of Fall River, and Dale Schaetzke of Shrewsbury.

Seeking the vice-presidency next Tuesday, November 10 will be Gary Krukonis of Beverly, and David Walsh of Haverhill, while Joseph Kos of Chicopee is running for secretary.

Today's primary will be held in the Cape Cod Lounge (TV room) of the Student Union. Freshmen are reminded that they must bring their ID's in order to vote.

Thelwell Charges: "Come Together!"

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

"Our resources are ourselves" Michael Thelwell, head of UMass Black Studies program, told a group of approximately 100 Black students as they gathered yesterday morning in the Student Union ballroom to open Black Solidarity Day at UMass.

He considered the issues of disunity, growth of the Black population, Africa, and Nixon, and related how education attempts to deal with these problems.

"You will face decisions that must be made because you are a Black and for no other particular reason" Thelwell said. The disunity of Blacks in this area is a reflection of conditions in the general Black community, he added.

Only if the Black student accepts the responsibility to act now, in the five college area, he emphasized, will further social and political committments be assured.

"Middle class educated Blacks 'cop out'" said Thelwell.

By achieving 'acceptance' these Blacks tend to escape the burdens and meaning of Blackness, he explained.

"Maybe the Black college student, although seeming most reactionary, is really just looking for a chance to 'cop out' and 'make it'" submitted Thelwell. "If so, we are doomed' if not, can we create a class of leaders and professional people to carry on the Black struggle?"

The 25 or 30 million Blacks in this country form a larger group than some total populations of other nations, he commented.

In spite of the common bonds of color, history, and experience with slavery, disenfranchisement, and colonization, which American Blacks share with contemporaries in the Carribean, Latin America, and Africa, Thelwell points out that there has been little recognition, or liberty for any Blacks.

"By liberation I don't mean the sense that all people are free, but (for the Black American in the ghetto) freedom from the way people are put into a community, unable to get food, a doctor, or a decent home" Thelwell said.

Using Springfield as an example, he remarked that "environment is sufficient to destroy." Blacks need to be liberated from racial "genocide" of this type, he declared.

"The emergence of so called "free" nations in Africa proves nothing" said Thelwell. Specific struggles, which he listed, prove that these nations are not free of European control.

Africa is of interest to Blacks because it is the continent of their ancestors, Thelwell said and it is therefore a place to relate to.

Discussing politics and Blacks, Thelwell said: "THEY are having elections tomorrow" stressing the "they". "Elections are almost irrelevant to us. Although in any other country we would be a sizable nation, it is not so in the so-called democratic system in America."

He recounted an incident where President Nixon cancelled a meeting with the head of a new African state on short notice, a diplomatic faux-pas.

"Nixon's attitude toward Africa and Black people there is about the same as towards Blacks here" Thelwell said.

To achieve the goals of more unified action to end oppression (political and other) among Blacks everywhere, Thelwell demanded organization. He said Blacks must understand who they are and what they want to undertake.

"Educated Black people have been serving their oppressors," Thelwell said, "by trying to recreate the oppressive system of environment."

Education can aid Blacks in their cause, he believes, if it is not centered around the white attitudes.

"Scholarship in a vacuum is a lie", he expounded. Blacks must learn their context in history and society while studying at the University to work productively afterwards, he also suggested. To ignore Black Studies would be disadvantageous, he said.

"We're outnumbered, scattered, and separated in a white school, as in the country, " said Thelwell of UMass Blacks. "We must establish a 5 college Black community where we go outside the institutions to find areas of interest."

An academic department is needed to handle exchange functions between the various campuses, he summarized. When the number of Blacks increases on campus, as it has since 1965, then they need a handle into the workings of the University, he maintained, also.

Blacks must "come together" and see to what extent they can create a Black community that will educate its members to the particular needs of the Blacks, concluded Thelwell.

Cartey Calls On Blacks To Join Forces

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

Internationally famous Dr. Wilfred Cartey called on Blacks "to get together" yesterday at a Black Solidarity Day teach-in. "We've fought ourselves too long," he said. "We've got to cool it together" and "work together."

Stating that geography doesn't exist for Black people, Cartey said that Blacks must feel, sense, move, dig, and start thinking together. "We must act in our own scenes," he told the predominantly Black audience, noting that is the only way to be Black and beautiful.

Cartey also charged that the black question the United States is being shoved aside. There has been a "substitution of one problem for another" as the attention of the government has turned away from Black people, he said.

The pollution issue as well as the Women's Lib movement were singled out by Cartey as clouding the black issue. Blacks do not need to learn about Earth Day, he said. "We don't pollute water. We drink it," he continued. "We're not out to conquer the world...we want to live in it."

Cartey cited the recent debate between Governor Sargent and Boston Mayor Kevin White as an example of the Black issue being pushed aside. Despite the fact that roughly 80,000 of 139,000 unemployed in Massachusetts are Black according to Cartey, there was no mention of the Black unemployment problem in the state during the debate.

The lack of Black leadership in this country was also singled out by Cartey. Many Black leaders are needed, he said, so if one is "bumped off" there will be plenty of others to take over.

The cleaning and freeing of the mind should be the biggest priority of Black studies, Cartey claimed. He said that Blacks must know themselves, think inside themselves, and work with others who do the same.

"You have a responsibility," he told the audience, noting that now is a time for work.

Education for Black people must be socialized, according to Cartey. He called for it to reach out to the community. There are lots of Blacks who want and need help, he said, telling the audience to reach out a hand and accept a hand.

He also spoke of the problems of relating to one another which Blacks have in a predominantly white university. Barriers between Blacks in the five college community, he said, must be broken down.

He stated that the five college community has the potential for becoming a principal Black studies area.

A number of reevaluations were called for by Cartey. In the areas of economics, psychology, and history.

In the area of psychology Cartey said that Blacks must dig into Black Psychology." "Freud doesn't exist for me," he continued, "he doesn't know the rhythm of my mind."

In economics, Cartey pointed out that the banks and dollars of the world are basically controlled by a few countries.

Cartey also noted that Blacks are capitalists in mind but not in pocket. "For me to get up, someone else must stay down," he said.

Dr. Cartey is a professor of comparative literature at City College in New York and an associate at Columbia University. He has frequently participated in programs relating to the international struggles of Africans and peoples of African descent and has written greatly on West Indian, Carribean, and Afro-American culture and literature.

Cardinal Cushing Dies at 75

BOSTON AP - Richard Cardinal Cushing, who retired last month after a quarter century as archbishop of Boston, died Monday afternoon. He was 75.

The white haired, gravel voiced prelate, a long time friend of the family of the late President John F Kennedy, died at his Commonwealth Avenue residence, the home of Boston's archbishops.

Cardinal Cushing, the son of a Boston blacksmith, had been leader of the archdiocese, the second largest in the nation, since 1944. He was succeeded Oct. 7 by Archbishop Humberto S. Medeiros, former bishop of Bronsville, Tex.

Archbishop Medeiros was at the cardinal's bedside when he died. Also at the bedside Monday were the cardinal's sisters, Mrs. Anna Francis and Mrs. Mary Pierce, and his brother John.

Last month, Cardinal Cushing praised God that he had been allowed to live to see his successor become archbishop.

Cardinal Cushing had been in failing health for some time. The cause of death was not immediately disclosed. He died at about1:30 p.m., approximately one hour after a bulletin was issued saying he was in critical condition "and failing rapidly."

The announcement said the retired spiritual leader of 1.8 million Roman Catholics was "suffering from the complication of the long standing malignancy with which he had been afflicted for years."

Funeral arrangements were not made immediately.

Archbishop Medeiros in a statement said: "His eminence has just passed to his eternal reward. As we mourn his passing we rejoice in his record of tremendous accomplishment for the church and for the welfare of his fellow men.

"He was a truly great soul, a man of universal genius, a priest of selfness dedication, a bishop of towering stature.

"I ask all of you who loved him during his life to pray now for the eternal repose of his noble and Christlike soul."

With the approval of Arch bishop Medeiros. Cardinal Cushing continued to reside in his simple room at the chancery residence after illness forced him to retire.

The room in the grey stone building in the Brighton section of the city was equipped with oxygen tanks and other medical equipment because of the cardinal's recurring respiratory ailments.

A chancery spokesman had said earlier Monday that "this past week the Cardinal's condition has been failing rather rapidly. For some time the cardinal has been troubled with this disease, but has made every effort to carry on in spite of it and without desire for any notoriety about the nature of his illness."

Cardinal Cushing underwent surgery in 1956 for removal of a cancerous kidney. Five years ago, Polyps were removed from his intestine.

The cardinal was born Aug. 24, 1895, in the South Boston section, the son of an immigrant Irish blacksmith for the Boston Elevated Railway.

He attended Boston College, which is operated by Jesuit priests, and St. John's Seminary. Bells at Boston College were tolled in requiem for the prelate Monday afternoon.

He served as a parish priest after ordination and then in the diocesan office of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith.

He became auxiliary bishop of Boston in 1939 and archbishop in 1944 at the age of 49-at the time the youngest archbishop in the world. He was elevated to cardinal in 1958 by Pope John XXIII.

Cardinal Cushing said the inaugural prayer for President Kennedy in 1961, and three years later, he celebrated a solemn funeral Mass at St. Mathew's Cathedral in Washington, D.C., for the assassinated president.

The death of Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston Monday brought tributes from President Nixon and other political leaders in Massachusetts and Washington, and from leaders of all religious faiths.

From the Western White House at San Clemente, Calif., President Nixon said: "Today not only in Boston, but the nation; not only Catholics but citizens of every faith mourn the death of Richard Cardinal Cushing.

"Just as all of us drew strength and inspiration from his life, so too do we grieve this loss. But we are comforted by the knowledge that he lived so fully and sought so persistently to serve the spiritual needs and social well being of others. His name will always evoke for us a spirit of ecumenism, of human dignity, justice and brotherhood among men and nations."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D Mass.: "I mourn his death in the deep and personal sense that any man would mourn the loss of someone close and dear. Richard Cardinal Cushing was a great and good shepherd. His life was a constant act of caring for a flock that included the exceptional children that we call the retarded, and all the people, great and small, of his diocese. And to my family, he was a councillor and a well of strength, equally stern and loving whether in our home on Cape Cod or in the White House. When a man of his character and his light passes, a man of the people that one endowed with special graces, a part of the world passes with him."

Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R Mass.: "We have lost a warm, wonderful and wise man, the good shepherd of all of us. But we should be grateful that we had his big heart and his all encompassing love for his fellow man for so long."

House Speaker John W. McCormack, D Mass., a longtime close friend of the Cardinal: "No churchman throughout his lifetime has made a more favorable impression upon all persons without regard to race, color or creed."

He described the Cardinal as "a rocklike figure of sustenance and deep faith and strength- always holding out a beacon for a better world and a better life."

Secretary of Welfare Elliot L. Richardson:

"It is with the most profound grief that I learned of Cardinal Cushing's death this afternoon. He was, in the hearts and minds of all of us from New England, Catholic and non Catholic alike, 'our' archbishop.

"His wisdom and courage, his warmth, and his unselfish dedication to those in need were an inspiration to us all.

"His works extended far beyond his immediate pastorate; indeed, they were universal, and he embraced all mankind wherever he perceived want, poverty and the need for understanding.

"He truly lived by the creed, 'Love Thy Neighbor.'"

Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who canceled a campaign tour of Springfield and returned to Boston when he heard of the prelate's death:

"The death of Cardinal Cushing is a blow to men of all faiths, a loss to people in all walks of life...

"The loss is so personal and so profound that I can only join those who must suffer it in sorrow and silence."

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, Democratic candidate for governor: "Cardinal Cushing was a man of God. His dedication, his strong character, his love of people and his self effacing humor imprinted his image in the hearts and minds of people of all faiths. We shall never see his like again..."

Law And Order, Vietnam Loom Large As Polls Open

Beacon, Capitol Hill Up For Grabs In Mass.

FOR ELECTION RESULTS CALL MDC ELECTION CENTRAL AT 5-2550 AFTER 10 p.m.

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts voters go to the polls to elect candidates for the U.S. Senate, Congress, governor and lieutenant governor, four other statewide offices and the state legislature.

Also on the ballot are five statewide referenda, including an advisory question on a course for the United States in Vietnam and one that proposes lowering the voting age in state elections to 19.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D) Mass., is opposed for reelection by Josiah A. Spaulding, a lawyer and a former chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Kennedy drew a 71.7 margin of the vote in the 1964 election-the highest winning margin in the state's hisotry for a senate seat. It is generally predicted that Kennedy will win Tuesday, but the margin, observers feel, will measure the senator's popularity in Massachusetts.

For the first time, state voters will elect a governor and lieutenant governor running as a team.

The incumbent, Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent, is running with his commissioner of administration and finance, Donald R. Dwight.

The Democrat nominee, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, is running with state Rep. Michael S. Dukakis, a Brookline legislator since 1963.

The congressional race that has attracted the most attention is in the 3rd District.

The Democratic nominee is the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, a Jesuit priest on leave as Dean of Boston College Law School. On the Republican ticket is state Rep. John A. McGlennon, (R) Concord. Running as a sticker, write in condidate is the incumbent Democratic congressman, Philip J. Philbin, who was defeated in the state primary by Drinan.

Seven other congressional seats are being contested, including the one in the 9th District held the past two decades by retiring House Speaker John J. McCormack.

Four congressmen from Massachusetts are running for reelection unopposed.

Other statewide contests are for attorney general, secretary of state, auditor and treasurer.

The Election At A Glance

Here, at a glance, is the situation facing voters Tuesday in what President Nixon has termed "probably the most important and decisive" election in the nation's history.

AT STAKE

Thirty five U.S. Senate seats, all 435 House of Representatives seats and 35 governorships.

ISSUES

Various local issues and personalities of candidates preclude a clear cut definition of major issues on a national level. But the Republicans have stressed law and order with President Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew leading the way in their unprecedented campaign efforts. The Democrats have pressed hard on the nation's troubled economy in their campaigning.

OUTLOOK

Many races are too close to call. The Democrats, however, are considered all but certain to maintain control of Congress, but are not likely to make the gains traditional to the party out of the White House in past off year elections.

Most polls now indicate a net Republican gain in the Senate of one to three seats. Democrats now hold a 57 to 43 edge. Democrats are expected to increase their current 243-187 margin in the House, but not by the average 37 seat gain of past off elections. A democratic increase of three or four governships also is expected. They now hold 18 state houses.

47 States To Choose Governors, Senators

In 47 of the 50 states Tuesday, voters choose either a senator or governor, or both, and in every state picks its share of the 435 members of the House of Representatives in the 92nd Congress. Many states also have legislature elections, constitutional amendment votes and local bond issues.

The national themes are the emotional issues such as law and order and the unrest in society, and the pocketbook issues: inflation, unemployment and the cost of living.

But the issues state by state are almost as numerous as the candidates and outcome probably will tell little about national trends-although winners may argue otherwise.

At stake: 35 Senate seats, now held by 25 Democrats, 10 Republicans; 35 governorships, now divided 11 Democrats, 24 Republicans; 435 House seats now held by 243 Democrats, 187 Republicans, with 5 vacancies.

Outlook: Republican hopes of gaining 7 seats necessary for control of the Senate faded late in the campaign and the prognosis is for a new gain of one to three Senate seats on the GOP side of the aisle.

Democrats seem destined to pick up at least four governorships, reducing their 32-18 deficit.

Democrats are expected to increase their margin in the House, but not by the traditional average of 37 seats that usually falls to the party out of White House power in the off year elections.

Last minute changes: The incident in San Jose, Calif., when President Nixon was jeered by demonstrators and some rocks were thrown, plus the President's subsequent speeches emphasizing this violence, throw an unknown factor into predictions previously made in polls. Democrats also are going on television to counter the last minute Republican thrust

The campaign: Observers agree that the fighting, locally and nationally, has been the roughest of any campaign in recent years, and produced smear tactics in many local battles.

Balance Of Power Seen As Critical Issue

WASHINTON (AP) - America votes today after a caustic midterm campaign climaxed by a Monday night television exchange between the men who may face each other in the presidential race of 1972.

President Nixon spoke for the Republicans on election eve through a filmed reprise of a speech he made Saturday in Phoenix decrying violent dissent.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine represented the Democrats after they scraped together enough money Monday to buy half the time the Republicans had originally purchased. Muskie replied to what he called "Republican tactics of fear and division."

The offices at stake are 35 Senate seats, 435 in the House of Representatives, 35 governorships and hundreds of state and local jobs.

The rewards include control of a Senate that repeatedly has frustrated Nixon, big stage power bases for 1972 presidential politics and state legislature strength which will be a key to control of the reapportioned U.S. house in 1972.

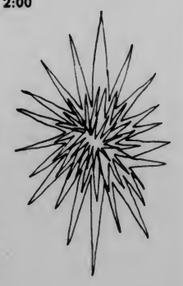
Republicans outspent the debt ridden Democrats this campaign and those finances were central in developments that led to Monday night's matching 15 minute telecasts.

The Republican National Committee first purchased 30 minutes of time on each of the three major television networks. Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien challenged the GOP and asked the networks to split the time in half for each party and make it available free. He pleaded party poverty. Muskie also asked for free time.

The networks turned down the request for free time, but agreed, with Republican concurrence, to sell Democrats half the time originally booked by the GOP.

Republicans began the campaign hoping to win control of the Senate, now split 57 43 for the Democrats. The consensus now is that the GOP will pick up one to three seats.

The Democrats' present 243 187 edge in the House, where there are five vacancies, is expected to be little changed-going against the historical record which shows the party in White House power losing an average of 37 House seats in mid term elections.



Principal Democratic gains are expected in the State Houses epublicans now hold 32 of 50 governorships and nine of ten in the most populous states. But Democrats are expected to win in Ohio and are strong threats in New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan-states that always are keys in presidential elections.

While the Republicans, led by Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, hammered a litany against crime, violence and unruly dissent, the Democrats sought to emphasize inflation and unemployment.

The contrasting pleas left voters something of a choice between voting their purses or their passions if they once cut through local issues, personalities and images.

"Don't Let It Bring You Down"

Election days belong to a special class of days when we strain for a perspective. Like the turn of a year, or a decade, election time is a time for putting it all together.

Today the Nixon administration comes to us at mid-term for a grade, for approval and support. What social, political and economic problems have they faced and how have they done?

Social

Certainly the greatest social challenge to our leadership has been to reconcile the races. Unless black and white can come to terms/with each other, we may reach a shooting war which will destroy our cities from within. And unless the nation can guarantee each of his citizens his human rights, it will have failed at its reason to be.

In the cities, the clash of the two cultures is everywhere. White people are resentful towards blacks who move outward from the city centers. Blacks resent whites for resenting them. When a white man says that he is afraid of the collapse of his property values, he means more than that; he fears the collapse of the very culture of which he is a part. When his neighborhood becomes predominantly black, he will be left without friends, churches, stores and clubs, all of which will have left for the suburbs. Overnight, he is a stranger in a strange land. Especially if he is old, or lacks the resources to move, or cannot replace his housing at anywhere near jcomparable cost, he is apt to become lonely, or bitter, or both.

To the black man who moves into a white neighborhood, he is simply buying for himself what all men desire: a nice home, good schools, etc. To prevent him from doing so is, literally, a crime.

The posture of the administration ought to be one of reconciliation. Instead, the Nixon presidency, by subtle use of the crime-in-the-streets issue has appealed to the fears of the white homeowner. The Republicans appear to be building their "emerging majority" upon appeals to fear and hatred, and at the expense of even further alienation of black and white.

Economic

John Kennedy began the last decade with an economy operating well below capacity, with numbers of men unemployed, (many of who provided the margin for his victory over Nixon,) and the American industrial plant becoming antiquidated in comparison with the newly-rebuildt economies of post-war Europe. His policies were to promote growth of national output, and thereby increase employment. He encouraged a revision of the tax codes to encourage modernization of plant and equipment.

Ten years later, unemployment is again mounting. But this time, we cannot rely on growth of total output to employ those currently out of work for these reasons:

1. We have been operating close to capacity in many of the civilian industries. Wages and costs have often been bid up by government competing to hire men capital and land for the military effort.

2. Every increase in output increases our problem with pollution.

3. We produce such a cornucopia of consumer goods already, that the addition in their production produces questionable increases in our welfare.

The economic probelm which we face in 1970 is not so much to expand our output, as to reallocate our resources to production for our most pressing needs. The Nixon administration has begun to do that, moving resources from war production to peacetime manufacture. Much of the current unemployment, especially on the West Coast, can be traced to cutbacks in the armaments industry; it makes little sense to blame the Republicans for this. In fact, in the depressed prices and wages in the Northwest, there is a special opportunity: that truly productive industry will move in to capitalize on low costs. The many people who had flocked to these places in search of defense jobs upset the character of life of Washington and Oregon cities, and their migration elsewhere is welcomed by the original residents.

The present administration can, however, be faulted for the illogical allocation of what resources the federal budget does allow: Funding such things as the SST and ABM while cutting back on programs for housing, medical care and research, and education.

Political

The U.S., as 5% of the world's population, now consumes something like 60% of its resources. Other nations and many within this country are beginning to ask: just what is the role of the U.S. among nations? A good case can be made that we are tending towards being an imperial power, dominating politically and economically smaller nations of the world in order to assure access to raw materials.

In 1959, the noted historial Daniel Boorstin said in accepting the Bancroft prize that the United States stood at juncture in its history. Until fairly recently, we had been recognized as a part of the New World, and the American way of life had become symbolic of what was young and strong in men. The U.S had to choose between becoming an extension of the Old World from where we had some, or allying ourselves with the other, newer nations. "Only if we can relate ourselves to," he said, "and acquire the new habit of comparing ourselves with, the cultures of Asia and Africa - with China and India, with the Arab nations and the rising peoples of Negro Africa. Only then can we remain part of a New World."

We must learn, he continued, to rid ourselves of this national arrogance which we are fast assuming, in which "perhaps our only competyors today are the Soviets, whose illusions of omnicompetence are more dogmatic than ours."

In the elections being held today, the men whom the President is asking us most to support, the conservative Republicans running for the Snate, have the most to gain from the posture of the U.S. as an Old World imperial power.

Tonight, many will sit at their televisions, not a few of us here in the Union. A man elected here another there, and the key to American politics for at least another two years will be unfolding.

"It's Only Castles Burning"

CAMPAIGNING WITH NIXON - Some 100 Student activists were carefully and deliberately admitted to President Nixon's political rally in Miami Beach Tuesday night so they could unwittingly become his shills.

Seated in a compact bloc directly in front of the speaker's platform, but well back from the amplifying equipment, the bizarrely - dressed youngsters hoisted anti - war posters and carried on a running verbal barrage, laced with obscenities, throughout the President's speech.

As an intruder seated among the hecklers could plainly tell, they never paused to listen to Nixon's words, nor to question why they had been welcomed to the jammed, pro Republican gathering.

From their position - immersed in their own noise - they thought they were drowning out Nixon as he talked of progress in the Vietnam War, the administration's environmental protection program, the need for a strong defense and other national concerns.

But, in fact, they served only as a backdrop to the main point of Nixon's address - which was that a vocal minority was bent on violent disruption of orderly governmental and social processes, and must be put down by the heretofore silent majority.

As the Miami Herald observed in a page one headline the next morning:

"Hecklers Upstaged at Beach"

Huge overhead loud-speakers superimposed Nixon's message clearly over the hoots and slogan-shouts of the young demonstrators.

"Seig heil! Seig heil!" yelled the kids, some standing on their chairs and raising their arms in a Nazi salute toward the platform.

"Bull-! Buss s-! Bull s-!" they screamed.

"One - two - three - four, we don't want your - war!" they chanted.

What most of the audience heard and what went out over the statewide television hookup was Nixon's voice saying this above the din in the background:

"...night after night you see on the television young people shouting out obscene slogans, trying to shout down speakers, even trying to shout down the President of the United States.

"Well, they are not going to be able to do it.

"I know the impression, that many Americans have, and I read some of the columnists and others who say those who try to shout down speakers, those who engage in this kind of protest, they are the majority of young Americans or at least they will be the leaders of the future.

"I have news for you : They are not the majority of young Americans and they will not be the leaders of the future of America."

Nixon has tested that line on audiences in a dozen states, and not once has it failed to bring a crowd to its feet in thunderous approval, especially when it comes booming over the noise of distant hecklers.

The Miami Beach demonstrators were typical in number and temperament of similar groups that have appeared consistently at Nixon political rallies in the last two weeks.

It cannot be said for certain that Nixon rallies in other cities contained deliterately - planned protestors, but the Miami Beach affair did.

White House rally planners saw to it that a limited number of tickets were distributed to known student activists, mostly members of the South Florida Chapter of the Students for a Democratic Society.

When not enough protestors - most of whom were high school or early college age - took the bait, ushers passed more tickets around to young people standing outside the Miami Beach convention hall.

Wearing sweat - shirts and bell - bottoms, long granny dresses, Indian - like get-ups, leather vests, even mini - shirts, the youngsters contrasted sharply against the rest of the conservatively attired audience.

"Commies, you big Commies," shouted an adult woman in an adjoining section. "Go back to Russia!"

Finding a discarded pile of pro-Nixon placards, many youngsters lettered their own slogans on the back. One girl found a poster that said "Thank God for Nixon" on one side; on the other she lettered "not one more life-let's get out of

Find Someone Who's Turning

"What Are You Trying To Do, Make Us Look Bad?"

And You Will Come Around

Not surprisingly, the polls have truly indicated a certain amount of confusion that results in the voter's mind about "who is who" in "American politics" during the last days of the campaign.

Even the personal efforts of the President and the Vice-President, unprecedented in American politics, have not had a substantial effect on the voter.

This is so not because the latters' personal convictions are just as strong as those of the "opinion-manipulators"--but more so because of his inability to understand what really is going on around him.

The "opinion-manipulators" have very often misunderstood the voters' mind. Applause is expected like saliva from Pavlov's dogs, for lip service given to such phrases as " quality for all", "peace in this century", and "closer understanding between nations."

Unlike Pavlov's dogs, we are dealing with human beings who have second thoughts about their spontaneous reactions to political speeches.

Unfortunately, however, these first impressions do cloud the minds of the voters and second thoughts may only help to strengthen the original impressions. That is why opinion-manipulators pay such respect to television coverage which proves to be much more beneficial than the "hand-shaking exercise" with the average voters. In other words, the means of selling the product is considered more important than the product itself. The debates about the real issues that face the nation are left either to the political speech writers or to the academicians who do justice to the subject, but have no intention or aspiration to make it known to the average man.

In a system that comes nearest to the democratic system, sheer numbers make up the "majority" and their strength lies in their numerical quantity, and not in their intellectual quality.

The quality of life of the inhabitants of a nation lies decidedly in the latter and not in the former. While the "ruling class" pretends to work for the "manipulated and misinformed class", one thing is clear - that the former cannot even mislead itself without the support and blessings of the latter - by "words full of sound and fury signifying nothing!"

Alas, I, the average man, persists in remaining average, and that is where the problem lies as well as its solution.

KHALID MIRZA

Vietnam now." Her long brown hair framing a solemn face, she stood on a chair and held her sign silently while Nixon spoke.

The behavior of the young protestors irritated most of the pro- - Nixon sudience, as it was expected to do, and it made some adults in the adjoining sections furious. "Stop it, stop it," screamed one middle - aged man, when the kids began stomping their feet on the hollow bleacher flooring.

An ample number of plainclothes policemen and Secret Service agents circulated among the protestors, and on more than one occasion stepped in to soothe raging tempers, mostly among the adults.

"Do you realize who that was?" one long - haired bonde asked her boy friend, after a dark - suited figure had slipped past them in the crowd.

"No," he replied.

"That was Detective Page of the Fort Lauderdale Police Department."

"Do you know him?"

"Yeh, he busted me once."

Kent State Rally

To the Editor:

Contrary to the charges of the Young Workers Liberation League and the Committee Against Repression, the rally in the Cage on Friday, Oct. 23 was called by the Student Mobilization Committee to defend the Kent State 25 and other political dissidents. This was clearly stated in the Mobe's call to the rally. And in fact those who attended heard remarks concerning not only those indicted at Kent State, but a defense of Angela Davis, a Black Panther spokeswoman, and a woman from the Women's Liberation Movement. Charles Beard, a student from Jackson State, was scheduled to appear but because of a mix-up at the airport was stranded in Mississippi. Clearly, then, the Mobe can not be accused of calling a rally "solely to defend the Kent State 25" nor do we tolerate the charge of "indifference to the murders at Jackson State".

Demonstrations are not held to oppose repression or racism as abstracts, but rather to oppose concrete instances of racism and repression. We in the Mobe understood the murders and indictments at Kent as an attack on the antiwar movement. Our response was to build a demonstration that would reaffirm the strength and solidarity of the antiwar movement (thereby dispelling any illusions of the Nixon/Agnew/Mitchell complex might have of picking us off by ones and twos and fours) and at the same time (not later as the YWLL and Committee Against Repression suggest--but at the same time) to connect the government's repression of students at Kent with its repression of Blacks, Communists, Panthers, women, and--as was stated in SMC's call to the rally--repression of political dissidents in general. The rally was held. The connections were made and made effectively by a number of speakers--including one from the Committee Against Repression.

The best way to build a massive solid defense of civil liberties is not to demand that those who come to a demonstration have a considered position on each instance of repression, but rather to rally as many people around each case and then to make clear the connections between that instance and others, others perhaps more complex or less well-publicized. We can not demand, in a state where the media deliberately distorts or conceals acts of political repression, that those who attend a rally by some act of will divest themselves of their conditioning. It is not our duty to determine who is "qualified" to oppose the war, racism, and repression. It is our duty to hold demonstrations that educate masses of people about these issues and the connections between them. We have built the student movement in this way. And we will continue to build a majority movement in the U.S. with the same success.

of the STUDENT MOBILIZATION COMMITTEE

Communist Party: Racism

To the Editor:

The Young Worker's Liberation League (YWLL), the new Communist Party youth group, was a signatory to the letter attacking the Student Mobilization Committee, it is relevant then to consider the history and the present position of the CP on racism. During World War II when the Communist Party waxed super-patriotic (after the Nazi invasion of the Soviet Union) the CP declared that the Black Liberation struggle, like all other struggles, had to put aside its demands so as not to interfere with "the War effort." They became party to a group which successfully blocked an all Black movement headed by A. Phillip Randolph to have a March on Washington to demand equal hiring practices in war industries.

The Communist Party considered, as they have always, Third World Liberation struggles secondary to the needs of the Soviet bureaucracy. Perhaps the greatest betrayal in this regard was their crime of silence committed against the thousands of Japanese-Americans incarcerated during World War II only because of their Japanese ancestry.

Today the CP and its youth group YWLL continue the tradition of betrayal and paternalism. While they scream about repression in the United States, they "eloquently" defend the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. While they prate about racism, it should be remembered that when Malcolm X was alive the Communist Party newspaper, The Daily Worker, denounced him as a "Black fascist." While they now denounce the Mobe for not defending Black victims of repression (a charge which is a barefaced lie), they continue to work inside the racist Democratic Party. While they talk of the need for whites to come to the defense of the Black community, they remain silent on the best defense of the Black community: Black Nationalism.

The CP and the YWLL claim nothing is more revolutionary than Black-White unity. We claim what is revolutionary is the struggle of Black people to control their own community. Defense of the Black community against repression is one aspect of the fight for Black community control. We believe that struggle must be supported, but that the leadership of that struggle can only come from the Black community itself.

Democratic Process

To The Editor:

As a member of the Faculty Senate I was present at the meeting last Thursday when the matter of Dr. Bromery's immediate appointment to the post of Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs arose. I voted against the Student Senate sponsored resolution and would like to explain why. But first some background information.

According to the student resolution (71-S13) "the Student Senate recommends to the Faculty Senate that it also endorse the appointment of Dr. Bromery as Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs." This, in turn, refered to the Student Senate bill 71-S12 which, among other things, called for the "immediate" appointment of Dr. Bromery to the post.

This latter motion was duly presented by a Faculty Senator and, after some rather confused debate and an abortive effort to introduce a substitute motion, passed by the narrow margin of 24 to 22. This would likely have settled the matter if the vote had not been followed by a brief but telling comment from Professor Bruce Morris, the presiding officer of the Senate, which led some of the Senators to realize the true import of the student resolution--namely, that the Faculty Senate search committee would be snubbed and bypassed. A vote was taken to reconsider and a rather hastily drafted compromise motion was passed, after which the meeting adjourned. Along with 21 other Senators I voted against the original motion for the immediate endorsement of Dr. Bromery and this is the vote I would like to explain.

It should be made clear right off that I, along with (I believe) most of the other Senators, am impressed by Dr. Bromery's qualifications for the job and hope he gets it. Above all I am impressed by the trust and confidence he has won from the students and faculty alike. So the issue as far as I am concerned is not whether Dr. Bromery should be given the post but whether he should get it by acclamation, as it were, and at the expense of a proper regard for normal Senate procedures. As Professor Morris made clear, the right of the faculty to play a role in the appointment of administrative officials was wrested with difficulty from the trustees and the administration and should not be taken lightly, least of all by the Faculty Senate itself.

But the real issue, and the real cause of this letter, is deeper. What many students and a few faculty apparently fail to realize is that due process, formalized procedures and the like, while frequently used to obstruct the workings of the democratic process, more frequently and normally are its safeguards. In other words, without the forms and procedures of democracy you have no permanent and workable democratic society, and the same holds true within the university community. The opposite view--namely, that there is something inherently more democratic about a lusty shout of acclamation (think of a square in Havana packed solid with 50,000 Cubanos yelling "Fidel! Fidel!")--I simply don't buy. This explains why, despite my admiration for Dr. Bromery and my hope that he will be selected for the position in question, I refused to be stampeded into approving what would amount to an appointment by acclamation.

Even more disquieting was my, I hope, unwarranted suspicion that the student representatives who addressed us were attempting to stir up an atmosphere of bogus crisis and urgency which is completely unjustified by the objective situation. In a sense it might be said that Dr. Bromery is already functioning in the post which has been proposed for him and has been for sometime. If this were not so then how could he have won the degree of trust and confidence which he has?

So, why not "cool it" and resolve the matter in the normal fashion taking into consideration that some of us in the Faculty Senate do "make a thing" of being concerned with democratic procedures and formalities.

Campus Center Boasts First Automatic Post Office

UMass boasts the first self-service postal unit on any New England campus. Designed for prompt, efficient service, the SSPU is in operation 24 hours daily in the Campus Center. Harold A. Saben, left, SSPU technician, points out the features of the automatic unit to Postmaster Clarence A. Jewett of the Amherst Post Office. Gene St. Germain, head of the central mailing office at UMass, and Warren T. Grinnan, G general manager of the Campus Center.

The U.S. government post office now provides even greater "zip" to its service, with help from UMass.

Housed in the Campus Center is the latest in efficiency, a 24-hour self-service postal unit (SSPU). The first of its kind at a New England college or university, the unit is a non-profit operation in which costs are decreased by 50 per cent, while service is more prompt

The compact unit provides services that are available to any post office. It will continue operations currently provided by the Student Union Post Office, which will be closed after Valentine's Day.

Postmaster Clarence A. Jewett of the Amherst Post Office emphasized the simplicity of the unit. "The whole secret to its operation is for everyone to read the directions," he said.

Patrons may buy stamps singly, as well as air mail and six-cent stamps in $1 booklets. Minimum insurance may be purchased for twenty cents, providing $15 coverage on packages. Packets of postcards, air mail and six-cent envelopes are also on sale. This unique machine will even return change up to twenty cents above selection price.

One section of the automatic post office features instructions for weighing, measuring, and mailing packages and letters. The parcel post scale is surrounded by a national zip code map, domestic postal rate chart, various mailing directions with diagrams, and a direct line to the Amherst Post Office to answer any special questions. Certified and registered mail slips are also available, in addition to various change of address forms.

Receiving the greatest use is the change machine, according to Harold A. Saben, SSPU technician. This machine takes currency from a dollar bill to a dime and releases change in various combinations. When one column's supply has been exhausted, another row is switched to automatically. Students have been using this machine to get change for everything from candy and Xerox machines to local laundromat, Mr. Saben remarked.

Innkeepers Club To Hold Fete

Mr. Fred B. Roedel

Mr. Fred B. Roedel, president of Chalet Susse International, will be speaking to the Inkeepers Club November 4 at 7:30 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. His speech will consider the effects of low-cost motels on both the industry and the consuming public. The public is invited and refreshments will be served.

Mr. Roedel is credited with shaking up the lodging industry with a chain of four low-priced motels offering first-class accommodations at very low rates.

His small New England chain's biggest attraction is the price, $9.70 for two persons, $11.70 for four.

Antioch Movement Coming Here

In 1963 at Yale University the spirit of the early disciples was reborn in the Antioch Movement. The program was designed especially to aid college students to better improve their understanding of their mission as disciples in the modern world.

The beginning of the Antioch Movement at UMass will be the weenend of Nov. 6, 7, & 8. Interested students will gather at Lenox, Mass. to listen, discuss, pray and live together in the spirit of early Christianity.

A team of committed college students from UMass and other colleges who have been active in the movement are coordinating this weekend. They will share their experiences and help lead the discussions.

Antioch is not viewed as a retreat, or a sensitivity program, but rather as "a growth experience in Christ."

Women's Rights To Be Topic Of Smith College Lecture

Historian Eleanor Flexner, whose 1959 book "A Century of Struggle" is the definitive work on the women's rights movement, will discuss "Women's Rights, 19th Century Style vs. Women's Lib." in a lecture at Smith College Thursday.

The lecture, at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall, is part of the "Perspectives on Women" series, sponsored by the Women's Studies Organization at Smith.

Also the author of a book of the theater, "American Playwrights, 1919-38," Miss Flexner recently completed a biography of Mary Wollstonecraft, the first English feminist. She held a Guggenheim Fellowship for study abroad in 1966-67 in connection with her research for that book.

Miss Flexner is a contributing editor to the Pforzheimer Library series, "Shelley and His Circle." She is also the author of a biographical and critical essay in Volume 4 of the series, based on newly published letters of Wollstonecraft, whose daughter married Shelley.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Referendum Important To Draft

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Let's break tradition today and not deal directly with the draft. The topic under discussion is so important to the draft however, that I feel it is essential that it be considered.

On the ballot in today's elections are a series of referenda questions. Question 5 deals with the war against Vietnam. There are three possible answers, one hawkish, one dovish, and one Kennedyish. The Kennedyish one is also a Nixonish one. It calls for a gradual withdrawal of troops from Nam. It does not consider what some posters around campus have pointed out: That gradual can mean a lifetime. If this answer wins, it is in a very real sense, a vote for the continuation of the draft, for the draft will not end until the war against Vietnam is ended.

Alternative Question 5 calls for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Vietnam. If this were to happen before the end of March, let us say, there would be a fair chance that the draft might not be renewed when it expires in June. (Please note all of the qualifiers--also note that there is no way that the draft will be ended in June '71 or '73 unless we're out of Nam and not in any other places either.)

This means one very simple thing: One way to start putting pressure on to end the draft is to put pressure on to end the war. There won't be any miracles, nor would a 100% vote for Alternative C bring the war to a halt (or do you still believe in U.S. democracy and Santa Claus?) but it would bring some pressure to bear.

What this means is that if you're registered to vote you should make sure you get to the polls and vote C on Question 5, even if you ignore all of the candidates. If you're not registered, either because you don't believe in it or because you're too young, summon up the canvassing skills you learned during the Moratorium and go out--RIGHT NOW-- and get people to vote for C. Canvass here, or go home for the day. It's not too late, as most polling places are open until 8:00 p.m. and people wait until after supper to vote.

To be perfectly honest, I don't really believe that a high vote for C will do a damned thing to end the war, but if A or B get a high vote, the Nixon-Agnew Conspiracy will be sure to use it to show how the Great Silent Majority is right behind them. You can help. Do it.

Peace.

Introducing the fastest ladies' shaver in the whole wide world.

You know those timid little ladylike shavers? Well, forget them. Because the big, all-new Lady Norelco 20L is here. And it's the world's fastest ladies' shaver.

It has the biggest shaving head of all the ladies' shavers.

The largest active cutting area. And an extra-thin shaving head to shave extra close and smooth.

Which means you can shave your legs and underarms 40 to 50% faster than with any other ladies shaver in the world.

The new Lady Norelco is a beautiful poppy red, and it comes in a shiny black case. And that makes it the fastest, prettiest ladies' shaver in the whole wide world.

Gagnon's Goodies

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

— by SYDNEY OMARR —

When a Gemini woman decides to do something, you can safely wager there will be a flurry of activity. The project may not be completed in exactly the manner planned, but what must be done will be finished. Gemini generates excitement and curiosity. Nothing is likely to stand still for long with Gemini on the job. Some famous persons born under this intriguing zodiacal sign include F. Lee Bailey, Bob Hope, Pierre Salinger, Harold Robbins and Peggy Lee.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Some governmental regulations may confront you. Be willing to make changes. But don't back down on basic principles. Accent is on prestige relationships with occupational superiors.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Good lunar aspect coincides with journeys, higher education, development of workable philosophy. You can harmonize conditions at home. Strive to be understanding, diplomatic.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Much is hidden — nothing is obvious. You will have to be on guard against deception. The easy way does not suffice. Individual who handles money may have something up his sleeve.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Accent on marriage, how you relate to public. This is time of decision. Accept or reject responsibility. Know where you want to go. Then take steps which lead to ultimate goal.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Improve methods of getting job completed. This is done by getting rid of nonessentials. Realize that sentimental attachments to objects, procedures could be costly. Begin to modernize.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Routines, affections are stimulated. You are more creative than usual. Imprint your own style. Encourage young persons to contribute their efforts. Fulfill your own potential.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Your hunch about home property affairs is apt to be correct. Protect valuables. Special policies other important papers should be put in safe place. Obtain additional information.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Accent on ability to move with the times. Key is versatility. Have alternate methods at hand. Refuse to be intimidated by one who is fearful.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): If observant you could discover something of value. Many now tend to overlook details. Don't compound error. Stay on top of project. Persistence will pay dividends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Cycle is high; you can safely take initiative. Go places, do things. Be original and independent. Set pace. Lead rather than follow. Important new contacts are indicated.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Work quietly behind the scenes. Give best effort to aid worthwhile cause/person. The more you give now, the more you will ultimately receive. Proceed accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Emphasis on how you fulfill desires. Friends figure prominently, but take some promises with proverbial grain of salt, any who are sincere may overextend themselves.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a flexible individual, able to defend principles. However, at times you tend to embrace too many causes at once. Settle on one goal at a time. Roadblocks will be removed. You will be provided with opportunity to get more joy out of life.

Scrimmage Sidelights

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

I went back to the Cage Saturday. It wasn't the first time I had been there this year, but it was a long time since I'd walked in relaxed. Usually I go to hear someone tell me (not necessarily in the order of importance) about our societal ills. I go in tense, hoping someone has the solutions, but I know they don't because if they could think of them, why couldn't I?

When I walked in Saturday there was a basketball scrimmage going on, an intrasquad thing featuring Redmen vs. Redmen. I assume only the hard core fans attended since there was no glamour attached to the situation. During the regular season you can get bright lights and music for only a flash of the ID card.

This time the Pep Band was not playing the theme from "Mission Impossible" in the background and the scoreboard wasn't plugged in. I gave up keeping count after the first few baskets.

It was a good opportunity....to observe individual plays, the coaches, even the floor.....to listen to people's comments.

For what they are worth, some of those observations:

Last year's Captain Ellerbrook is a coach now. The fourth highest scorer in Redmen hoop history calmly blew on his whistle and called fouls on some of his old teammates.

And there was the usual reaction to being called on a foul: the incredulous look saying "who me?" as the player raises his arm reluctantly, and brings it down a lot faster than it went up.

* * * * *

There were over 1000 spectators spread out on the bleachers, with room beside them to lay their coats down. I heard, "If we want good seats this year, we better not get up until the season starts."

* * * * *

The floor was shiny with a wide red band painted around its edges and big red squares under the baskets. The seal in its center looks different from last season. A simpler design, compliments of Marcel Breur?

* * * * *

Two upright safety cushions were placed at one end of the court, but the players invariably collided with one another. Perhaps the maintenance crew expected them to plan their falls beforehand.

* * * * *

John Betancourt stopped to tie his left sneaker once. Somehow it didn't seem fair to have he and Pagliara, Julie and Mathias on the same side for a good part of the game.

* * * * *

"Leaman looks younger....he let his hair grow....he almost looks pleasant," someone said. It took him a while to yell out to his men. When he did, "You want to play, get out there and play!....Let's see something on that defense this time."

But he sat passively through most of it, without as much as a sweaty, rolled-up program in his hand.

* * * * *

People started getting reactions after an hour or so. One gets up, a group fellows (no one is an individual any more). I left, too, before the end, but a friend told me later the Redmen won.

* * * * *

Freshmen got their first glimpse of Julius Erving, the guy Red Auerbach calls "fantastic." Upperclassmen were reminded of a night in New York last February

Wayne Solos To YanCon Title

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Breaking records and winning races has been a habit this season for UMass cross country co-captain Ron Wayne. This past Saturday he added to his already long list of laurels by winning for the second time in three years the individual title at the Yankee Conference cross country championship held at the University of Rhode Island.

In chalking up his eighth straight conquest of the season, Wayne set a new course record of 23:56.7 for the 4.75 URI course, breaking the record that he had set earlier in the season by almost a full minute.

His performance was steady and strong throughout as he outdistanced his nearest rival, teammate Tom Swain, by forty seconds. By the half mile mark he took command of the meet and by the mile mark he had a substantial lead of some 50 yards in clocking a fast 4:45.

This early burst from the pack was the first question that he was encountered with after the race.

"Before the race I set up a plan to feel out the competition for the first half mile to see if anyone was going to take off. By the half no one had made a move, so I just took off and kept going."

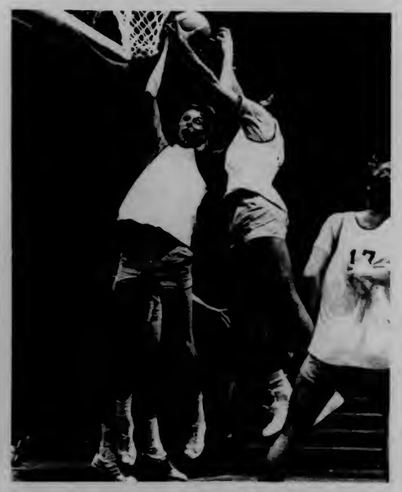
During the second mile Wayne increased his lead to 15 seconds as he went through the two mile point in 9:45. He was now all alone and on his way to a big victory.

His third mile was the slowest segment for him in the entire race as he ran 5:12 to hit the three mile check point in 14:57. During this third mile he found himself looping his stride instead of employing his usual short quick stride. This he pointed out was the reason for the slowdown in his pace.

He adjusted his stride in the fourth mile to the tune of 4:47. With this burst he opened up even more on his pursuers.

Coming on to the athletic field with three quarters of a mile to go, he was running easy. With a quarter of a mile to go he got a time of 23 minutes from a timer and he started to pour it on as he wanted to break 24 minutes. His kick at the end was more than enough as he finished in 23:56.7.

Throughout the season Wayne has been running most of his races alone after the first mile or so of the race. He commented on the philosophy that he uses while running alone: "When running alone I divide the race course into sections. I did this at URI when I broke the course up into six sections. The beginning of each section is a goal that I set for myself and I run to it. By doing this I keep myself motivated during a race, and it keeps me from running sluggishly due to my lead.



He also pointed out that running against the clock was tough to do. He felt that if the competition had stayed with him for a good part of the race that he could have run about thirty seconds faster than he did.

Speaking on his competition Wayne said, "Due to the past races I've had with the runners from the opposing teams and also from the times that these runners have turned in I wasn't too worried about them. I was hoping for a team sweep before the race, but this record team performance is just as good."

The rest of this season finds Wayne bidding for the individual title at the New Englands, a good showing at the IC4A's, and a trip to the nationals. After Saturday's performance he appears well on his way to these goals.

STRAIGHT TICKET - Casting votes for only Republicans, President Nixon was an early voter yesterday. For complete results of all local, State and National elections, see the Daily Collegian's special election afternoon edition later today.

Heavy Turnout Paces Races Across Nation

WASHINGTON (AP)-The American voters chose 35 senators, as many governors and a new House of Representatives Tuesday after an angry, bitter campaign in which each side accused the other of spreading fear among the people.

President Nixon, whose campaign motorcade at San Jose, Calif., became involved in a rock throwing incident, put it urgently:

"The time has come to draw the line. The time has come for the great silent majority of Americans, of all ages and every political persuasion, to stand up and be counted against appeasement of the rock throwers and obscenity shouters."

The Democrats brought out Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, who may be running for president against Nixon in 1972, to "respond to the Republican tactics of fear and division."

"How dare they tell us that this party is less devoted or less courageous in maintaining American principles and values than they are themselves?" asked Muskie. "This is nonsense."

"And what contempt they must have for the decency and sense of the American people to talk to them that way."

Weather was a factor as always, in the Tuesday turnout. In many areas the vote was heavy; in others, rain tended to keep down the volume.

Nixon voted at San Clemente, Calif., at a grade school near the Western White House.

Later, talking to reporters, Nixon noted that the party holding the White House traditionally loses substantially in congressional balloting in off year elections.

"We will do better than that," he predicted.

During the months long campaign Muskie and other Democrats came out with assertions that under Nixon the nation has suffered continuing inflation, a growth of unemployment and other economic setbacks.

Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, who rounded out the Republicans' one two punch with Nixon, called the Democrats' accusations "the kind of fear or scare tactics that they constantly accuse me of using."

Nixon and Agnew traveled thousands of miles to sway the voters in what the President called "probably the most important and decisive" election in the nation's history. But on this election day there appeared widespread agreement that the Democrats were retaining control of Congress and perhaps picking up a few governorships.

The Republican effort was centered on the Senate, where the President's party would have had to pick up a net gain of seven seats to takeover control.

It is the Senate which has been the source of many troubles for Nixon. It rejected two of his Supreme Court nominees cut back his antiballistic missile plan, increased some appropriations beyond the points he felt desirable, and was the center of opposition for his policies at home and abroad, in Vietnam and elsewhere.

Democrats now outnumber Republicans in the Senate 57 to 43, and in the House, 243 to 187.

Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien declared his party will "maintain our position in the House, will continue to have a majority in the Senate and will have a significant gain in governorships."

Democrats went into Tuesday's election with 18 governorships, the Republicans with 32.

A year ago there was Republican talk of capturing the Senate in 1970 and as late as several weeks ago there was still talks of sharply cutting down the Democratic majority there. But Herbert G. Klein, the Nixon administration communications chief, was saying in the final days: "If we break even it would be pretty good."

Republican National Chairman Rogers C.B. Morton said: "We will have a victory...if we hold our own or do well in the Senate, and break the tradition of losing in off year elections in the House."

All across the country Nixon and Agnew called for law and order, and urged that candidates be weighed in that scale. From the Democrats came a stream of claims that the Republicans have proved themselves insensitive to unemployment and rising prices.

AFL—CIO President George Meany joined the attacks on the administration, declaring:

"They should tell it like it is. There is no economic upturn in sight...there has not been an improvement and there is no indication that there is going to be an improvement."

Democratic Chairman O'Brien said the election is "in a sense a referendum on the administration, its policy and its records-the President and the vice president."

The bitterness of some of the 1970 campaigning was reflected in the fact that formal charges of dirty campaigning in Senate contests more than doubled this year.

The Early Returns

Ted, Sarge, Win

Governor Francis W. Sargent was elected to his first full - term Boston's mayor Kevin H. White. With 832 out of 1200 precincts reporting, the Governor held a 340,111 to 286, 816 vote lead.

For final election totals in this and all other state elections, see the MDC election special later today.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy led a string of victorious Democratic incumbents in the State by scoring a landslide victory over former State GOP Chairman Josiah Spaulding. Kennedy led Spaulding 329,873 to 182,724 with 36% of precincts reporting last night.

Attorney General Robert H. Quinn won reelection over his Republican challenger, Donald Conn by nearly a three to two margin.

The same margin was enjoyed by State Auditor Thaddeus T. Buczko, who beat the GOP's Frank Bucci.

In other lower constitutional office races, incumbent Democratic Secretary of State John F. X. Davoren beat Republican Mrs. Mary B. Newman and the incumbent State Treasurer Democrat Robert Crane, topped Republican Fred Harnon.

The only solid victory won by Congressional candidates in Massachusetts yesterday was by Mrs. Louise Day Hicks, who piled up a huge early lead over two challengers and then coasted to victory. She totaled 50,419 votes to 17,317 for Republican Lawrence Curtis and Independent Robert Gouton's 17,494 votes.

In another major contest, Father Robert Drinan appeared to win the third Congressional district battle. With more than half of the returns in, he had totaled 24,174 to John McGlennon's 20,163 and sticker candidate and incumbent Phillip J. Philbin's 5,684.

With only a scattering of returns in, Democratic Challenger Gerald Studds led incumbent Republican Congressman Hastings Keith in the 12th district race, 9216-6815.

Congresswoman Margret Heckler appeared to win reelection over democratic challenger Bertrum Yaffee, as she led 18,413 to 12,727 with about half of the votes counted.

Republican Representative F. Bradford Morse led his democratic rival David Williams 36,125 to 19,125 with less than half of the fifth district votes counted.

In the seventh district, Representative Torbett McDonald appeared to beat GOP challenger Gordon Hughes, and led 4,208 to 1,631 early last night.

Harold Donahue trailed his Republican rival Howard Miller 8,607 to 7,889 early last night.

The following Congressmen ran unopposed: Silvio Conte, first district, Edward P. Boland, second district, Thomas P. O'Neil, eighth district and James Burke, eleventh district.

For final results on these contests, see the final edition of the MDC this afternoon.

VOTING IN AMHERST and in the rest of the state was unusally heavy yesterday, as fair weather and hotly contested races made the off-year turnout the heaviest in a decade. (MDC photo by Ed Fenwick)

CONSERVATIVE VICTOR James Buckley of New York won an upset senatorial victory in New York, as two liberals Richard Ottinger and Charles Goodell split enough votes to allow a Buckley win.

Dems Control Senate Gore Looses In Tenn.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Democrats recaptured control of the Senate today, but Conservative James L. Buckley-who had the political blessing of the White House-scored a major victory in New York, and Republican William E. Brock III wrested a Tennessee seat from the Democrats and Albert Gore.

While Buckley's cloak was conservative, his commitment was Republican. He defeated Rep. Richard Ottinger, a Democrat, and far outdistanced the appointed incumbent, Republican Sen. Charles E. Goodell.

It was Buckley's 40 per cent, Ottinger 36, with 83 per cent of the New York vote tallied.

Buckley's was the patented administration campaign: law and order, loyalty to the White House, foreign policy support.

It led Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to renounce Goodell, term him a "radical liberal," and help raise funds for the Conservative entry. And it led the White House to declare that while President Nixon would make no endorsement in New York, he appreciated Buckley's support.

The GOP gained, too, in a three way struggle in Connecticut, and in a Maryland upset.

But Democrat Adlai E. Stevenson III captured a Republican held Senate seat in Illinois, and Rep. John V. Tunney led for another in California.

Returns from Tuesday's balloting signaled a gain of perhaps two seats in the Republican Senate minority.

That broke the off year pattern of losses by the party of a President. But the White House was sure to savor especially the Buckley win in New York, and that of Brock in Tennessee.

The Wyoming re-election of Sen. Gale W. McGee assured the Democrats the 51 votes it will take to elect the leadership and control the committee chairmanships in the new 92nd Congress.

Republican Rep. J. Glenn Beall Jr. defeated Sen. Joseph D. Tydings in a Maryland upset. It was a night of political revenge for Beall, who won back a seat his father lost to Tydings six years ago.

But if administration campaign tactics scored a triumph in New York and a success in Tennessee, they did not appear to be succeeding in California, where Democrat Tunney faced a late verbal barrage, prompted by the rock and egg throwing incident that marked Nixon's campaign visit to San Jose.

Republican Sen. George Murphy made the most of it, Nixon personified the issue and the incident.

But with 8 per cent of the vote tallied, Tunney had 54 per cent, Murphy 44 per cent. CBS projected a Tunney victory.

A hangover isn't funny
A hangover can be just about the most distressing combination of pain, nausea, depression and fatigue you ever woke up with. Simple headache tablets or alkalizers alone can't do the whole job. Cushing Spoke About God In Last Moments

BOSTON (AP) - The last words of Richard Cardinal Cushing "were about God" says his successor, Archbishop Humberto S. Medeiros. "We prayed together and he went to sleep," said the red eyed, weary archbishop, who said Cushing last spoke with him about an hour before he died Monday afternoon. "It was a peaceful passing."

The body of the blacksmith's son who became a prince of the Roman Catholic Church was to be taken Tuesday afternoon to Holy Cross Cathedral to lie in state until the funeral Saturday.

A chancery spokesman said plans are to have the cathedral open around the clock until Saturday.

The earthy, blunt spoken, 75 year old cardinal, hospitalized often in recent years for cancer and other ailments, died in the chancery bedroom that had been his for a quarter century.

John Cardinal Wright, the Vatican official who once served as auxiliary bishop of Boston under Cushing, was to deliver the eulogy at Saturday's services.

Wright was the first of an expected host of church notables to arrive for Saturday's funeral Mass at the cathedral, to be concelebrated by Archbishop Luigi Raimondi, the apostolic delegate to Washington, aided by bishops in the "province"-the other New England states except Connecticut.

Burial was scheduled at St. Coletta School in Hanover which Cushing established for retarded children.

All the parishes in the Boston archdiocese Tuesday began to drape their churches in black and schedule masses for the repose of the cardinal's soul.

The white haired, gravel voiced cardinal, a longtime friend of the late President John F. Kennedy and his family, stepped down as archbishop Oct. 7 because of ill health.

After Archbishop Medeiros took over, Cushing continued to live in the second floor bedroom which had been rigged up with oxygen tanks and other hospital gear to aid his respiratory troubles in recent years.

Archbishop Medeiros, who said he knelt beside the cardinal's bed to pray with him for the last time, said Cushing had been in good spirits when he arose Sunday night for a stroll in the hall outside his room.

"But he was very sick as you all know," the archbishop said. "He was a very brave man." The South Boston born cardinal had headed the nation's second largest see, numbering 1.8 million Roman Catholics, since 1944, and had been elevated to cardinal in 1958 by Pope John XXIII.

Cushing had undergone surgery in 1956 for removal of a cancerous kidney, and five years ago had a portion of his intestine removed because of polyps. He also had been hospitalized because of emphysema, asthma and several broken ribs sustained in a fall.

B.C. Mass For Honored Son

NEWTON, Mass (AP) - A Mass of Resurrection for Richard Cardinal Cushing was celebrated Tuesday noon on the campus of Boston College-the school the young Cushing left 55 years ago to become a priest.

The Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, S.J., college president, was chief concelebrant. The Rev. Francis B McManus, S.J., secretary of the college, read the homily.

"Like his Captain and King," Father McManus said of the late cardinal, who died Monday at the age of 75, "his was a life of toil without counting the cost, labor seeking no reward, and suffering without complaint. He knew that there was no crown without a cross, no joy without antecedent sorrow, and no resurrection without a previous Calvary."

"Let us not forget Cardinal Cushing in death," Father McManus concluded. "With full confidence we can say of him what he said of his eulogy of Cardinal O'Connell on April 28, 1944: 'Behold the great high priest who in his day pleased God.'"

The funeral Mass for the former archbishop of the Boston diocese will be held Saturday at Holy Cross Cathedral.

Army Engineer Debate Set

Professor Lincoln P. Bower of Amherst College will deliver a public lecture entitled "Crisis in the Connecticut Valley" Thursday at 3 p.m. in room 203 Holdsworth Hall.

During the past year the U.S. Corps of Army Engineers published preliminary summaries of short and long term development plans for the entire Connecticut River Basin. These plans involve flood control, impounding water in tributaries for augmenting the river during low flow periods, providing water for diversion to the eastern Massachusetts reservoir system, and providing more water for existing and projected power plants.

While these plans are made to seem beneficial to society, Professor Lincoln P. Brower of Amherst College will present his views as a professional biologist on the cost-benefit ratio to the total environment of the Connecticut River Valley.

Whole Valleys would be despoiled, restoration of the wild salmon and shad runs would be made dubious, the river would have tides and in places flow backwards, and the countryside would be laced with huge power lines. One clash between environmental and economic considerations is exemplified by Western Mass. Electric Co.'s present efforts to push a high voltage transmission line through the major recreational area of the proposed Mount Holyoke National Park.

Home Ec. Holds Seminars On "Issues For The '70's"

The School of Home Economics at UMass in cooperation with the Western Massachusetts Home Economics Association, is sponsoring "Issues of the '70's," a professional day for home economists, Tuesday, Nov. 10, in the Lincoln Campus Center.

Students may attend by preregistering at Skinner Hall on Thursday, Nov. 5, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Student registration fee is 25¢ rather than the $5.00 being charged the professional Home Economists.

Keynote speaker of the day is Dr. William Darity, professor of public health at UMass, who will discuss "Contemporary Issues in Human Sexuality and Sex Education." A reactor panel discussion will follow. Members include Dr. Christine Hillman, professor and assistant dean of the School of Home Economics, Dr. Robert Gage of University Health Services, Dr. Warren Schumacher, professor of child development and family relations at the University of Connecticut, and Mr. Noah Edminister, principal of Mahar Regional Junior and Senior High School.

A buffet luncheon in the Campus Center will preceed a series of six afternoon workshops. Each session will meet twice, enabling registrants to attend any two workships. Topics include abortion and contraceptives; cities of the future; consumerism in the 70's; fashions: symptons, syndromes and sensuality; re-evaluation of women's role in society as seen by the Womens Liberation movement; and the importance of the pre-school years in the total development of the individual.

Though designed primarily for professional home economists, the program is open to any interested person. Advance registration is recommended. The $5 fee includes luncheon. Applications and additional information are available from Miss Helen R. Vaznaian, Room 120, Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Infirmary Notes

In an effort to make use of the Health Services more convenient, efficient and less frustrating, the following points of information are offered.

OUT-PATIENT CLINIC HOURS are 8 a.m. to 12 noon and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays. The clinic does not operate with a full staff on weekends. Only urgent problems are seen on Saturday from 8 to 12 a.m. However, emergency care is available at any time.

APPOINTMENTS can be made in advance with a physician of your choice by calling 5-0057.

VISITING HOURS are weekdays: one visitor per patient, 6:30 to 8:00 p.m., Saturdays and Sundays: 3:15 to 4:30 p.m. and 6:30 to 8:00 p.m. To reach students who are in-patients, the public telephone number is 256-6804.

BUSINESS OFFICE. Questions relating to insurance or payment of bills are referred to the Health Services Business Office. Students are requested to call during regular business hours during the week as the office is closed weekends and evenings.

Graduate Study Prompted By Burn

Thursday, Gamma Sigma Sigma will present a program on international study opportunities at 8 p.m. in rooms 168-170-172 of the Campus Center. The program will include a film on UMass international programs and discussions with students who have lived and studied abroad.

Mrs. Barbara Burn, Director of the International Programs Office, will explain procedures for study abroad and describe some of the many programs, including a special exchange for women physical education majors which offers a year in a college of physical education in England.

Rapidly increasing numbers of UMass students are going abroad for study and other programs. Last summer, according to estimates by the International Programs Office, more than three hundred went to Europe. Included were some 35 students in the Madrid Summer Seminar, 13 in the new summer Freiburg Institute, more than 40 in the new program in French language, culture, and literature at Pau in southwest France, some 120 students in the Oxford Summer Seminar, and 65 students in the Bologna Program in Italy. Still other students went abroad to work or merely to travel.

During the current academic year more than 20 students will be at the University of Caens in Normandy, France, and eight education students will be at the New University of Ulster in the UMass exchange program with that university. The UMass, Boston program in Paris admitted four UMass, Amherst students. The Freiburg Program has its largest enrollment ever, 29 students, including two in the program of Field Studies in Anthropology associated with the Freiburg Program. Two UMass students are studying in Paris under a new arrangement through which a special UMass consultant in Paris advises students and helps them enroll in courses that fit their interests and academic needs.

Apart from official UMass "programs", many students are attending universities abroad – 8 in Great Britain, 7 in Israel, 1 in Cairo, 2 in Vienna, and several in Spain – mostly on an individual basis. With information and assistance from the International Programs Office they were able to select a foreign university and get admitted to it, and in most cases pay no more for their year abroad than a year in Amherst.

To ensure getting credit for study abroad and eligibility for financial aid through the Financial Aid Office, all undergraduates must inform the International Programs Office of their overseas study plans.

An open figure drawing class is being held on Monday and Wednesday evenings from 7:30 to 9:30 in Marshall Annex (second floor). The cost per student is 50 cents per meeting to cover the cost of the model.

Marshall Annex is opposite Hasbrouck near Worcester Dining Commons.

The other odor
Even bathing every day can't stop it.

Feminine odor starts internally, and no amount of bathing can remove it. Soap and water simply can't reach the area where the odor starts.

That's the reason you need Norforms®... the second deodorant. These tiny internal suppositories kill germs—stop odor effectively yet safely. In fact, gentle, doctor-tested Norforms are so safe and easy to use, you can use them as often as necessary.

No bath or shower can give you Norforms' protection. Get Norforms, and you'll feel secure and odorfree for hours.

You Can Have A Vacation

Washington--Political campaigns are a very exhausting business, not only for the candidates who run for office, but also for the voters who have to listen to them speak.

Most political candidates, winners as well as losers, take off a week or two to rest up from their physically grueling experience. And they're probably entitled to it.

But what about the person who has been bombarded day and night for the past two months with political commercials, newspaper advertisements, speeches, charges, countercharges, fund appeals, rallies, rhetoric, hyperbole, slogans and dirty pool? No one thinks of him after the election. He is just supposed to pick up where he left off as if nothing happened.

Well, I'm happy to announce that for the first time in an election year the voter's welfare is being taken into consideration by somebody.

By the powers vested in me as an American citizen, I am giving all those exposed to the 1970 political campaign a week's vacation.

During that week, no one has to read any political story, watch any elected official or loser on television or discuss with anyone the great political issues that are tearing at the very fabric of our society.

This means that you do not have to watch President Nixon, Vice President Agnew, Democratic Chairman Lawrence O'Brien, Sen. William Fulbright or Hubert Humphrey on televisionfor seven days. You can still watch Martha Mitchell if you want to, because most doctors believe that five minutes of seeing Mrs. Mitchell on television is worth a week of sun in the Virgin Islands.

You do not have to read any of the political pundits who will explain what happened on election day, nor will you have to study the in-depth analysis by the pollsters as to why the Jewish people voted the way they did in New York, the Italians in Chicago, the Mexicans in Los Angeles, the blacks in Birmingham, Ala., and the WASPS in Grosse Pointe, Mich.

You can forget about the cover stories in Time, Newsweek and U.S. News and World Report, and you can tune out any radio program that starts "A recount was demanded in .."

For one week you can fish, swim, ski, play golf, read a good fiction book, listen to music and go see an X-rated movie and forget anything that was said during the past two months in the political campaigns. You might as well because the politicians elected to public office are certainly going to forget it as soon as they come back from their vacations.

During the next seven days, take your children to a ball game, your wife to a restaurant, your girlfriend away for a weekend. If you're a woman, bake a cake, go to a museum, buy a pair of boots and go away with your boyfriend for a weekend.

You, as a voter, a consumer, a TV watcher, a newspaper reader, have earned this vacation as much as anyone who ran for office. Enjoy your seven-day furlough from politics. Believe me, if I had the power I'd give you more.

CAPP UNCAPPED...When hecklers did a "Freaks for Capp" routine during Cartoonist Al Capp's appearance at UCal-San Diego, Li'l Abner's father walked out on the 2,000 persons gathered to hear him.

After he was 15 minutes into his monologue, Capp left the stage. "This is the first time I have left an audience and I've been on 278 college campuses. This is the most rude treatment I have ever received."

The hecklers numbered 30, according to the Triton Times, campus newspaper. They were identified as students in a communications class (the instructor's name is Wilde-wild, eh?).

The Senior Citizen of Dog Patch did return to "rap" with about a third of the audience who had waited to see if he would.

ALL YA GOTTA ADD IS LUV...is what UBridgeport (Conn.) has decided. The Scribe headlined the story with "Dorm Presidents Present Love Sunday." And what a difference a comma would make!

The intelligence was that dormitory prexies decided to relieve the chronic complaint of never having anything to do on Sunday afternoons. So, they would have a love-in of free ice cream, athletic (?) events, games (?) and novelties (?) for all.

Ice cream we can understand.

NO 18-YEAR-OLD VOTE is a startling statement during an election year...especially when it comes from a candidate for Congress.

Hartford Mayor Ann Uccello made the statement in an interview with the Trinity Tripod.

And here's her even more surprising reason: "Students are susceptible to the views of their college professors."

She favors a unified voting age of 20, across the nation.

BILLY GRAHAM is having a rough time of it on the campus at Louisiana State University, New Orleans. A continuing barrage of news items and editorial commentary in The Daily Reveille had indicated a confrontation to get the world-renowned evangelist to declare himself on the Vietnam War.

When he appeared in the LSU stadium for a monster rally of some 50,000 persons during a week-long revival, Mr. Graham was presented with a petition by a group calling itself, "Clergy and Congregations for Peace." A total of 2,659 names supported a plea that Mr. Graham use his influence toward peace in Vietnam. The petition was received by Graham's campaign chairman.

Meanwhile, another "ad hoc" group was refused audience to "rap" with Graham about local religious discrimination. They were told that "The purpose of the Crusade is not progress of churches but for saving souls."

One of the ad hockers accused the Crusade of taking political stands only when they agree with its own philosophy.

"I say Billy Graham does no good. He only gives early answers to complex problems."

The spokesman added he was told by a number of the Crusade team that "If you protest against the Crusade, you protest against God."

Singing Beach Blues

It's kind of warm today, maybe I shouldn't have worn a sweater. I'll take it off when I get home. Sometimes the freaks say they're the hope of tomorrow I wonder who told them. What they don't realize that right now there are more of them than there are of us which means that if we start anything then they'll step on us. But they're screwed up worse than we are anybody who would want to spend his life putting the same little bolt in the same little hole for eight hours a day even if you do get $4.50 an hour and overtime on weekends. Even the poor guys who are building the library don't know what they're doing. Ever since I was a little kid I wanted to work on construction and drive a bull-dozer and pour cement and things. Wonder if they get a good feeling when they finish a real big building. Girls with no bras are either phonies or crazy no they are all phonies. The flowers that just rippled and bounced on that girl's shirt nearly killed me. Do they know what they're doing? Who said I did anyway. At least I can function nowadays. Mornings used to be bad but so did the afternoons and nights too for that matter. Sometimes I wonder how everyone does it just getting up and going through the day. Do they feel the same way that they can't go through the day without practically dying because they have no one? Maybe that's why the freaks can be freaks and stand it. They live for it. Maybe the football players live for football so what the hell am I living for? The first few months were the hardest because she was still so close. She is still on the other end of the telephone. I could pick it up and call her but now she is so far away I wonder if I'll ever be the same anymore. What happened to fall this year? Even the buildings don't smell like school. It used to be that once you got back into school in the fall when you were a little kid you could smell the newness but maybe it was just the floor wax or the boxes of new crayons or just the building because you were back indoors for the first time all summer. I bet I know what it is because there aren't any trees that I walk by on the way home. At least last year there were a lot of trees and I could see that the leaves were beginning to turn brown and then fall off and make big piles over the ground remember what it was like last year walking to Amherst with the air force and buying wine and a big loaf of French bread and coming back and talking until it was late. That crazy kid still thinks my name is Frodo but that just goes to show you what everyone always said that if you look like you know what you're doing then no one will bother you and boy is that true. But the tricky part is that you can look like you know what you're doing and then you find out that you don't have any idea why or how come. That happens to me all the time if there's one thing I'd like to have happen to me it's to feel I know what I'm doing and really be sure because I do know. You have to be complete to feel that though and you're never really complete unless you have someone who cares if you care about what you're doing. But the whole thing is so crazy because now I think I have a better idea of what I'm doing and I know I never used to when I was alone and it scares me because someday I may snap awake and it's going to be really bad and I don't know what I'm going to do. Who turns on the lights in the tunnel because he's doing a rotten job the other night he turned on the wrong side from the side he usually turns on. That tunnel is a great place to sit and talk to people you can whistle like a bird in there and it's almost as good as whistling in the Campus Center garage which is pretty spooky especially when someone whistles back and you can't see them. You can have a lot of fun around here just goofing around like lying on the pyramids in Southwest and looking up at the sky but it's best when there is a low fog flying by the tops of the towers because then the towers seem to be falling in on you and you can get pretty scared but I never do because my friend and I sat there one night mute and he told me all about how he and his friends were flying down a hill on a toboggan once and they almost went out on the turnpike but they hit a pile of logs and went flying up in the air and landed on their sides but still sitting in the toboggan. Once I almost lost my face when I was on a toboggan in a parking lot covered with ice and the rope tied to the bumper of the car snapped and it all flew back in my face nylon rope that stretches like warm licorice and it hit me and put long red welts all over my face. The weather is too warm everyone says that but the Farmer's Almanac said we're going to have a very cold winter and it will start in early November and last a long time and I can feel that I'm going to be very cold.

Orgone Revolution

To the Editor:

Wilhelm Reich once said, "Love, work, and knowledge are the well-springs of our life. They should also govern it." Reich who founded the Orgone Institute in New York in 1942 did research and wrote volumes on how sexual repression destroys the individual and leads to facism.

In 1954, the Federal Food and Drug Administration initiated a complaint for an injunction against Reich and the Reich Foundation designed to discredit him. Reich refused to be a "defendant" in matters that involved basic natural research. He was eventually sent to the Federal Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. Wilhelm Reich died there 13 years ago today.

His work goes on, you can jail a revolutionary but you can't jail the revolution.

Security Crisis

Dr. Oswald Tippo
Chancellor
Whitmore Building
U. of Mass.
Amherst, Ma. 01002

Dear Sir:

We are sophomores at this University. Over the past year and a half we have watched a steady increase in criminal incidence within our dorms and on this campus. Because of the recent rash of burglary, robbery, armed robbery, assault and battery, assault with intent to commit bodily injury, sexual assault, illegal possession of firearms, combined with two occurrences of one particular Dean's "involvement", we feel that the situation has reached a level of crisis. Where is the protection you are supposed to provide? YOU say that funds are not available. However, according to the central Voice, forty-five thousand dollars have been appropriated by the state legislature for the renovation of Whitmore. Is the renovation of Whitmore more important than the protection of students?

In the recent past you have asked heads of residences for alternate security proposals. We know that many such proposals have crossed your desk. Have they merely crossed your desk? We have two and a half years left at this University. If necessary we will spend that time writing every legislator of the General Court of the Commonwealth until the security problem on this campus is rectified.

Most sincerely,
LINCOLN C. SOULE

The Artist As The Enemy Of The State

By MIHAJLO MIHAJLOV

NOVI SAD, Yugoslavia-To pose the question of why a man who creates novels, songs, poems, music or paintings is considered the potential enemy of the social system under which he lives seems strange to me. No one who lives in a totalitarian society such as, say, the Chinese or the Soviet, would ask the question. It is clear without any explanation.

It is possible that there are those who do not understand why a campaign was launched against Pasternak and his novel, "Doctor Zhivago"? Does anyone still wonder why Zhivago has not yet been published in Soviet Russia? How about Aleksandr Solzhenitzyn? It is a miracle that Solzhenitsyn is even alive. And free! One only needs to recall the martyrs of Russian literature of the last half-century; the names of those hundreds and hundreds killed or sent to forced-labor camps-Russian writers, painters, even musicians-to see why it is easy to be indignant when someone still asks why!

I will try to explain something which seems self-explanatory.

The great majority of artists who lost their lives in prison camps or those who are still there, like Andrei Sinyavsky, have never been political opponents of the regime in the Western sense. They wrote, composed music, painted. Yet the powerful propaganda machine of those inauthority tried to picture them as agents of imperialism, as dangerous enemies.

Looked at from the standpoint of maintaining a totalitarian dictatorship, the persecution of artists is wholly justified. One true artist is more dangerous to a totalitarian regime than any political adversary.

I repeat: Pasternak, Sinyavsky, Solzhenitsyn-they really endanger and imperil the dictatorship of the Soviet Communist party.

In order to explain the irreconcilable controversy between authentic art and Communist totalitarianism I will express in a few words the basic spiritual idea on which it is based. The essence is this: the world we live in is very bad. Everywhere there is disease, suffering and injustice. This indicates that there is no reasonable Power above mankind (in case there is one it could only be an evil God, against whom it would be necessary to fight). There is only Nature, which is hostile toward man. It is possible to create a paradise on earth. But to control nature one must submit to reason and discipline unorganized and imprudent human society. Society is like nature-that is, evil.

Society must first be organized on a reasonable, scientific basis. Such a society can be created only by a group of people, a Party. To be successful the Party must have absolute authority. Thus, power over nature is not possible without totalitarian dictatorship over people. And dictatorship is not possible without power to suppress human souls. The essence of all is power.

What has not been done to tame that most insubordinate reality, the human soul. First, it is demonstrated by erudite tracts that there are no souls-that the more man is subjugated the more free he is, etc., etc. This scholarly wisdom is backed up by crude police methods.

Sometimes, for years, this argument seems to have succeeded but then an imprisoned human soul comes flying into freedom, liberating other souls, smashing the spiritual basis of totalitarian authority.

At the beginning of the century the forerunner of socialist realism, Maxim Gorky, was convinced that, after the Revolution, in a "reasonably organized" Russia there would be at least a hundred writers of genius like Tolstoy. We know how such "organization" of Russia ended. We know of the thousands and thousands of totally untalented Soviet "writers" and "artists" who with their products created on the basis of party directives flood periodicals, exhibitions, concert halls and film theaters in their country.

But art cannot be curbed. Power over human souls may be achieved only by lies. Art is a direct challenge to lies and hostile to the system on which power is based. This why not only the novels of Solzhenitsyn but the music of Prokoflev was attacked in the U.S.S.R. as inimical.

In a way our whole modern era is the enemy of art. We may be made prisoners not only by a one-party system, but by a modern technological society whose only aim is material prosperity. The means of control of human souls are different there than in Communist countries, where power is more open and crude.

The collision of art with a social system is always a collision of freedom against repression, a combat of truth and lies, the struggle of life against deadening mechanism, and to put it into the language of religion-a fight between God and the Devil.

Mihajlo Mihajlov is a Yogoslav writer who has suffered political imprisonment.

Ed Bryant

Clothes Make "The Man" Wealthy

There were three of them. Two were stylishly dressed, one was dressed plainly. Clearly the third girl whose demeanor and dress labeled her as more somber than the other two, was seeking their reassurance. As I watched them, each had a smile on her face, a smile that seem to conceal an iceberg of laughter, the innocent, giddy, oh so American laughter of you average, seventeen year old, attractive, upper to middle middle class American teenybopper teenage girl. It may not sound that way, but I love teenyboppers when they're in form. They make me happy in my own perverse way.

I saw them yesterday in District Court. (By the way, rumors of my own imprisonment were highly exaggerated. The clerk of courts paid my bail last week, so I didn't go to the County Jail after all. If there's anyone still running around Pierpont collecting money to free Ed Bryant, thank you, but it's not necessary.) The three girls were facing charges of ripping off three different stores in Northhampton for clothes. All three ripped off all three stores; I assume they were together. As far as I can figure, they must have been bagged on their third try, and subsequent investigation would have proven them to have hit the others. I really don't think they'd get caught, try again and get caught, and then try a third time with equal lack of success. So they probably would have been clear if they'd stopped after two stores.

I wondered at the phenomenon that brought these girls to court as defendants in a criminal action. Their clothes gave me a clue, as did the charges, which stated that they had been stealing clothes. Thinking back, I remembered going to Wellesley Junior High School, and listening to great tales of larceny among the fashion conscious members of my peerer group. No one thought twice about ripping off stores for clothes. Wellesley is one of the wealthiest communities in the United States, but if Mommy and Daddy would only buy you ten sweaters, then you simply steal numbers eleven and twelve. Gotta have clothes, man. Gotta get some new clothes.

We live in a country with a consumption oriented economy. The emphasis is on owning more and more and more and more ad nauseum. This prevents adults from true freedom, because someone is always breathing hot on your pursestrings. But for a kid, who has youth as an excuse and no false dignity to maintain in the community, this is an invitation to thievery. Do not ask for whom the cash register tolls; it tolls for Madison Avenue. If you can be induced to consume on such exorbitant levels, and busted for thefts committed under the influence of Madison Avenue, it would seem that you lose both ways.

It's not as bad as I make it sound, though. While fashion has done damnably well up until now, the refusal of women to accept the midi is an encouraging sign that America is finally getting hip to the sinister temptresses who seek to encourage wanton spending and consumption. Straight garb of today is yesterday hippie clothes with a price tag. Let then try to make denim expensive. That's the basic item in every freak's wardrobe, today, and they already sell it in clothing stores, only it's cheap, and you can wear it next year too. Peace.

Grad Senate Boosts Bromery Appointment

By ROBERT McDONNELL
Graduate Senate Reporter

In its semi-weekly meeting Monday night, the Graduate Senate unanimously endorsed the immediate appointment of Dr. Randolph W. Bromery as Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs. The feeling of the Senate was that his excellent qualifications coupled with his desire to begin significant changes in the structure of student-administration relations at once, deemed his appointment be made immediately. Another resolution, giving further support to the motion, was passed. It instructed the graduate student members of any search committee formed to support Dr. Bromery's appointment.

A number of speakers addressed the Senate on topics of concern to both it and the University Community as a whole.

Dr. Frank Kaminsky, Department of Industrial Engineering, discussed the Connecticut River Flood Control Project, and especially the Meadow Dam on the Deerfield River. The Senate voted to sponsor an open hearing on the proposal featuring a debate between the Army Corps of Engineers and the Deerfield River Valley Conservation Association.

Jack Richardson, head of residence in Thatcher House, spoke on the deteriorating security situation on campus this semester. He noted the increases in felonious assault and armed robbery occurring. The Senate will vote on giving support to the security proposal now in the hands of Dr. Tippo at its next meeting.

Paul Killam reported on the progress of married student housing. North Village is opening November 15th and details on leases are still being ironed out.

Felipe Consuegra reported that initial plans have been completed for the establishment of a day care center. The Senate in collaboration with the Infirmary, Departments of Psychology and Human Development, and the Undergraduate Senate has presented a preliminary proposal to the administration and action is now awaited.

President Dan Collins read a statement of goals of the Graduate Student Senate which was presented to the Graduate Council. The statement concerned proposals and recommendations on a number of areas including (1) Status of graduate education at the University; (2) Teaching assistants, and (3) Quality of graduate student life.

Israeli Press Editor Speaks On Nation Here Tomorrow

Meron Medzini, Director of the Israel Government Press Office in Jerusalem, will deliver a lecture on "Israel Today" tomorrow at 8 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. UMass is the last stop on his national speaking tour sponsored by the Israel Government Tourist Office in Boston, EL AL Israeli National Airlines, and the Peter Pan Travel Service.

A 25-minute color film with narration will be shown at the lecture. Mr Medzini is expected to speak on controversial questions of modern Israel and will answer questions after his presentation.

Meron Medzini was born in Jerusalem in 1932. He was educated in schools in Jerusalem and Haifa. Upon graduation from high school he joined the Israeli army and served as an infantry officer. He was demobilized in 1954 with the rank of first lieutenant and proceeded to the United States to take up university studies. He enrolled at the City College of New York where he majored in Government and from where he was graduated Magna Cum Laude with special honors in Government in 1957. He was also elected to Phi Betta Kappa.

In 1957 Mr. Medzini joined the staff of the Embassy of Israel in Washington and for two years served as a press officer dealing with various phases of information. At the same time he continued his graduate studies and received an M.A. degree from Georgetown University in Washington D.C.

In 1959 he won a scholarship to Harvard University and for the next three years he did graduate work in the field of International Relations and History of the Far East for which he was awarded a Ph.D degree.

Returning to Israel he has since pursued two carrers, in government and in academic work. In 1962 he joined the staff of the Prime Minister's Office and was appointed Director of the Israel Government Press Office in Jerusalem. In this capacity he is responsible for Government contact with the local and the foreign press.

Students Against Genocide Ready

PETITION TO THE UNITED NATIONS

In 1948, the United Nations ratified the Declaration of Human Rights and the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide.

Genocide is defined by Article 11 of the Genocide Convention as acts which are committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national ethnic, racial or religious group as such by causing mental or bodily harm to members of the group, deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or part, etc.

The United States' government has refused to ratify these U.N. documents. On November 15 the "Petition to the United Nations" will be presented to the U.N. Among the initial signers are Shirley Chisom, Ossie Davis, Ruby Dee, Dick Gregory, William L. Patterson and Bobby Seale. The petition states in part: "We assert that the Genocide Convention has been flagrantly violated by the Government of the United States....On the basis of simple justice, it is time for the United Nations to call for universal action, and to apply economic and political sanctions against the United States until such time as the United States government shall abide by the Genocide Convention and the Declaration of Human Rights."

This petition has been endorsed by many peace and labor groups. This Thursday, November 5, there will be a meeting in the S.U. Dining rooms behind the ballroom at 7 o'clock to plan the circulation of this petition.

THE MOST MEMORABLE CONCERT IN THE HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS WILL OCCUR AT THE CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

The second of the Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series features the Virtuosi di Roma under its conductor Renato Fasano. Maestro Fasano founded this group some two decades ago in order to promote the vast literature of Italian music of the past three centuries and brings their repertoire for the first time to the UMass campus.

Noted Italian Chamber Orchestra To Present Two Concerts In Bowker

Celebrity Series will present the famed Virtuosi di Roma in two entirely different programs in Bowker Auditorium at the Amherst campus Nov. 5 and 6 at 8 p.m.

This most distinguished Italian chamber music ensemble was founded during the 1947/48 season by its present Music Director, Renato Fasano, for the purpose of making known rare Italian musical masterpieces of the past. At the same time, Maestro Fasano established the Piccolo Teatro Musicale of the City of Rome, which together with Virtuosi di Roma forms the Collegium Musicum Italicum.

Since its founding, Virtuosi di Roma has performed more than 1500 concerts throughout Italy, the Soviet Union, South America and has made a dozen transcontinental tours of the United States. The late Arturo Toscanini said to the Virtuosi di Roma: "You are the greatest instrumental ensemble of this age and your playing brought me exquisite pleasure."

For its first visit to the University, the Virtuosi di Roma will perform the following works on Thursday evening, Nov. 5: Sonata for Strings in A Major by Albinoni; Two Concerti Grossi, Opus 6 by Corelli; Concerto for Strings in E Flat Major by Paisiello; Concerto for Oboe, Strings and Harpsichord by Marcello; and Concerto for Strings and Harpsichord in A Major by Vivaldi. The program for the final concert on Friday evening, Nov. 6 will include three Concerti Grossi, Opus 6 by Corelli and The Four Seasons by Vivaldi.

FINE ARTS

Reserved tickets for these events are priced at $1 to $3 andmay be obtained through the University Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before each concert.

Fine Arts Staff Recruits . . .

The Fine Arts Staff is looking for new members. If you are interested in writing features, doing interviews, or reviews of any sorts all related to the Arts in the Five College Area contact Robert Nesti in the Collegian Office. Also anyone interested in doing page lay-out will be welcome. The staff is being reorganized so new ideas will be appreciated.

Rare Earth In, Feliciano Out

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

Rare Earth, the popular white soul group, will play with Blues Image at the Friday night Homecoming concert as Jose Feliciano will be unable to complete the date, a spokeswoman from the Homecoming committee said yesterday. This change, she continued, has brought a change in the ticket price to $2.25.

Feliciano's cancelling was due to medical reasons which have cancelled all his East Coast appearances, this reporter was told.

Rare Earth records for Motown Records on their own Rare Earth Label and now have two albums on the market. Last summer their single "Get Ready" was a huge hit and their latest album "Ecology" has just been released.

Tickets for this concert should go on sale this Thursday or Friday, the spokeswoman said. Tickets for the Saturday concert featuring Traffic and the Sunday afternoon "peace Parade" are on sale this morning in the Student Union Box Office.

* * * * *

If the concerts aren't for you, there is enough happening elsewhere in the Five College Area to provide a good evening out. Here on campus the Fine Arts Council is presenting the Operetta Guild's production of Your Own Thing November 12-15. This rock musical was the first off-Broadway show to win the New York Drama Critics Award for best musical. The play is suggested by Shakespeare's Twelfth Night and deals with identity crisis.

Down at Mount Holyoke, Thornton Wilder's popular comedy The Skin Of Our Teeth is being presented at the Laboratory Theater. This Pulitzer-prize winning play will be for two weekends, November 6-8 and 12-15.

Over at Smith the popular musical comedy A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum will be performed at the Studio Theater. This show was an immensely popular Broadway hit running over 900 performances and was later made into a very funny film by Beatle's director Richard Lester. It's score is by Stephen Sondheim who also did the lyrics to West Side Story and the score to the current smash Company.

And the Amherst Masquers will be doing Rosencrantz And Guildenstern Are Dead. This play by Tom Stoppard is a very funny treatment of Hamlet as seen through his old college chums. The play won the New York Drama Critics Award and had a successful run a few seasons back.

Meets Tomorrow

Men's Liberation Set To Define Own Goals

An open conversation on Men's Liberation will be held Thursday, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Council Chambers.

Groups involved in a continuing conversation of this kind have begun to spring up all over the country. Some have begun among men who relate to women in women's liberation. Many represent an independent search for ways men may free themselves from rigidly defined social roles, conditioning, and pressure.

Many ideas have been shared in scattered conversations on this campus. Some questions which leaders say may be explored in the open conservation include:

(1) Balance between cooperation and competition, especially around women
(2) Attempts at self-definition by standards other than possessions
(3) Attemps at self-definition by standards other than work roles
(4) Attempts to deal with feelings of status
(5) And finally attempts to get more in touch with both the female yin and the male yang, strengths and weaknesses, receptivity, aggressiveness, joy and sorrow.

Events 'N Comments

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Just taking a few side glances at some recent happenings in the world of sports and offering various comments, wry, witty and worth the paper their printed on, on their significance.

EVENT: The Boston Patriots' problems go on and on as the offense continues to look really awful and head coach Clive Rush is granted a leave of absense because of a potentially serious heart condition.

COMMENT: Optimism reigned high before this season began for the Pats and enthusiasm by the fans was very high after Boston defeated the Miami Dolphins in its opening game. However, since that fine victory the Patriots have dropped six straight contests and, with each succeeding week, seem to lose by bigger scores.

Most of the fault for the poor showing to date appears to lie with the offense and on offense it appears as if its been the line thats been lacking. The ends aren't that great either outside of Ron Sellers of course. The tight ends are only adequate and the split receiver, Bake Turner has been no great shakes since coming over from the New York Jets.

The backfield has three renowned performers in running backs Jim Nance and Carl Garrett and quarterback Joe Kapp. Kapp's performance since arriving in the Boston camp a few weeks back is disappointing, but he deserves more time to get acquainted with the Patriot system and the playing of the game itself, having missed all of pre-season training and a few regular games.

Now the guys in the red, white and blue uniforms have a new interim coach John Mazur, who said yesterday, "I think a team takes on the personality of the coach. We'll find out what sort of personality I am." Should be interesting.

EVENT: The Boston Celtics, dethroned grand champions of the National Basketball Association, appear to be bouncing back and may be only a couple of years away from a return to greatness.

COMMENT: The Celts have won five of their ten games thus far this season, the latest a "breeze" over the Philadelphia 76ers. Set now at the .500 plateau, the Bostonites might be ready to spring into a big winning whirl, as they have a rematch with the 76ers tomorrow night. Led by superb basketball player John Havlicek and exciting new faces Jo Jo White and Dave Cowens, Boston is great to watch and should be in for another winning year as the foundation is set for more Celtic titles.

Mazur Takes Reigns . . .

Rush Quits, Denies 'Leave' Report

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Patriots announced yesterday that head coach Clive Rush had been placed on an indefinite leave of absence for health reasons, but Rush denied it and said he was quitting.

"I resigned at midnight last night," Rush told reporters after Patriots president Billy Sullivan had informed a news conference about the leave of absence and named offensive coach John Mazur as the National Football League team's interim head coach.

"I will never coach this football team again," Rush added.

Sullivan told newsmen that Rush was being placed on leave because of a heart and blood pressure condition and would be relieved of all dutiees connected with the club until his doctor "says he can resume."

He added that the coach, now at the midpoint of a three-year contract estimated to pay him about $40,000 a year, would receive full compensation during his leave.

Rush, asked how his resignation announcement would affect his contract, told reporters: "Pride is worth something."

The coach said he would spend the next few days cleaning out his office at the club's training quarters at Curry College in nearby Milton, then "go fishing."

He left a message with a secretary to answer future calls. The message read:

"It is not true that coach Rush has taken a leave of absence. He has resigned. It's an inaccurate release..."

Sullivan said that despite Rush's statement, the team's position remains the same and the offer of an indefinite leave with full compensation "still stands-absolutely."

Rush came to the Patriots after serving as Weeb Ewbank's offensive coach with the New York Jets for several years and helping them to the Super Bowl championship at the end of the 1968 season. His first Patriots team last year lost its first seven games but came on to finish with a 4-10 record. This year the club is 1-6 to date.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra is not likely to overstep bounds of propriety. Libra is the great romantic. And there are numerous flirtations. But, where the real thing is concerned, Libra demonstrates good taste and a discriminating eye.

ARIES (March 21 - April 20): What appeared to be a signed, sealed and delivered agreement is shaken. Remain calm. Diplomatic approach to a family member brings what you may need. You could use legal guidance.

TAURUS (April 21 - May 20): Postponements unnecessary journey. Be wary with what you put on paper. Some persons may want you to commit yourself. That does not matter; it is what you desire that counts.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Those you care for may perform eccentric actions. Maintain steady pace. Temptation is to overspend. Key is to do what is necessary — in mature manner.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Much of what you want to set in motion is locked. Task needs completion. You cannot go forward while brake is set. Message should become increasingly clear.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Don't waste motion. Some want to make gesture of friendship — accept. But reserve final judgment. Maintain your independence. Be sure promises are backed by written word.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Young persons make demands. Your personal desires may have to be sublimated. Ally is patience. Refuse to be pushed, cajoled or rushed. Remember health resolutions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Sudden actions, new contacts, unique experiences are featured. Forces may be scattered. Don't spread efforts too thin. Take time to review long-range aspirations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Be prepared for confidential information to leak. Protect your interests. Close credibility gap. Know what is happening and why. Relative appears to be misinformed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Don't mix business with pleasure. Cost would prove excessive. Study Scorpio message. Be ready for questions which get to heart of matter. Best to be frank, forthright in answers.

CAPRICORN (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Action centers around occupation, ambitions, civic responsibilities. Cycle is high, but some around you are not prepared. Be aware of major issues. Handle them in direct, personal way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Light touch is essential. Bearing down now would be an error. Conditions around you are subject to abrupt change. Be analytical. Check legal, philosophical aspects of project.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Friends who confide financial problems are not really seeking advice. Later this will become clear. Help only those willing to aid themselves. Key is onus of responsibility. Be realistic.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a square shooter; sincerity and basic honesty are second nature. You have undergone some changes related to opposite sex. Now, you can settle down — especially in domestic and home areas. Change of environment, residence works to your benefit.

UMass Booters Face N.E. Powerhouse Springfield

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

For the first time in many years the eyes of New England soccer will be on the UMass Redman booters this afternoon when they host nationally ranked, annual Northeast powerhouse Springfield College. Today's game has to be rated one of the biggest games of the New England soccer season, as it lines up two of the best skilled, highly touted ballclubs in the area.

The Redmen's chances for a post-season tournament bid may be riding on their performance today, and they know it. The soccermen will have to be well prepared both mentally and physically for the contest in order to pull off an upset. Briefly, here is how the respective teams shape up for the two o'clock encounter.

SPRINGFIELD: The Chiefs enter the game with a fine 6-2-3 record against some stiff competition. Their successes include high-scoring victories versus Bowdoin (4-1), Southern Connecticut (5-1), Colby (6-0) and M.I.T. (9-1), in addition to wins over Wesleyan and Yale.

The visiting booters have also tied a very fine Dartmouth Club, as well as Middlebury, and last Saturday tied Williams College. Their two defeats were at the hands of nationally-ranked Brown and Yankee Conference member UConn.

Currently they are firmly entrenched in the third position in the six state region, with a high scoring explosive team, and a tradition of soccer excellence to maintain. Coach Schmidt has had a great deal of success masterminding Springfield, and brings with him to Amherst a balanced team with several outstanding individual ballplayers.

For his one-two scoring punch on the front line he has leading scorer Pete Montalbano with 12 goals and two assists backed up by sophomore Jim Sadie who scored 13 goals in seven freshman games last year, and who currently has seven goals and three assists.

Also outstanding for the Chiefs, at a halfback position, is co-captain Bill Bonavita, and at fullback the other team leader Craig Lefevre and the coach's son Alex Schmidt. In the goal they will use either one of their rotating goalies, Bob Deleva or Scott Anderson.

MASSACHUSETTS: The Redmen enter this game, their ninth of the current season with only one loss on their record, a 3-2 heartbreaker to Worcester Polytech just a week ago. They have defeated Maine, Boston College, Connecticut, Trinity and Tufts, and tied Yankee Conference rivals Rhode Island and Vermont, for an excellent 5-1-2 slate. Four consecutive weeks have found them in first place in the Conference and fourth place in New England.

The booters have an attack led by senior Duane Brown with seven goals and junior Lindo Alves with five. Marc Cantor and Larry DeFelice have split the third starting position for most of the season, and both are sure to see substantial playing time this afternoon.

At midfield the Redmen will have the same group which has started all eight games as a unit: co-captains Rick Matuszczak and Augie Calheno, with Tony Nunziante. This unit has played well all year at the vital halfback position, backed up by Jeff Hague, Abdu Thyra and Dave Piccus, a trio which has responded well in several key situations this season.

The key to the game however will be how successfully the UMass fullbacks contain the potent Springfield offense. At this position Coach Peter Broaca has a problem many soccer coaches would love to have: he has no less than eight healthy, capable fullbacks, each of which has been used in a starting role at one time or another during the 1970 campaign.

Joe Cerniawski, Dave Ouellette, Dick McCarron, Bobby Grom, Dan Howle, Paul Slack,.Gary Hart and Todd Buck give the Redman mentor a talented pool from which to draw today's four starters. The goal situation for the booters is no less well off, as the booters have standout Bill Leary backed up by veteran netminder Greg Hamilton

UMass would have to be recognized as the underdog in this battle, but the game means a lot to them and Springfield will have no easy afternoon in Amherst. Both squads have lost and tied their last two games, and each will be seeking to resume the winning ways it had earlier in the schedule. The key to a successful season for both teams rests on the outcome of today's game and coach Broaca excitedly claims that his Redmen "will be ready to play."

UMass Runners Challenge 8-2 Central Conn. Team

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

In its final tune-up before the New England's on Monday, the UMass cross country team travels to Central Connecticut this afternoon for its final dual meet on the road this season. Race time is set for 4 p.m. over the 5.2-mile Central Connecticut course.

The Redmen are coming off of a record setting performance at the Yankee Conference championships this past Saturday. Ron Wayne, who won the individual title, and Leo Duart, who finished eighth will not be running today due to exams.

Even with the loss of Wayne and Duart the Redmen still possess strong front running power in the likes of Tom Swain, Larry Paulson and Tom Jasmin. With the absence of Wayne these three should put on quite a battle for the number one Redman position.

Bruce Blackburn, Don Dunsky, Arnie Morse, Rick Barry and Rich Tashjian, who have been running behind the top five men all season, will have the pressure on tomorrow to finish in the top five. Coach Ken O'Brien feels that this pressure to finish high will be good for these runners and will probably aid them in turning in good efforts.

Central Connecticut presents the Redmen with front running power in the likes of captain Walt Thompson and sophomore Mark Goodwin. These two have been neck and neck all season and should be tough on their home course.

Due to the loss of two other varsity runners by ineligability, Central Connecticut will also be employing its top two freshman runners to fill the gap.

With an 8-2 mark, its only two losses coming at the feet of West Point and Providence, Central Connecticut will give the Redmen a good tune-up, for Monday's big race, this afternoon.

Also on the program will be a big confrontation between the UMass frosh have been beaten only once this season and are one of the favorites along with UMass, UConn, and Northeastern in the New England freshman title on Monday.

Notices

QUARTERBACK CLUB-The eighth, of 11 weekly UMass Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheons, will be held at the Newman Center today at 12:15 p.m., to let out promptly at 1:15. A film of the UMass-Vermont game will be shown. Also featured will be the awards for the offensive and defensive players of the week, a scouting report on Holy Cross (UMass' next opponent), a door prize and a raffle of choice game tickets.

* * * * *

FOOTBALL TICKETS-Tickets for the UMass - Holy Cross football game to be played on Saturday in Worcester at H.C.'s Fitton Field, can be purchased at the Boyden ticket office, room 155. The office is open until 6 p.m. daily. Unreserved tickets for this game will cost $2 and reserved tickets will go for $4.

WOMEN'S INTRAMURAL BOWLING-Any girls interested in participating in intramural ten pin bowling should contact Jean Paratore at 549-1219 by Thursday, Nov. 5. There will be a maximum of eight teams that will be able to participate. The entry fee will be $50 (50¢/string for 96 games) per team of six players.

Sroka Named Top Defensive Player

Maine quarterback Sandy Hastings, UMass tackle Bill Sroka and New Hampshire flanker Bob O'Neil have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Hastings, a 6'1 160-lb. sophomore, completed 13 of 30 passes for 230 yards and three touchdowns, including the game-winning 37-yard toss in the closing seconds as Maine beat Northeastern 24-17.

Sroka, a 6'2 225-lb. senior, turned in a terrific all-around performance that limited Vermont to minus 12 yards rushing as UMass toppled the Catamounts 48-6.

O'Neil, a 6' 170-lb. sophomore, caught five passes for 94 yards, including three touchdowns, as UNH moved into a tie for second place in the Conference with a 59-7 win over Rhode Island.

Other nominations were: Offense - quarterback Bob Hopkins UNH split end Brian Herosian UConn, quarterback Earl Olson (Vermont) and quarterback Ken Hughes (UMass); Defense - linebacker Tom Keating (Maine), tackle Nelson Cassavaugh (UNH

Other nominations were: Offense - quarterback Bob Hopkins (UNH), split end Brian Herosian (UConn), quarterback Earl Olson (Vermont) and quarterback Ken Hughes UMass); Defense - linebacker Tom keating (Maine), tackle Nelson Cassavaugh (UNH), cornerback Brian Herosian (UConn) and tackle Tom Mclaughlin (Vermont); Sophomore - split end Dave Paul (Maine), halfback Al Olson (Vermont), halfback Tom Teolis (URI).

It also should be noted here that UMass' Denis Gagnon was selected to this week's Eastern College Athletic Conference all-star team as its kicking specialist. Gagnon, a 6' 175-lb. junior, had his best kicking day ever against Vermont, connecting on field goals of 45 and 46 yards, the latter a Redman record. For the game he scored 12 of UMass winning 48 points.

NEW YORK (AP) - Bob Gibson, the hard throwing Sr. Louis Cardinal's right hander thought to have lost his effectiveness after a slow start last season, was named the Cy Young award winner yesterday as the National League's top pitcher.

Gibson, who finished with a 23-7 record after a 2-3 start, thus joined Sandy Koufax and Denny McLain as the only pitchers to win the award more than once since its inception in 1956.

Getting 23 of the 24 first place votes and the other for second place, Gibson won in a landslide over Gaylord Perry of San Francisco, who got the other top vote of the 24 man Committee of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Gibson, winning the award with a fourth place team - a rarity - was the only pitcher named on all 24 ballots - two writers from each national league city - and totaled 118 points. Perry finished with 51 and Ferguson Jenkins of the Chicago Cubs was third with 16.

Gibson, who will be 35 Monday, won 20 games for the third straight season.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Controversial Curt Flood officially became a member of the Washington Senators yesterday in a 3 for 1 trade, assuring his return to baseball after a year long court battle against the reserve clause.

The announcement of Flood's signing was imminent after the Senators acquired his contract from Philadelphia in a deal that sent first baseman Greg Goosen, outfielder first baseman Gene Martin and pitcher Jeff Terpko to the Phillies.

Dems Sweep Gov., Hold Senate, In Face Of Upsets

Democrats renewed their grip on Congress yesterday and surged to a startling statehouse comeback in a mid term election that awarded Republicans Senate victories in Tennessee, Connecticut and Maryland, gained them a conservative White House ally from New York, but cost them a seat in Illinois.

The Democratic defense produced a divided verdict on President Nixon's law and order campaign thrust, and dashed his fragile hope that Republicans might take over the Senate. House control had never been in doubt.

LONE REPUBLICAN VICTOR- Governor Francis W. Sargent, by defeating Kevin H. White yesterday, became the only major Congressional Office Winner for the Republican Party in Massachusetts.

But the battle for the governorships produced a Democratic sweep of unsuspected proportions. Their candidates turned out Republican governors in an array of state including Pennsylvania, Ohio, Minnesota and Wisconsin-vital political building blocks for the 1972 presidential campaign.

Democrats won 226 House seats and were leading for 30 others. Republicans captured 150 seats and were leading for 29 others. This meant Democrats were on the verge of expanding their House majority by about 10 seats.

Jmaes L. Buckley, the Conservative Party nominee who was embraced by the administration, won a three way New York race, with Democratic Rep. Richard Ottinger his closest challenger. Sen. Charles E. Goodell, the Republican-liberal the administration renounced, trailed far behind.

Rep. William E. Brock, III, ousted veteran Democratic Sen. Albert Gore in Tennessee, an other victory savored by an administration which had campaigned hard there.

Rep. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr. emerged on top of a three way race in Connecticut.

But Adlai E. Stevenson, III withstood a tough law and order attack to sweep Illinois.

And Democratic Rep. John V. Tunney was leading in California, where the Republican campaign, keyed again to law and order, get a dramatic boost when demonstrators threw eggs and rocks at President Nixon's motorcade in San Jose.

Rep. Robert Taft, Jr. was ahead of Howard M. Metzenbaum, the Democratic choice to defend an Ohio Senate seat.

Rep. J. Glenn Beall, Jr. scored a Republican upset over Maryland's Democratic Sen. Joseph D. Tydings.

The unexpected: the massive Democratic swing in governorships, from a slim minority to a potential majority in a single election.

In the biggest states, New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller won Republican re-election to an unprecedented fourth term; California's GOP Gov. Ronald Reagan was comfortably in the lead.

SETTING THE EXAMPLE- New York Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller smiles after voting for himself yesterday. He won his bid for an unprecidented Gubernatorial term by defeating former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg.

Planned Pullout; 19 Voting Age Passed

BOSTON (AP) - Massacnusetts favors a planned withdrawal of America troops from Vietnam rather than immediate withdrawal by about a two to one margin.

With 909 of 2015 precincts reporting, 285,391 voters in Tuesday's election opted for a planned withdrawal. 184,956 called for immediate withdrawal and 77,031 voted for a military victory.

The opinion question was placed on the statewide ballot by the last session of the legislature, which authorized it by statute last May.

Voters also approved a proposed amendment to the state constitution which would lower the voting age in state elections from 21 to 19

With 909 precincts reporting, the vote was 321,291 to 204,566 in favor of the proposal.

The only statewide question rejected by the electorate was a proposal authorizing the legislature to classify and authorize the taxation of property according to use.

Other questions approved propose abolishing the present residency requirement for persons to vote in state elections, and a census to be taken every 10th year to redistrict the state legislature.

A bill proposing an opinion question on the war, asking if voters want American troops pulled out of Vietnam, was sponsoreil by state Senate President Maurice A Donahue.

It was amended during its course through the legislature, coming out as the more complex three part question.

The other four statewide referenda, including the proposal to lower the voting age, require amendments to the state constitution. All the proposed amendments have beena approved by the legislature.

The first constitutional question on the ballot proposed authorizing the legislature to classify real estate according to use and authorize the assessment and taxation of the property at different rates within the different classes.

The proposed amendment also would have permitted the legislature to grant "reasonable" property tax exemptions and abatements.

Under terms of the second question, the one year residency requirement for a person to vote in a state election would be abolished, but a voter would be required to have lived for six months in the town or district in which he claims a right to vote.

The other constitutional question proposed a census to be taken in each town and city in the state in 1971 and every 10th year thereafter

The 1971 census would be the basis for determining the state representative and senatorial districts for the 10 year period beginning Jan 1, 1975.

Each subsequent census would be the basis for determing the districts for the 10 year period beginning with the fourth January following the census.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) - Election officials at one Minneapolis poll reported a young woman Tuesday put voting ahead of the birth of her first baby.

Mrs. Robert Chevrier, 21, appeared shortly after the polls opened at 7 a.m.

"I'm on the way to a hospital to have my first baby," she said. "Could you let me vote ahead of the line?"

The voting officials agreed. Mrs. Chevrier cast her ballot and then drove to the hospital.

Retirements, Deaths Join Polling In Role of Federal Face Changing

WASHINGTON(AP) Even before the polls opened yesterday, the chambers of Congress were assured of 18 new faces next January due to resignations, retirements and deaths

Eighteen Democratic House members and 20 Republican congressmen either were defeated in primaries, announced their resignations to seek other office or are not trying for another term.

Four senators-Spessard Holland, (D-Fla.), Eugene J. McCarthy, (D Minn.), John J. Williams, (R Del.), and Stephen M Young, (D Ohio) announced their retirements. A fifth- Ralph Yarborough, (D Tex).- lost in the primary.

Speaker John Mc Cormack, (D Mass) is the best known of the retiring congressmen. Others are: Ben Reifel, (R S.D.); William Murphy, (D Ill.); E. Y. Berry, (R S.D.); William Dawson, (D ILL); Maston O'Neal, (D Ga.); John O. Marsh, (D va.), and Robert V. Denney, (R Neb).

Ted Returns to Greatness

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts reelected Sen. Edward M. Kennedy Tuesday for his second full six year term giving him a massive victory which could put him back into the running for a presidential nomination in 1972 or four years later.

Kennedy supporters were hoping for a 60 per cent vote for him, a level which would restore the shining image tarnished in 1969 by his Chappaquiddick accident Kennedy, host at a weekend reunion of campaign workers, drove his car off a narrow bridge. One of his guests, Mary Jo Kopechne, 28, drowned. Kennedy escaped and later was given a suspended jail sentence of two months for leaving the scene of the accident.

The returns showed Kennedy pulling between 64 and 70 per cent of the vote in his contest with his Republican rival, Josiah A Spaulding.

In a switch, the voters elected Republican Francis W Sargent to a full four year term as governor. He was elected lieutenant governor four years ago and became governor in 1969 when John A. Volpe resigned to join President Nixon's cabinet.

Sargent defeated Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston, who lost his home city 97,276 to 80,603.

With 56 per cent of the state counted Kennedy had 556,962 or 64 per cent of the vote and Spaulding had 316,740 or 36 per cent.

In the contest for governor, returns from 58 per cent of the state's precincts gave Sargent 56 per cent of the vote 493,602 and White 44 per cent of 389,097.

In a three option referendum question the voters strongly favored planned withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam instead of military victory or immediate withdrawal.

For the first time the lieutenant governor was elected as a running mate of the governor. Donald R. Dwight, of Holyoke, who resigned as state commissioner of administration to run for the office, was elected with Sargent.

White's running mate was Michael S. Dukakis, of Brookline, a member of the state legislature.

The voters preferred incumbents for other statewide offices, reelecting Democrats.

Robert H. Quinn held the office of attorney general, which he gained in 1969 when Elliot L. Richardson resigned to join the Nixon administration in Washington. Quinn was speaker of the House and was chosen by the legislature to replace Richardson. He defeated Donald L. Conn, the Republican nominee.

The others relected were Secretary of State, John F. X Davoren over state Rep. Mary B. Newman, R Cambridge; Treasurer Robert Q. Crane over the Republican nominee Frederick D. Hannon; and Auditor Thaddeus Buczko over his Republican rival, Frank P. Bucci.

THE BIG WINNER- Senator Edward M. Kennedy, shown walking to a Charles Street polling place in Boston with his family, scored a massive reelection victory over Josiah Spaulding yesterday.

Drinan, Studds, Hicks, Win Congressional Seats

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Rev. Robert F. Drinan, a Jesuit priest on leave as dean of Boston College Law School and a Democratic peace candidate, won a close race in the 3rd Congressional District Tuesday over state Rep. John A. McGlennon, a Republican moderate and Democratic incumbent Philip J. Philbin, a 14 term veteran who ran as a write in candidate.

Drinan, 49, had 43 per cent of the vote today with 66 per cent of the precincts reporting. McGlennon, 36, trailed with 37 per cent of the vote, while Philbin had 20 per cent.

Another peace candidate, Gerry Studds, 33, a Democrat, took an early lead in the 12th District in his race against Republican incumbent Hastings Keith.

The race ran neck and neck, throughout the night as the votes were tallied.

Harold D Donahue, the incumbent Democrat in the 4th District, trailed Republican Howard A. Miller for much of the night but shot ahead early today and won.

Two term Republican incumbent Margaret Heckler won a narrow victory in the 10th District over Democratic challenger Bertram Yaffe, another peace candidate and business man from Fall River.

Michael J Harrington, the incumbent Democrat from the 6th District elected last year in a special election, we a close race against Republican Howard Phillips. 29

In the 9th District, Mrs. Louise Day Hicks won the seat held for more than 40 years by retiring House Speaker John W. McCormack

Mrs. Hicks, a nationally known Boston political, tallied 75 per cent of the vote in her race against former U.S. Rep. Laurence Curtis, a Republican and Daniel J. Houton, who ran as an independent.

Her campaign slogan, "You know where I stand," is considered a reference to the controversial school busing issue, which she has adamantly opposed during her terms on the City Council and School Committee.

In 1967, Mrs. Hicks was defeated in a close race with Kevin H. White for mayor of Boston, but she was the top vote getter in the City Council election last year.

Drinan's grassroots organization defeated Philbin, a moderate, by some 6,000 votes in the Democratic primary. Philbin announced his entry into the race as a sticker candidate some weeks after the November campaign began.

It was felt that his entry into the race would hurt McGlennon, also a moderate, rather than Drinan.

Early winners Tuesday night were incumbent Democrat Torbert H. Macdoneld, who won the 7th District contest against Republican Gordon F Hughes, and F Bradford Morse, a Republican incumbent from the 5th District who beat Democrat Richard Williams in a lonsided victory.

Studds, like Drinan, inspired young supporters in a vigorous campaign. He served on President Kennedy's White House staff and was state coordinator for Eugene McCarthy's presidential primary campaign in New Hampshire.

Keither served two terms in the state Senate before being elected to Congress 12 years ago.

Yaffe, a Fall River paper box manufacturer, ran a well financed peace campaign against Mrs. Heckler. He campaigned as a "reform minded Democrat," while Mrs Heckler promoted her service to the district.

Unopposed in the election and so assured of return to Washington were Republicans Rep. Silvio O. Conte in the 1st District, and Democratic Reps. Edward P. Roland, 2nd District; Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., 8th District, and James A. Burke, 11th District.

HAPPY VICTOR- In one of the nation's most closely watched contests, Father Robert Drinan won seat in the State's Congressional delegation.

All Dem. Incumbents Win Minor State Offices Easily

BOSTON (AP) Incumbent Democrats holding four of Massachusetts' six constitutional offices won re-election in Tuesday's voting but one of them, Secretary of the Commonwealth John F X Davoren, was given a race by the only woman running for statewide office.

Not until early Wednesday was Davoren's victory assured against veteran Republican Rep. Mary B. Newman of Cambridge, whose campaign advertising bore down on the line "She's something special."

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane of Wellesley, Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn of Boston and Auditor Thaddeus Buczko of Salem were other winners in their bid for new terms

Crane defeated Frederick D. Hannon of Westwood, Quinn beat Donald Conn of Melrose and Buczko won out over Frank Bucci of Braintree, all Republicans.

Unofficial returns showed: Secretary of the Commonwealth - 1,243 precincts out of 2,019 Davoren 506,731, Newman 447,379.

Treasurer - 1,165 precincts - Crane 552,134, Hannon 385,095. Attorney General - 1,245 precincts - Quinn 612,939, Conn 368,388.

Auditor 1,165 precincts Buczko 556,890, Bucci 283,299.

Neither Davoren nor Mrs. Newman, had run before for statewide office.

Mrs. Newman, who is 61, has been a member of the House of Representatives since 1953, except for the 1955 - 1956 term. She also was a member of the Massachusetts Parole Board in 1955 - 1957.

Davoren, 55, was elected secretary of the commonwealth by the legislature when Kevin H. White left that office to become mayor of Boston nearly three years ago Davoren then was speaker of the Massachusetts House

Crane, the incumbent treasurer, also was elected to his post by the legislature. That happened in 1964 when his predicessor, John T. Driscoll, resigned to become chairman of the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority.

The 44 year old Crane's opponent, Hannon, 49, publishes several weekly newspapers.

For Quinn, the incumbent state attorney general, Tuesday's balloting also marked his first bid for statewide election. He, too, was elected by fellow legislators in January, 1969 when Elliot L. Richardson quit as attorney general to become undersecretary of state in the new Nixon administration.

At the time Quinn was House speaker First elected to the legislature from a Roxbury North North Dorchester district in Boston in 1957, he was named majority whip in 1963, majority leader in 1965 and speaker two years later.

Conn, his Melrose opponent, prosecuted Albert DeSalvo, the self proclaimed Boston Strangler, in a celebrated assault trial in Middlesex Superior Court at Cambridge in1967.

Conn repeatedly sought a debate with Quinn but did not succeed in bringing it off

Buczko was appointed auditor by former Gov. Endicott Peabody after Thomas J. Buckley, who had served in the office 24 years, died on the eve of the state primary six years ago Like Crane, he has since managed to win successive terms despite Republican opposition.

His opponent, Bucci, was a former newspaperman who became a lawyer and served as an assistant district attorney in Suffolk County. The two appeared together in a couple of television debates and on radio forums.

The Campaign Record

Administration's Travels Seen Working "Poorly"

WASHINGTON (AP) - The campaign travels of President Nixon and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew stacked up rather poorly against election results Tuesday night, but they had three sparkling successes.

The high points of election success measured against the President's unprecedented participation in an off year election came in Tennessee and Connecticut where Republican candidates took both governerships and senate seats, and in New York where conservative James L. Buckley, the administration's choice, was elected to the Senate.

Vice President Agnew, who in six weeks of travel spearheaded the administration's campaign efforts, visited all three states, and was the first to repudiate Sen. Charles Goodell, the Republican seeking re-election.

But in almost complete returns from Tuesday's voting, Republicans had won only ten top ticket contests in the 37 states visited by either the President or Vice President or both. Democrats had won 25 of the Senate or gubernatorial races in these states decided by mid-night.

While Republican had taken statehouse and Senate plums from the Democrats in two states, and a Senate seat in Maryland, Democrats had taken away one Republican Senate seat, in Illinois, and eight governorships in states where the administration chiefs had tried to help local candidates.

One of the biggest Nixon-Agnew disappointments was in Florida where both had campaigned extensively late in the campaign. Democrats ousted Republican Gov. Claude Kirk and thwarted a GOP bid for the Senate seat vocated by retiring Democrat Spessard Holland.

In Texas, where both had campaigned, the GOP failed in strong bids for governor and Senate posts.

In Minnesota, where Nixon campaigned, the GOP lost a governorship. The same for Nebraska . . . which Nixon visited. Both Nixon and Agnew visited New Mexico where a Democratic sweep shock the GOP from the governor's mansion. The Democrats also gained the statehouse in Ohio, where Nixon had appeared.

Spiro Agnew

Agnew visited Pennsylvania twice and Nixon once, but the GOP lost control of the statehouse, although Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott won another term.

Democrats kept a Senate seat in North Dakota and captured the statehouse despite a campaign trip by Agnew, and the Democrats took the Wisconsin governorship from the GOP, at the same time incumbent Senate Democrat William Proxmire coasted to victory.

President Nixon was reported Tuesday night to be "very pleased" at the apparent Senate victories of four Republicans in off year elections.

Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler said the Republicans appeared to have "turned the trend of tradition." The party in the White House generally loses seats in years between presidential elections.

At a meeting with reporters, Ziegler and two other top presidential aides assessed the returns so far and said that Nixon feels the evident victories in Senate races in Ohio, Tennessee, Maryland and Connecticut will be helpful to him in pushing his administration programs in the next two years.

"There is no national trend out of this," said White House aide Robert H. Finch. But he said the critical point is that if Nixon had not gone into the campaign "it would have been a far different result."

With returns still undecided in many House races at 10 p.m. PST when they talked with reporters, Finch said, "I think the President will be more pleased after we get the returns from the House races."

After voting early Tuesday, Nixon had predicted that the Republicans would "do better" than the usual off year election showing of the party in power. He wouldn's venture any figures.

And It Gets Worse

And so its all over. An overcomingly hanal election ends, and there is no change. The Senate is still democratically controlled, a few governorships have changed hands, a few congressmen here and there, but what has been changed in America, and what has been memorable about these elections? At first glance nothing. But then the memories of the campaign float back, and you realize that America is worse off than before.

For it will be hard to forget how a President and Vice-President went about a partisan and vicious campaign tour, that has divided an already shattered country into an unreconcilable schism, that will defeat progress at best and flare into violence at worst.

It will be hard to forget how President built up, crushed hopes of peace with a phony peace plan that would win votes, and then let the proposal die in the rubble of the twisted and burned bodies of American men.

It will be hard to forget the ravings of a Vice-President that called demonstrators "garbage," that called hecklers to his position of racism toward anyone who disagrees, "the worst kind of criminals," or his President, who calls protestors, "thugs."

It will be hard to forget so-called liberals cowering in fright and smashing every principal they had purported to own for fear of losing an election.

It will be hard to forget a courageous Senator in New York, who waged a lonely battle for the right to continue, against the massive arsenal of administration disgust, and finally was crushed.

It will be hard to forget anti-administration candidates smeared as anything, in an unprecidented display of incumbent leadership letting its country got to hell for the sake of partisan politics.

So where does it all go from here? There will be more repressive tactics from a more conservative Congress, more neglect of social ills that aren't thought important by a President and Vice President since they don't affect their constituencies. There will be continued assault on the young, on the reformer, on the protester, on the ones who dare to say no more war, no more racism, no more killing.

If America ever had a spirit, it has been crippled by the wounds of a vicious and inexplainable war and finally killed by an administration that seeks to divide, in order to conquer, that seeks to polerize, that seeks to pervert the will of the young and the progressive.

Our ballots are counted, our puppets are elected and we cry out helplessly as we see reason fading in the shadow of Nixonian America.

Wallace Wins

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) - George C. Wallace, rolling up a heavy majority over a black challenger and four other opponents, was elected Tuesday for another term as governor.

Wallace, who ran unsuccessfully for the presidency on a third party ticket in 1968, served as a governor from 1963 to 1967. His wife Lurleen, who died two years ago, succeeded him.

With 17 per cent of the state's 4,807 boxes tabulated, Wallace had a commanding lead in every county reporting. He had 142,590 votes, 78 per cent of the total.

Dr. John Cashin, running under the predominantly black National Democratic party of Alabama, had 24,928 votes - 13 per cent - an independent candidate A.C. Shelton, a former state senator, 16,914 - 9 per cent

Bulletin

Reagan Beats Unruh In Calif.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan, heavily favored, won re-election Tuesday over Democratic Assemblyman Jess Unruh, long a California political power.

Democratic Rep. John V. Tunney held a steady lead in his U. S. Senate battle with Republican incumbent George Murphy, who received major help during a bitter campaign from President Nixon and his family.

New England Roundup

Republican Richard J. Israel, who successfully prosecuted the leader of the Mafia in New England, was elected state attorney general of Rhode Island Tuesday.

Israel, now an assistant attorney general, defeated Democrat Frank Caprio, 33, a Providence city councilman, by an unofficial tally of 186,056 to 141,796.

Israel, 39, was the prosecutor in the trial of Raymond L.S. Patraiarca and four others in a double gangland slaying. They were convicted of conspiracy to murder.

Democrats retained the state's other general offices.

Lt. Gov. J. Joseph Garrahy defeated State Rep. Bradford Gorham, R. Foster, by some 80,000 votes, Secretary of State August P. Lafrance gained a 63,000 vote majority over Rep. William J. McGovern, R. Cranston, and General Treasurer Raymond Hawksley drew 61 per cent of the vote in defeating Leo Tellier of Lincoln.

Republican Winston L. Prouty won a third term to the U.S. Senate Tuesday, and fellow Republican Deane C. Davis was re-elected governor.

Prouty held a 3-2 lead over Democratic challenger Philip H. Hoff, a former governor of the state, with returns from nearly half the state's precincts counted.

Davis held a commanding lead over Democratic State Sen. Leo O'Brien, Jr. for a second term.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, Maine's champion Democratic vote getter, was elected to a third term Tuesday in a contest widely regarded as a key test of his presidential prospects.

In returns from urban and rural precincts, Muskie mounted a two to one lead over his Republican challenger, Neil S. Bishop.

Democratic Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis also held a comfortable lead over his GOP rival, Atty. Gen. James S. Erwin.

In the 1st Congressional District, Democrat Peter N. Kyres had a solid lead over Republican challenger Ronald T. Speers.

In the 2nd District, Democratic Rep. William D. Hathaway led Republican Maynard G. Conners.

John O. Pastore easily won re-election Tuesday over a Republican opponent who sought to be the first Roman Catholic Priest elected to the Senate, but the Governor's race will not be decided until absentee ballots are counted later this week.

Pastore, a Democrat, won a fourth term by defeating his Republican opponent, the Rev. John McLaughlin, and two other candidates.

Incumbent Gov. Frank Licht, a Democrat, led his Republican opponent Atty. Gen. Herbert F. DeSimone by 2,548 votes with unofficial returns in from all precincts.

There were 7,550 absentee ballots to be counted. The count was expected to begin Wednesday.

Reps. Fernand St. Germain and Robert O. Tiernan, both Democrats, handily beat back Republican and minor party opposition.

Connecticut-Conservative two term congressman Thomas J. Meskill ended 16 years of Democratic control on this state's gubernatorial chair as he defeated Rep. Emilie Q. Daddarie, a liberal 12 year House veteran.

Pennsylvania-Millionaire Democrat Milton Shapp wrested the governor's chair from the Republicans by defeating Lt. Gov. Raymond Broderick. Gov. Raymond P Shaffer couldn't succeed himself.

Senate Probes Problem of Violence

Senate Urges Quick Action On Security

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

The Student Senate resolved last night to urge the Chancellor to take immediate action to improve present dormitory security.

Thatcher Head of Residence Jack Richardson addressed the Senate in support of the resolution made by Dwight Senator Larry Ladd, stressing the need for immediate action: "The situation has become very, very serious....It's only a short period of time before someone is killed. This place has only minimum security coverage and is wide open."

Richardson reasoned that the Chancellor has not taken any firm action because he has not yet felt any pressure from students. "I know absolutely that there is enough money to pay student security guards $50,000 available in the Residence Hall Trust Fund," he said. This figure is called for in a proposal which has been drawn up by the office of Dr. Randolph Bromery, special assistant to the chancellor, and which received the support of the Senate last night as a temporary measure.

The resolution as passed strongly urges the Chancellor to make security an immediate top budgetary priority; calls for the institution of the Bromery proposal temporarily; and invited Chancellor Tippo or a representative to the next Senate meeting to discuss proposals with the Senate.

An amendment by Senator Karen MacNutt of Melville clarifies that this is not a blanket approval of any administration actions but is only an expression of concern over security.

In light of the recent Faculty Senate action on the appointment of Randolph Bromery as Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs which still calls for the convening of a search committee to endorse the appointment, the Senate resolved to form that committee. A formula for the committee was approved by the Senate.

In related action, the Senate urged the Faculty Senate to immediately initiate a search committee for the position of Principle Administrative Officer in the area of Financial Affairs. The Senate took this stand in view of the affirmation by the Faculty Senate that search committees are a necessary procedural safeguard.

Another motion passed last evening charged the Faculty Senate to share in the formation of a sub-committee with the purpose of recommending a suitable academic calendar for use by the University, to be reported in time to become operational for the academic year beginning in September 1971. Two alternative calendars which have been mentioned include a 4-1-4 set-up and a year divided into quarters for vear-round classes.

Other action included approval of an appropriation for an additional $1,100 to SWAP for the upcoming conference. These additional funds are needed to meet an increase in the fee charge by the lodge which is the site of the conference, and to pay for a post-SWAP conference which will replace last year's April 10-11 committee.

The credit union in Kennedy Middle which makes loans of from $10 to $25 to dues-paying members of the house received approval to send disciplinary issues directly to the General Court. The academic records of anyone delinquent in repayment of a loan can then be frozen as disciplinary action.

The meeting adjourned on a roll call vote at approximately 10:45 after several motions to adjourn were made unsuccessfully. Many Senators had already let the fairly uneventful meeting.

Trustees Fear Lax Security Measures

By JEANNE STILES
Staff Reporter

The Student Life Sub-Committee of the UMass Board of Trustees heard pleas for better security from administrators and residence hall personnel yesterday in a meeting at the Campus Center, which dealt with the nature of crime at UMass. No conclusive measures were passed but several proposals were discussed.

Dr. John Hunt, Master of Southwest Residential College stressed a need for decentralization of security procedures. Dr. Hunt said that the loss of goods was a result of two distinct types of theft; one being private theft among students and the other outsiders stealing for profit.

Southwest was described as particularly vulnerable because of its population density and general urban atmosphere. The existence of twenty-four hour open house policy was not blamed as a major cause of thefts.

F Lot is the site of many thefts, and Dr. Hunt said this was largely due to the fact that there are not enough personnel on duty to patrol the area. E Lot was cited as another highly vandalized area; the reason being the lack of adequate lighting.

Dr. Randolph Bromery, special assistant to the chancellor, broke the security problem down into three major fronts. He said the dilemna could be solved in the following three ways: 1.) By developing a sense of community, the students themselves could act as guardians of their own property. 2.) Make better use of the security personnel we have now. (there is currently going on now a search for a new security director.) 3.) Use outside consultants to fully utilize personnel and restructure the system.

The panel called on Mr. James Duban, a resident of Cance House, to learn why the Campus Center is so hard hit as far as theft and vandalism are concerned.

Mr. Duban said that looking at the situation from a standpont of cause and effect, then the cause override the effect. "The cause", Mr. Duban contended "is a growing gap between the student and the institution." "The student feels no responsibility toward the institution because there is no feeling of reciprocation and the security problem is not a one-way responsibility."

By using the faculty to bridge the gap, Mr. Duban believes the student and institution could become one. " However, many faculty hesitate to get involved because of departmental discouragement."

The committee generally agreed that co-ed dorms had significantly lower damage rates than single-sex dorms. Although it was conceded that the co-ed dorms each had unique and singular problems they certainly were not insurmountable. Butterfield made a formal request to allow freshman into their dorm, in order to give it a more heterogenous atmosphere for the freshman as well as the upperclassmen.

A plea for more student use of the new Campus Center was made.

It was conplained that the new building did not serve the needs of the student community as a whole. The effectiveness of the SUG board was discussed and it was proposed that the SUG board become a part of the student government and be answerable to the student senate. As the board exists now it is a separate entity. A promotion of interest on campus for the SUBG board was suggested as a means of effecting student involvement in the use of the building.

Elections: 'Nixon Wasn't Hurt'

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

The elections on the whole were no real surprise. "Nixon certainly wasn't hurt". That's the consensus of professor of government John Fenton who earlier predicted Conservative victories at the polls Tuesday.

A gain of about 2 Republican seats plus the addition of two or three non-Republican conservatives to the Senate probably has given Nixon the about four extra votes needed for victories on such issues as the recent Haynsworth nomination, according to Fenton. He noted that the shift is more ideological than partisan.

In the South, Fenton noted that Conservative Democrats did better in Senate races than the "new liberal" type. The Tyding's defeat in Maryland and the Gore defeat in Tennessee were cited as examples of this hypothesis.

A large turnout, which Fenton says usually means trouble for the incumbent, was seen as responsible for the defeat of a number of incumbent Republican governors.

Both the Scammons and Philips Theses were seen in operation in the elections.

The Philips Thesis, which states that the common man is disenchanted with the liberal establishment because he feels that all legislation is directed at him rather than for him, can be seen operating in both New York and Connecticut Senatorial races.

Conservative third party candidate James Buckley was victorious in New York while US Rep Lowell Weicker won over Duffey and Dodd in Connecticut.

On the other hand, the validity of the Scammon's thesis can be seen in the Senatorial victories of Gene Tunney over Republican incumbent Sen. George Murphy in California and Democrat Adlai St[illegible]son over Ralph Smith in Illinois, according to Fenton.

The Scammon's thesis contends that though there is concern with law and order, the average voter is not as conservative as he may appear according to the Philip's thesis.

Despite his contention that Nixon has been left in a relatively stronger position by the recent elections, Fenton also believes that the results demonstrate that Nixon must somehow get rid of the unemployment issue in order to have a strong showing in 1972. This is especially true in "mass production" areas such as Michigan, Northern Ohio, Northern Indiana, and Wisconsin, although it did not seem to be as crucial an issue in New York.

Fenton stressed that results and trends are still not clear cut and the water has been left muddy by the results. Analysis is still somewhat tentative at this state. Sid Finehirsh of the Student Mobilization Committee expressed dismay with the Vietnam referendum vote which went for Plan B favoring a planned withdrawal rather than a military victory (A) or immediate withdrawal (C). He noted that what was originally desired was a strict yes or no vote referendum on whether to withdraw or not from Vietnam.

"That's what happens when you play politics-you get burned sometimes," he said.

On a more local level, the defeat of UMass student Francis James Gensheimer by Republican Jonathan Healey in the State House of Representatives race was blamed on the Republican nature of the district by Democrat Gensheimer. Gensheimer also expressed dismay at the lack of student support for his candidacy, attributing it to "no finals around election time" as there were during the spring strike. "The strike was a farce," he added.

In the Amherst area, town Democratic party chairman Leo Bouchard claimed evidence of a more Democratic trend in this area, citing the victory of John Callahan for District Attorney. He noted that student support was evident in that race as it was in some other Democratic contests. However, he expressed a desire to see more student participation in elections." Students seem more oriented to issues and personalities rather than parties," Bouchard said, although he added that this was not a bad trend.

State Representative John Olver, an Amherst Democrat, also noted student support for Callahan, although he saw no great increase in student support for local candidates.

On the Republican side, Mrs. Jackie Mellen, Hampshire County chairman for U.S. Senatorial Candidate Si Spaulding, said that Republicans did very well in Hampshire County compared to the rest of the state. She noted that Spaulding took 11 of 20 towns in the county, although Kennedy captured the more populous municipalities.

Campus student coordinators, perhaps weary from weeks of campaigning could not be reached for comments last night.

Student participation in political campaigns this fall appeared to be about average according to John Howe and Stanley Bach, coordinators for "Election 70'"

Election 70' served as an information clearinghouse between UMass students, the candidate, and their campaigns and also sponsored several workshops.

Howe noted that student support at UMass was fairly good based on comparisons by former student supporters of 1968 presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy.

Student work in political campaigns was less than that done by students during the spring strike, according to Howe. He added, however, that comparisons between the strike and the elections were not fair.

Both Howe and Bach said that having a Princeton Plan at UMass would not have significantly increased student involvement in elections. The Princeton plan would have granted a leave to students for campaign work.

Students generally appeared to go to the more liberal candidates, although there seemed to be a great deal of student support for Gov. Francis Sargent.

The rather lackluster campaigns at the state level in Massachusetts may have caused some lack of student enthusiasm, Howe said. He expressed surprise that many of the candidates wanted students working in visible capacities rather than behind the scenes.

COLLEGIAN endorsed John Callahan, pictured here at a UMass meeting, beat incumbent local District Attorney Oscar Grife by a 2/1 margin. Callahan will become the first Democrat to hold the local D.A. position.

Student Mobe Determines Position On Kent State 25

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

About 20 members of the Student Mobilization Steering Committee met last night to determine the future direction of the organization on campus. The question was raised as to whether or not its main purpose would be to support the Kent State 25.

One speaker noted: "We should decide what our political priorities are and what we can do to meet these priorities".

The committee voted that a Kent State Defense Committee would act as a subcommittee of the Mobe committee, as opposed to being independent or ignored completely.

The committee would concern itself with raising funds, which is the immediate need of those indicted. One speaker, however, reminded the group of the Kent State student's remark that "the best way to defend us is to defend yourselves", and that to build a bigger movement would also help.

The group set down five basic priorities to be considered.

1) That the Mobe committee begin a "program series", to include films, speakers, and dorm activities.
2) That the committee further develop its community programs. This would include not only the five-college area, but also its liaisons with surrounding towns, high schools, and labor unions.
3) That the committee support a rally by the Connecticut Valley Antiwar Coalition (CONVAC) on November 20th.
4) That the committee support the National Peace Action Coalition (NPAC) rally to be held December 4-6.
5) The SMC should begin work on an information packet to claify its position on various issues.

The next Mobilization Committee meeting will be held next Thursday at 8:00 p.m. in the Plymouth Room, which serves as Mobe headquarters. Election of officers will be held.

Nixon, GOP Make Inroads On Senate

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON- Republicans blunted tradition by slicing into the Democratic grip on the Senate-President Nixon's key target in the rough and tumble mid term campaign.

But Democrats swept more than a dozen governorships from GOP hands and strengthened their control in the House. That was the picture emerging Wednesday from the floodtide of more than 50 million votes cast Tuesday in the off-year election.

Even as the last of the ballots were counted, both Republican and Democratic leaders sought to read victory for their party into the results.

Nixon was described by aides as pleased the GOP had "turned the trend of tradition." And Vice President Spiro T. Agnew who joined Nixon in a strenuous 35 state law and order campaign blitz, said the White House captured "a working majority" in the Senate.

But Democratic chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien said Nixon and Agnew "would be hard put to call this anything but a defeat" at the hands of Democrats who campaigned generally on pocketbook issues of inflation and unemployment.

Democrats won control of both houses of Congress for the ninth consecutive election, although their House gain was only about a third of the usual off-year average. By far the most impressive Democratic victories came in gubernatorial races.

Thirteen GOP governorships were captured by Democrats-including such states as Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Florida which are important building blocks for the 1972 presidential and congressional races.

Convincing victories by Ronald Reagan and Nelson A. Rockefeller kept Republicans in the governors' mansions in the two largest states-California and New York-and GOP candidates grabbed two previously Democratic spots.

The net result: A Democrat gain of 11 governorships and a Democratic majority in the state houses for the first time since 1964.

But in the Senate, Republicans reversed the traditional loss of four seats by the party of the president. Instead, they picked up a net of a couple of seats-only the fifth time since 1900 this has happened.

Nixon and Agnew had concentrated most of their extraordinary campaign effort on trimming the 57-43 Democratic edge in the Senate.

INDIANA

With a cliffhanging Indiana race between liberal incumbent Vance Hartke and GOP challenger Richard Roudebush still undecided, the Senate stood at 53 Democrats, 44 Republicans-plus one Conservative party winner who lines up with Republicans and an independent who leans toward the DEMOCRATS.

Sweetest White House victories came in Tennessee, New York and Maryland.

TENNESSEE

Tennessee's veteran liberal Sen. Albert Gore, the GOP's No. 1 Senate target, was upended by conservative Republican Rep. William E. Brock III, a wealthy candy manufacturer who had lavish White House backing.

NEW YORK

In New York, Conservative party nominee James L. Buckley rode his pledge to support Nixon administration policies to a victory over Democratic Rep. Richard Ottinger and incumbent Sen. Charles E. Goodell, a Republican disowned by Agnew as a "radica liberal."

MARYLAND

Maryland voters followed the urging of the Nixon-Agnew team and ousted liberal Democratic Sen. Joseph D. Tydings. The winner was Republican Rep. J. Glenn Beall Jr., an administration supporter whose father had lost his Senate seat to Tydings six years ago.

OHIO

In Ohio, Republican Rep. Robert Taft Jr., conservative son of a GOP senator and grandson of a GOP president, squeaked by industrialist Howard M. Metzenbaum to move into a seat being vacated by a retiring Democrat.

But Democrats seized two Republican Senate seats.

CALIFORNIA

In California, Kennedy style Democrat John V. Tunney, son of former heavyweight boxing champion Gene Tunney, kayoed Republican Sen. George Murphy, onetime song and dance man and Nixon supporter who had flailed away at law and order issue.

ILLINOIS

In Illinois, another Republican incumbent who waged a law and order campaign, Ralph Tyler Smith, was trounced by Adlai E. Stevenson III, heir to a famous Democratic name.

VIRGINIA

Another famous Democrat name rode to victory in Virginia-but as a conservative independent. Sen. Harry F. Byrd Jr., who romped by Republican and Democratic challengers to keep the seat his father once held. He has indicated he will join the Democrats in organizing the Senate-although his vote will not be regarded since the party holds 53 of the 100 seats.

PENNSYLVANIA

In electoral-vote-laden Pennsylvania, millionaire Milton Shapp reclaimed the governor's office for the Democrats. In Wisconsin, former Lt. Gov. Pat Lucey ended six years of GOP state house control. And in Ohio, liberal John J. Gilligan smashed a GOP challenger hurt by a Republican tinged loan scandal.

Democrats won also Republican governorships in Nebraska, New Mexico, Minnesota, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Idaho, Nevada and Alaska.

Republicans countered by claiming Democratic chairs in Tennessee-for the first time in 50 years-and in Connecticut-for the first time in 16 years.

ALABAMA

In Alabama, George Wallace crushed the challenge of Negro dentist John Cashin by a 5-1 margin and won another term as governor-but left open the possibility of another third party presidential bid in 1972. "It all depends on whether the Nixon administration carries out its promises," Wallace said of his 1972 plans.

Public Opinion Sought On Many Referenda

WASHINGTON (AP) - Ten of 15 states that considered lowering the voting age Tuesday voted against it. And there were opposite majority views on liquor, gambling and religion among states that voted on special measures.

Vietnam was on the ballot in Massachusetts and the voters supported President Nixon's planned withdrawal of troops. They chose this over immediate withdrawal and carrying on to a military victory.

In California, San Francisco County approved a proposal calling for immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Vietnam. Marin County endorsed a similar proposition.

Antipollution measures, and the money to carry them out, won approval in most cases. But Washington state voters rejected a proposal aimed at littering - an initiative to require a five cent deposit on bottles and cans of beer and soft drinks.

Texans voted to permit their legislature to allow saloons on a local option basis, despite strong opposition from the drys who wanted to continue limiting buying by the drink to private clubs. But Kansas voters soundly defeated a similar proposal. Cincinnati voters approved the Sunday sale of liquor by more than two to one.

Virginians opened the way to possible horse racing and parimutuel betting by removing a ban on lotteries from their constitution. But Arizona voters turned down a lottery proposition.

While Maryland voters were approving an amendment to permit voluntary prayer in public schools, Nebraska and Michigan voted against giving state aid to parochial and private schools.

The widespread turndown of moves to lower the voting age was attributed to voter resentment over campus unrest and to apathy stemming from this year's approval of a federal 18 year old voting law. The federal law is being challenged in the Supreme Court by those who say a constitutional amendment is needed to make the change.

Washington state voters approved a measure to legalize abortions performed by licensed physicians in accredited hospitals or other medical facilities.

Rhode Island, Florida and Illinois were among states that voted for antipollution bond issues. The biggest was a $750 million bond issue approved in Illinois for local sewage disposal systems. And while Californians were approving clean water and recreation bond issues a proposition to divert state gasoline taxes toward mass transit and antismog devices was losing.

Rhode Island voters rejected a salary boost from $300 to $3,000 a year for state legislators, Idaho voters approved cutting the pay of their legislators from $10,200 to less than $4,000 for a four year term, and Missourians defeated pensions for legislators.

Washington voters rejected a single rate income tax provision, but Illinois voters approved abolishing all personal taxes.

New England Returns Show Incumbents Back

CONCORD, N.H.

Republican Gov. Walter Peterson survived a firm challenge to his second two year term by two conservatives.

With all 302 precincts counted, National Election Service showed Peterson with 103,326 votes to 98,952 for Democrat Roger Crowley and 22,083 for American Party nominee Meldrim Thomson.

In the congressional races, Republican incumbents James C. Cleveland and Louis C. Wyman won handily. Cleveland had 74,986 votes to 32,998 over Democratic Franklin Mayor Eugene Daniell and Wyman 72,505 to 34,870 over former Republican Congressman Chester Merrow who became a Democrat four years ago.

As expected, Peterson, 48, ran well in most of the cities outside Manchester, the state's largest. Crowley, 57, a former Navy captain, congratulated Peterson and said the lesson in the vote for him and fellow conservative Thomson was that voters want a conservative fiscal policy and no "broad based" taxes- sales or income levies which always are key issues in the only state without either tax.

Thomson, 58, a lawbook publisher, said he would run again in 1972 with a slate "from the U.S. Senate down to town moderator."

New Hampshire voters also balloted on four constitutional amendments. They defeated proposals to double the two year gubernatorial term and to create a commission to revise the current legislative pay of $200 per session plus mileage.

A third amendment to provide annual legislature sessions instead of the present biennial meetings hung in doubt. With 295 of 302 precincts reporting, ratification of the amendment was short about 300 votes.

A fourth amendment revising technical language in the state constitution on loyalty oaths won easily.

AUGUSTA, ME.

Republican Atty. Gen. James S. Erwin Wednesday requested a recount of votes cast in his bitter battle with Democratic Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis, and preparations were begun for a massive recount of over 325,000 ballots.

Secretary of State Joseph T. Edgar said the recount is tentatively scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. on Nov. 23. He ordered strict security measures to be taken to protect the ballots from possible tampering.

With all but two of the state's 629 precincts reporting, Curtis, 39, seeking his second four year term, held a slim lead of just 702 votes over 49 year old Erwin. If reelected, Curtis would be the first Maine governor to serve eight years.

The gubernatorial race, which drew the largest number of votes in the general election, was marked by personal animosity between the candidates and charges and countercharges over state finances.

Edgar said that representatives of both candidates met with him Wednesday morning to discuss the recount procedure. "We hope to submit the tabulations to the governor and council Nov. 18, and by law must submit them by Nov. 23," he said.

The ballots will be stored under guard by state troopers and under constant observation by closed circuit television, the secretary said.

If the election is not settled by Jan. 6, the Senate president who will be elected by the 105th legislature would be sworn in as governor until the new chief executive is declared elected and assume office.

MONTPELIER, VT.

Former Gov. Philip H. Hoff, the leader of Vermont's Democratic party during the last decade, lost his nationally watched bid for the Senate Tuesday against victorious Republican incumbent Winston L. Prouty.

Hoff, young and articulate, gathered only 62,822 votes in his election bid Tuesday to unseat Prouty who amassed 91,758 votes.

Hoff's total was less even than that of the Democratic gubernatorial candidate - state Sen. Leo O'brien Jr. of South Burlington - though going into the election Hoff seemed to be the Democratic cornerstone.

Eight years ago, Hoff proved himself strong enough to break a century old Republican grasp on the governor's office. And he went on to serve an unprecedented three terms at that post. Had he defeated Prouty, he also would have become Vermont's first Democratic senator ever.

In the gubernatorial race, Republican incumbent Deane C. Davis defeated O'Brien, 89,978 to 64,851, to gain a second two year term as Vermont's chief executive.

Every other Republican candidate for statewide office registered wins also, and in addition the GOP retained solid control of both houses of the legislature.

In the state's other top of the ticket race, Republican incumbent U.S. Rep. Robert T. Stafford won an expected victory, trouncing his Democratic challenger, Bernard G. O'Shea, 103,893 votes to 44,483 and giving Stafford his sixth two year term.

Prouty, 64, soft spoken and moderately conservative won his third six year term in the Senate in defeating Hoff.

"The voters have spoken, quite decisively," Hoff said after his loss. "And I can't complain - I did my best. I point my finger at nobody except myself - and in the end this is what it all comes down to."

"As I have in the past," Prouty said, "I renew my dedication and commit my full energies to the solutions of the problems we face."

Final, unofficial returns showed that 155,916 persons voted in the election, an off year record. That was almost 70 per cent of those eligible to cast ballots and just 8,000 shy of the alltime record set in 1968, a presidential year.

Drinan Ponders His Win

WATERTOWN, Mass. (AP) - The Rev. Robert F. Drinan, the first Roman Catholic priest elected to the U.S. Congress, says he thinks government "should provide the moral architecture by which we live."

"The people are looking for moral leadership," Father Drinan said Wednesday following his election as Democratic congressman in the 3rd. District.

He defeated veteran Democratic Rep. Philip J. Philbin, who launched a sticker write-in campaign after his defeat in the September primary, and Republican state Rep. John J. McGlennon.

Complete unofficial returns showed Drinan with 64,716 votes, McGlennon with 61,129 and Philbin, a 14 term congressman and vice chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, with 45,734. The district runs northwest from the Boston line to the New Hampshire border.

"The politics of reprisal, unfortunately more prevalent in the elections of 1970 than at any other time since the early 1950's must yield to the political of reconciliation," Father Drinan said.

"The politics of reconciliation means that we must respect each other, trust each other and love each other. Respect, trust and love are the only moral and spiritual forces which can turn back the onslaughts of abuse, fear and hatred which fill the land," he said.

A long time critic of the Vietnam war, Drinan said his election means "there is one more person in the Congress...who will wage war on war.

"People of this nation can and must...elect their own peace candidates. We cannot simply wait and hope that the political parties will bring forth candidates committed to wage war on war," he said.

"I've always been in a minority," the priest said of his coming role in the new Congress, "but the loud and unsilent minority of war critics will grow to be an unsilent majority."

Drinan, on leave of absence as dean of Boston College Law School, said he thinks his victory also means that the voters of Massachusetts "have repudiated...the economic policies of the Republican party."

"The voters know we can have a healthy economy," Drinan said. "Their votes mean that they reject a president who vetoes massive federal funding for schools, hospitals and housing."

McGlennon, the defeated GOP candidate offered Father Drinan his "sincere congratulations...for his well deserved victory. Philbin was not available for comment.

Mass. Voters Make No Major Changes

BOSTON, Mass. (AP) - Massachusetts voters elected their Republican governor to a new four year term, while favorite son Edward M. Kennedy, regarded by many as a prime Democratic presidential candidate in 1972 or 1976, was the state's top vote getter as he was reelected to his second six year term in the U.S. Senate. In another closely watched race, the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, an antiwar Democrat on leave of absence as dean of the Boston College Law School, became the first Roman Catholic priest elected to the U.S. House.

Drinan squeezed out a victory in the 3rd. District over Republican John J. McGlennon. Incumbent Rep. Philip J. Philbin, running as a write in sticker candidate after losing the Democratic primary to Drinan, was a distant third.

Sargent and his running mate for lieutenant governor, Donald R. Dwight, defeated Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston and running mate Michael S. Dukakis by about 250,000 votes.

Sargent, in a surprising showing, defeated White by about 17,000 votes in the mayor's home city.

Dwight, 39, of Holyoke, resigned as state commissioner of administration to run with Sargent. It was the first time in the state that the lieutenant governor was elected in tandem with the governor.

Kennedy, who repeatedly has disclaimed any intentions of running for the presidency in 1972, polled 60 per cent of the vote against former state GOP chairman Josiah A. Spaulding - a tally nowhere near his 1964 margin of victory when he polled more than 70 per cent.

However, the 1964 victory against Howard Whitmore Jr. was cushioned by the Johnson landslide against Sen. Barry Goldwater, and was not hurt by the fact that Kennedy was hospitalized at the time of the election with a broken back.

In the 9th Congressional District, Democrat Mrs. Louise Day Hicks, the controversial city councilor and foe of busing to achieve racial balance in schools, won easily the seat vacated by Rep. John W. McCormack, who retired after more than 40 years in office.

The closest of the congressional races was in the 12th District, where Rep. Hastings Heith, the six term Republican incumbent, squeezed out a last minute victory over Gerry Studds, the Democratic candidate who campaigned on a peace platform.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Counselor Training Expands Services

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Draft counseling is spreading!

Draft Counseling Services recently completed a counselor training session which had over 60 participants. These, and previously trained counselors, are now available to all members of the University community. The following is a list of where counseling centers are currently operating, and their hours:

Draft Counseling Services, main office. The office is located on the second floor of the Student Union, behind the Cashier's cage, in room 418E&F. There are several counselors there anxiously awaiting your visit between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m.. Appointments help, but not essential.

Draft Counseling Services, southwest office. Located in varying places on the first floor of Coolidge Tower (T-2). Ask at the lobby desk. Counselors are available on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday evenings between 7 to 10 p.m. Appointments not necessary.

Draft Counseling Services, northeast office. Located in The Open Door, which is in the basement rear of Hamlin House. Attempts are being made by Open Door staffers to keep open on a round the clock basis, and they will arrange appointments with trained counselors for you.

For people who are either working through CO applications or are considering applying for CO, a new counseling program will soon be starting. Starting November 16 & 17, and continuing every Monday and Tuesday after that, there will be group CO counseling sessions from 1:30 to 4:30. The sessions will be held in 811 Campus Center, and will be led by Gil Salk.

Draft Counseling Services would like to start draft education programs in dorms. If you would like to have a rap session, coffee hour, film, panel discussion, or some other program in your residence, please contact us. It is very important that information about all possible alternatives to the Selective Service System be made available to as many people as possible. One of the worst injustices of the system is its abject failure of its duty to inform all registrants of their rights. That's what draft counseling is about, and that's what draft educational programs are for. Please help us get information out now. It could save your roommate's life.

Peace!

Committee Seeks Solutions

Unprepared History Majors Face Job Difficulties

By LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

For most students in most majors the prospects for obtaining a satisfactory job after graduation without further study are, for the most part exceptionally bright. But for an undergraduate majoring in history who has given no thought to preparing for a career the consequences are at the least a year or more of graduate school and at most very poor employment opportunities.

It is for this reason that the Faculty Student Liason Committee of the History department is attempting to establish a chain of communication throughout the department. Through this system the Committee hopes to help solve the many problems which confront the undergraduat major.

The major problem confronting the undergraduate history major concerns his future after graduation. For those who major in history purely as a means of self clarification, the prospects after graduation pose no problem. Their study will hopefully provide them with the answers to their questions and they will adopt a course of action which will be satisfactory to themselves.

But the undergraduate who majors in history in hopes of obtaining a job must include within his program of study courses which will enable him to obtain a position without further study. It has come to the attention of many graduate students and faculty members in the department that the employment prospects for a "straight" history major are very dim.

Too often undergraduates are concerned only with fulfilling the requirements of the department. They do not realize that without such other qualifications as teacher certification, the number of job openings in the field or history are very scarce. Too often an undergraduate realizes too late that education courses should have been included among his electives. His only hope then is to attempt admission to a grad school in order to complete his requirements for certification.

The Liason Committee hopes to eliminate some of these problems through its chain of communication. One of its many projects is to establish an efficient chain of communications between faculty and grad students, grads and undergrads, and undergrads and faculty. It is hoped in this way that the students will also allow the faculty the opportunity to become aware of student problems. The committee has set up a weekly series of informal discussions held in Herter Seventh floor lounge in which majors within the department may come to express their views and ask questions pertaining to their major.

The Committee also is in the process of establishing an evaluation of upper level courses. This evaluation, which will be conducted by seeking the opinions of students in the upper level courses will serve as the basis for a file system. The file system would permit the student to gain information concerning the content, materials and overall presentation of any course which he is interested in taking. In this way he will be able to determine whether the course will provide him with the background which he wants to complete his study.

In conjunction with this, the Committee also has hopes of instituting steps towards a revision of the department requirements so as to allow a student the opportunity to join the education block to obtain the training necessary for certification. Past experience has proven that 39 credit requirement within the department will not allow the opportunity student to participate in the education block without placing undue stress upon his course load in other semesters.

Jane Fonda Pleads Innocent Anti-War Lectures Continue

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) - Actress Jane Fonda pleaded innocent Wednesday to a charge of assault and battery on a Cleveland policeman. Then she continued on an antiwar lecture tour.

Miss Fonda, 32, is scheduled to return here Monday for a preliminary hearing on federal charges of smuggling pills into the United States from Canada and assaulting a customs officer at Cleveland Airport.

Before leaving Wednesday, she filed a formal complaint with Cuyahoga County Prosecutor John T. Corrigan, alleging that a young girl demonstrator had been beaten by guards in the jail where she herself spent some 10 hours Tuesday.

"They came in here and said their purpose was to focus attention on themselves, and I don't intend to help them," Corrigan said after being visited by Miss Fonda and her attorneys, Irwin Barnett of Cleveland and Mark Lane of New York.

Lane said Corrigan had agreed to put the matter of the demonstrator, Barbara Kahn, 18, before a grand jury Thursday. Corrigan said after the private meeting, however, that he did not know if any aspect of the Kahn case would come before jurors Thursday.

When Miss Fonda pleaded innocent before Muncipal Court Judge Edward Feighan she requested a jury trail. The trial is set for Jan. 6.

The What-ifs of Politics

The elections are over. In the nation, many are now hunted by the what-ifs. The candidate who went to his TV set Tuesday night knowing in his heart that he had no chance has been assured that his fears were correct. With the campaign over, he now wonders what if. What if any of a hundred things.

What if Charlie Goodell or Richard Ottinger had withdrawn in favor of the other? What if Dodd had withdrawn? Would Duffy have gone to the Senate or were the votes for Dodd too conservative for that?

For the nation, it is a time to ponder the what-ifs of our recent politics. What if there had been no Chappaquiddick? Obviously, Teddy Kennedy would still be in the Senate, except that he would be the unchallenged standard bearer of the Democratic party. This way, we have him as he really is: not perfect; not omnicompetent; not the seeming answer to everything which plagues the country - just a young Senator who does his homework. A politician whose family machine can elect a President or surmount a scandal. And yet a young woman named Mary Jo might still be alive.

What if there had been no Dallas? Johnson would never had been President, yet legislative history might have been different. Tom Wicker writes that although JFK had won the peoples of this nation and the world, he had lost the Congress; his programs were hopelessly bound up on Capitol hill. Another Johnson observer notes that in the greatest issue of the Sixties, the healing of divisions between white and black, North and South, Johnson was near indispensable. Any President might get a civil rights law through Congress; but it would take a Southerner to get even a beginning of acceptance in the South. There had not been one since Woodrew Wilson, and with national politics the way it is there might not be one for a long time to some. Besides making the South feel again a part of the nation, Johnson in his legislative skills and domestic achievements was probably Kennedy's better. And yet we might not have gotten in a war in Asia. And yet a brilliant man who symbolized so much might still be alive.

What if Humphrey had defeated Nixon in 68? The problems which accumulated during the Johnson years would just as certainly been visited on a Humphrey Presidency. The Democrats might now be hopelessly split and the Republicans been able to turn defeat in 1968 to a Republican sweep in the Seventies. And yet a President who even further divides the nation might today be a successful corporate lawyer who had forgotten politics.

Most difficult of all, what if the U.S. had never become involved in Viet Nam? We might only have been able to begin work on the decay which eats away at our cities, bettered the national welfare without excessive price rises. If only that, in cities and towns all over this one and that one, a gifted young man might still be alive.

The Russians Are Coming

WASHINGTON-- "Comrade..... buyers, fashion designers and state managers of state department stores. Is honor to introduce Comrade Torkel who has just completed visit to America where he has observed new fashions now being worn on American women. Comrade Torkel."

"Is pleasure to be back in Moscow, comrades, and give report on American fashions with illustrations from magazines.

"Here, comrades, is first dress. Skirt is coming to below knees."

"But, Comrade Torkel, we've been making this dress in Leningrad dress factory for 20 years. What is new about this?"

"Am only reporting what have seen. Here second illustration. Evening pajamas to go to party in."

"You are mad, Comrade Torkel. Why would American women go to parties in their pajamas when they are richest women in world?"

"Is impossible to explain, but every reception I went to, I saw women wearing pajamas."

"But Comrade Torkel, if American women wear pajamas to party, what do they wear to bed?"

"Is nothing."

"Nothing?"

"Is called 'new permissiveness.' Now, comrades, here is woman in pants suits."

"Are those for women railroad workers?"

"No, comrades, those are for women to go to restaurants, cocktails and dinner."

"Comrade Torkel, you are making fun of us. How can women wear pants in America when not working in factory?"

"Is being done all over."

"The Kiev Pants Co-Operative has been making pants like that since the revolution."

"Is true. Now here is outfit women wear to go out shopping in. Is leather coat with leather boots and fur on collar."

But, Comrade Torkel, this woman looks like a member of the Communist Party."

"She could be working for KGB."

"Next illustration. Here is peasant blouse and peasant skirt and no shoes for afternoon wear."

"But that is what they have been wearing in Smolensk since Stalin died."

"My sister, Katrina, wore an outfit like that until she got a job."

"And here, comrades, is the piece de resistance. Is knickers with boots and woolen sweater and woolen hat."

"Comrade Torkel, do they have women Cossacks in America?"

"No

"No Cossacks. Is for going to beauty parlor and night clubs."

"To think Malinkock was sent to Siberia when his factory once tried to make knickers and they wouldn't sell."

"What are your conclusions, Comrade Torkel?"

"Is obvious comrades, that American women want to look like Russian women. We also know Russian women all want to look the way American used to look. Is possible we make barter deal. We give them all the clothes our women won't wear that we make; they give us all the clothes their women refuse to wear now."

"Comrade Torkel, is fantastic solution to our rotten clothes problem. I am putting you in for the Lenin medal today."

Concerts-For Whites Only

To the Editor:

Organizations which are responsible for bringing in entertainers on this campus have no regard for Black people. Of late we have been inundated with white guitar twangers and strummers and it looks like this trend is going to persist for a long time to come. With the exception of B.B. King, we haven't had a single Black music ensemble. Excellent Black musicians do exist and they also need bread.

It is a sad state of affairs when white groups like Rare Earth are presented as purveyors of the Motown Sound. The Motown Sound is a Black phenomenon and plagiarist like Rare Earth cannot, no matter how hard they tried, adequately represent it.

Please People, let's try and bring in musicians, not mountebanks the media has imposed on us. I'd like to conclude by quoting Feiffer. If I remember well his lines go something like this, "I dug hip and Whitey dug on it- I dug jazz and Whitey dug on it- I dug rock and Whitey dug on it- I dug freedom and finally lost Whitey". The foregoing accurately reflect the gradual erosion of Blackness.

For Whom?

To the Editor:

Mr. Michaelson's letter to the Editor of Nov. 2 left us quite puzzled. First, we think it only fair that he should let the readers of the Collegian know to whom he was referring when he sarcastically addresses "My 'cousins' the Arabs." We assume he was referring to the lecture and discussion on the Palestinian Revolution which took place on October 27. We fail to understand the purpose of his letter, or to whom it is addressed. Is it the general reader, who has no idea of the contents of that lecture? In that case, the purpose of his letter would be to confuse the issues of the Palestinian struggle and to distort the goals for which the Palestinians are struggling. Or is he addressing those who were present at the lecture? But, in that case, he had ample opportunity to take part in the general discussion and present his interpretation before the audience. If he had, we speculate that his comments would have been dismissed as not having any basis in fact.

For the general reader, we would like to clarify the following points. The speaker, a supporter of the Democratic Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, stated clearly that in liberated Palestine, all Palestinians, including Jews now living in Israel, would have equal rights. He added that the national rights of the Hebrew people would have to be respected (eg. their right to develop their own culture, religion, language, etc.). In referring to South Africa, Mr. Michaelson "forgets" that Israel is a racist, colonialist settler state with close relations with South Africa; Israel has furthermore achieved its position through the expulsion of most of the indigenous population of Palestinian Arabs.

It is the Palestinians who continue to be oppressed, subjugated and denied their rights by the State of Israel. By the attempt to portray the present oppressor as future victim, Mr. Michaelson seeks to obscure the present genocide against the Palestinian people, who are seeking a secular, non-sectarian progressive state in which all forms of oppression and exploitation would end.

The kind of "peace" for which Mr. Michaelson speaks is the peace of the status quo of a racist, expansionist state; it is a peace in which the oppressed are silenced the resistance to Zionism and imperialism crushed. It is the "peace" of oppression and colonial domination in which justice and the right of the oppressed people to dignity and self determination have no place. It is a kind of "peace" under which the Palestinian people and all their brothers of the Third World have been subjugated; they are fighting this "peace" in order to achieve the real peace which can only be created through justice.

Open?

To the Editor:

Thinking of myself as a concerned individual who recognizes his own biases as much as possible I've tried to keep an open mind on the issue of Middle-East Peace. After all the U.S. does support Israel to some extent so it isn't hard to believe that our news media might give us a relatively one sided view of the situation.

My good intentions crumble, however, when I read the notices placed in the Collegian by the Solidarity Committee with the Palestinian People. It reminds me of the ridiculousness of party rallies, where only those already convinced of the righteousness of their cause come to cheer and agree. No new votes are gained at rallies, and no new converts to the Palestinian cause will be made at their meetings here on campus since to go with any doubt in your mind, or alternate solutions, is to go uninvited. "Oh come all Ye faithful."

A New Diet

To the World:

In comparison to European civilizations, the United States of Amerik is a child. She is a child at the age of adolescence. And like all adolescent children, Amerika is undergoing emotional and physical changes To combat the appearance of these changes, she washes her face carefully by creating a state of supression and fear for her unsightly blemishes on her campuses. But she is finding, like all adolescents do, that washing one's face just isn't enough.

I consider myself a big juicy pimple right on the tip of Amerika's nose. If I am picked, my germs are going to spread so that ten new pimples pop up in my place, and I intend to leave a big scar. The more she picks us pimples, the more we're going to spread until Amerika's whole body is nothing but one big red zit. Then none of the other country's are going to want to go out with her.

Amerika better learn that pimples don't vanish by squeezing them. The only way to cure pimples is to watch one's diet. If Amerika doesn't learn this fast, I urge all other potential and kinetic pimples to sprout and show their true colors.

Think about it,

Education

To the Editor:

We read that a vast number of Americans are returning to classrooms to continue their education. Education--what is it// could it be defined as the successful application of what we know concerning how to get along with our fellow man? One look at Southeast Asia, the Berlin Wall or the Middle East would indicate we weren't educated. Could it be application of all the scientific knowledge that we have of the physical world Frank Borman saw from outer space? Look at our smog, the Great Lakes, Hiroshima, and the hungry children throughout the world.

Education--what is it?

Women

To the Editor:

Re. Don Glickstin's The Human Contion (on Woman)

No wonder the guy looses, or wonders, with a set of attitudes like that. First forget the Joe Cool routine. That went out with Elvis and white socks. Anyone who starts with "impressing" on his mind is fair game, and women are pretty hard to beat in an out-and-out battle of sexual wits. Those are the guys that really louse it up for everyone else out there trying. After a few Don Glickstein's to contend with a girl's instantaneous reaction is to cut it off the minute he sticks it out. A real turn-off.

Next, what's this tactile or "head" approach. Even General Patton didn't rely on a planned attack for success. The suprise attack - play as you go, by ear, phase-of-the-moon, whatever you want to call it, anything but the old planned attack. (an Ex-servicemen are the WORST!).

This third item - "act sincere" - now we're getting someplace. Only don't act it, be it, do it. Sincere. A real person is the man who wins, that is if you want to win, as opposed to merely wanting to score, as the term is tossed around in male company. Just remember, you get what you pay for, both figuratively as well as realistically. Not willing to pay the full price, chances are pretty likely you'll get garbage in return. Every woman puts up with her share of shitheads before she realizes that she doesn't have to put up with them - that there really ARE alternatives to the D. Glickstein's of the world. It's true. The good guys win in the end - I know, I married one 4 months ago, and I love it. So does he. But then he and I played it for real, not junior high kid games. BLEEAHHH! to you, Don.

CANDIDATES FORUM

There will be a Candidates Forum for Freshman Class Officer Candidates in The Daily Collegian on Monday, November 9th. One letter from each candidate for President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer will be accepted for publication.

The letters must be no longer than one type-written, double spaced, at sixty spaces, 8" by 11 1/2" page.

Letters must carry the candidates name, address, telephone number, and signature.

Any letter deviating from these specifications will not be printed.

Ripping-Off

WASHINGTON - Shoplifting - passing under the terms "doing favors," "liberating" and "ripping off" - is acquiring new respectability as a political act among young, white children of affluence.

The increase in pilferage, police and merchants believe is at least partly related to the fashionable aura young radicals have attached to stealing as an expression of their life style.

In response to increased shoplifting, some stores have hired plainclothes "spotters" who pose as customers. Others have installed elaborate electronic "tagging" systems for their merchandise. Still others have recently hired young "street people" as sales have sought to identify personnel and otherwise themselves with the views and problems of those who might steal from them.

Conversations with young people who say they regularly "rip off" goods from stores indicates that they often justify the stealing on two grounds:

-The dropout existence they have affected does not permit them to afford goods they regard as necessities-mostly food and clothing.

-"Liberating" goods is actually a radical political act in which the takers believe they are striking a blow against the capitalish system.

It would be a mistake to conclude that the whole Woodstock Nation has disbanded into tribes to kleptomaniacs. The fact remains, however, that ripping off-even among those who personally choose not to steal-is becoming an increasingly acceptable part of the young radical's ethic.

"The big stores rip off the people with their profits so why shouldn't we rip them off," argues an editor of the Washington underground, newspaper, Quicksilver Times.

"Ripping off is like getting into an elevator and punching all the buttons," he says, "anything that screws up the system and gets people to flip out is good"-an argument frequently heard in support of shoplifting as some kind of existential yippie happening.

For many people, stealing is a political act and a survival act at the same time, the underground press man believes - political in the sense that people are selective about who they rip off.

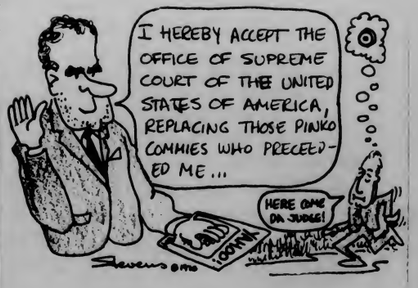
"They don't rip off stores that are owned by blacks, or small businessmen who they know are struggling" he says, "They hit the chain stores, the department stores, and the really piggy shops that sell to pseudo-hop people.

"A good deal of their survival depends on stealing," he maintains, "because they have chosen to live in a way in which they can't make enough money to get along."

Diane, the 19-year-old daughter of a manufacturing executive in the south, says she and her boyfriend have been stealing virtually all their food, clothing and household necessities for more than a year.

Like many young people who acknowledge they steal, Diane and her boyfirend both eschew the idea of working in "straight jobs" - within the mainstream of corporate, retail and institutional life.

"People have a right to be healthy," says Mary J., 24, "I usually take the best when I go to a supermarket because you should eat the best you can - no matter how much money you have.



"With clothing and other things, it's different. I take only what I need," says Mary, who works parttime as a legal secretary. "I'd never take a fancy outfit or something frivolous like a headband," she maintains. "But I don't mind liberating a jacket or jeans or something else that I really need."

Bob lives in a communal house with six other young men and women in their teens and early 20s. The house, from bathrooms to bedrooms to kitchen, is full of goods that the residents say are stolen.

"We don't even buy toilet paper in this house," says Mark, 23. Our bathrooms come from the Hilton Hotel - toilet paper, soap, towels from the swimming club, everything."

At dinnertime, occupants of the house eat their stolen food on industrial china that residents say was taken from a university cafeteria.

Busses To Run New Schedule

Effective Monday, November 9, 1970, both campus buses will operate on a route which will service every point on the existing routes. This new common route will necessitate some basic changes in routes and time schedules. These changes are listed below:

1. Both buses will operate on a common route–a figure eight operating clockwise in Southwest and counterclockwise in Orchard Hill–making one stop per revolution at the School of Education.

2. The "Southwest" designated bus will go to the School of Education from the Southwest complex, then to Orchard Hill with no return to the School of Education.

The "Orchard Hill" designated bus will go to the School of Education from Orchard Hill, then to Southwest, with no return to the School of Education.

3. New stops will be initiated at #6 lot, Ellis Drive north and south of the Campus Center, and at the Southwest corner of Haigis Mall. Since stops along the west side of N. Pleasant Street will be used for both buses, special designations will be used to identify the destination of each. Buses will no longer enter Haigis Mall due to the congestion caused by illegally parked cars.

4. The drivers are instructed to stop only at designated bus stops. This is due to the tighter schedule and as a standard safety measure. Students wishing new stops designated should contact the Student Senate Transit Service in Room 434, Student Union, or RSO Box 802F, Campus Center.

5. A new consolidated bus schedule will be available Friday. It will be distributed from the Campus Center Information Desk, will be available in both buses, and will be published in the Collegian.

Law And Order Issue Failed In European Eyes

LONDON(AP) - Newspapers in Europe and elsewhere generally view the results of the U.S. elections as a failure of the law and order campaign strategy of President Nixon and Spiro T. Agnew.

Tribune de Geneve in Switzerland sounded the general theme in a political column, saying:

"It appears that the 'law and order' slogan vigorously preached by the Nixon Agnew tandem in the end made little impact on an electorate preoccupied by the economic slowdown cleverly spotlighted by the Democratic party."

The independent newspaper Informaciones of Madrid commented: "Economic imperatives have swept out criteria about law and order."

The Christian Democrat paper De Tijd of Amsterdam took the view that the "U.S. elections ended undecided, implying a virtual defeat of Nixon and Agnew who hoped to mobilize the silent majority against the Democrats."

ENROUTE TO VOTE–U.S. Senator Thomas J. Dodd and his wife pause briefly outside polling place in Old Lyme, Conn., where they cast their votes this morning. Dodd lost a bid reelection as an Independent after failing to get support of the Democratic party nomination.

Cushing Kept His Crypt Secret

HINGHAM, Mass. (AP) - The man who built the crypt that will receive the remains of Richard Cardinal Cushing Saturday kept it a secret for 18 years, at the request of the cardinal himself.

"The cardinal came to me and asked me to build a crypt for him in the chapel," Frank Tarzia Sr. said Wednesday. "He told me to 'make it simple with no ornamentation...just a humble place for them to lay me, and make it so that I'm facing the school so I can always be looking at the children.

"But keep it a secret, because I'm not sure yet that I want to be buried there. When I do reach a decision, let me tell the people."

Tarzia did just that, and it wasn't until details of the cardinal's funeral Mass and burial were made public following his death Monday, that he 64 year old stonemason told his story.

The crypt is in front of the altar in the chapel on the grounds of St. Coletta's School in nearby Hanover, a school Cushing founded for retarded, or as he called them, "exceptional" children.

The chapel is an imported replica of the Portiuncula Chapel in Italy where St. Francis of Assisi worshipped. Tarzia also constructed the chapel, following a master plan of the original.

Each night, Tarzia said, when his day's work on the chapel was done, he returned, and behind closed doors, worked on the crypt. He made it of steel and poured concrete because "the cardinal didn't want any marble, mosaic or the like in his tomb."

The crypt, four feet wide, four feet deep and nine feet long, is covered by a four inch slab of concrete.

The body of the cardinal, former archbishop of Boston, is lying in state at Holy Cross Cathedral in Boston. Following services Saturday, his remains will be sealed in the crypt.

Distinguished Ecologists

CEQ Speaker Describes "The Marine Revolution"

Dr. Carleton Ray, associate professor of pathobiology at Johns Hopkins University, will describe "The Marine Revolution" on Thursday, Nov. 5 at 8 p.m. at HMahar Auditorium on the UMass campus.

Dr. Ray's talk is the third in the series of Distinguished Ecologists Lectures scheduled at the University under the auspices of the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and cooperating groups. The lecture is open to the public free of charge.

Formerly the curator of the New York Zoological Society, Dr. Ray has gone on expeditions to Antarctica, Alaska, Canada, Bermuda, the Bahamas and Florida to study the marine ecological balance. He has written 60 scientific and professional papers on marine conservation. He has appeared on the Dick Cavett TV Show to alert audiences to the dangers facing whales and other marine mammals.

Among Dr. Ray's many awards and citations is a fellowship to the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is a member of nine conservation organizations.

Engineering Alumni Hold Symposium On Pollution Problems

Engineering alumni from UMass will gather this week for a symposium on the problems of environmental pollution.

Sponsored by the UMass Engineering Alumni Association, the symposium will be held on Thursday, Nov. 5 at the Highpoint Motor Inn in Chicopee, following a 6:30 p.m. dinner.

Robert B. Gibb, President of the Engineering Alumni Association and a graduate of the Class of 1956, will give the welcoming address. Moderator for the program will be Lester C. Van Atta, Associate Dean, School of Engineering.

Bernard B. Berger, director of the UMass Water Resources Research Center, will discuss water resource problems; Francis A. DiGiano, assistant professor of civil engineering, will talk on air pollution problems; and W. Leigh Short, associate professor of chemical engineering, will speak on thermal pollution problems. A question and answer period will follow.

Program chairman for the symposium is Alfred Wandrei, Class of 1950.

Colby Students Elected To Board

Waterville, Maine (AP) - In accordance with a change in governmental structure suggested last fall by a constitutional convention and approved by the board of trustees, two Colby College students have been elected to one year terms as non voting representatives on the board.

Those elected by the student body were Senior Stephen R. Orlov of Sharon, Mass., and Charles J. Hogan of Metuchen, N. J., a sophomore.

Outing Club "Cave-In" Explores Knox CaveN.Y.

By WALTER SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

On Friday, Oct. 30 sleeping bags and knapsacks were packed in cars and outing club members in small groups headed off for the wilds of Knox, N.Y. for a "Cave-In".

When they arrived, the tents were already up and a fire was burning. The field was on fire. The fire engines came and went, and everything settled down.

A small group decided to explore Knox Cave. Years before, Knox had been commercialized, and remnants of wooden stairs were scattered everywhere except where they were needed. The group, equipped with flashlights and carbide lamps walked-tripped-fell into the sinkhole.

Limited exploring of the cave followed. The Big Room, Indian Passage, and the previously mentioned Gun Barrel Tunnel were a few of the attractions to be found.

The following day was Halloween, and exploring of Knox and nearby caves consumed most of the day. A few of the more daring explorers crawled to the most extreme points of the cave. When they finally emerged, they looked like they should have stayed inside.

Nearby Skull Cave was accessible only by rope ladders. A sheer wall at the sinkhole dropped 30 feet, levelled off, then dropped another 30 feet. Only the more experienced cavers took on Skull.

Saturday night there was a party in Knox Cave where pumpkin pie, doughnuts and wine were served.

On Sunday, some people left for home early, while those who hadn't had enough went back into the caves. Eventually, everybody got back to Amherst... a little sorer, but a little happier.

The UMass Outing Club has something going on almost every weekend. From mountain climbing to caving to backpacking, the outing club is for people who enjoy the outdoors, and just having a good time being with other people. There's a "togetherness" kind of feeling that can't be achieved just by rapping. It's living.

The incumbent Thadeus Buczko secured victory Tuesday in the race for the State Auditor's seat. Buczko was able to easily beat Bucci by a 2 to 1 margin. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Five Colleges Offer Bus Tours Of Campuses

As part of its ongoing valley wide orientation program, the Five College Student Coordinating Board is sponsoring free bus tours of each of the campuses in the five college area. The first purpose of the bus tours is to acquaint students with the physical layout of each campus.

Walking tours of approximately twenty minutes will also be provided at each institution. It is hoped that the students will use this unique opportunity to "explore" the other campuses.

The Student Coordinating Board, an autonomous five college student life committee, sponsored panel discussions, involving faculty members from each of the five schools, at the colleges earlier this year. Still being planned by the Board is a spring five college festival hoped to generate the interacting of students from each of the five schools.

The involvement of University students is especially hoped for; the first step to involvement is the use of the bus tours being offered this Saturday to meet people. The first of the eight tours leaves from the campus center garage at 10:00 A.M. refer to the ad in Friday's Collegian for the full timetable.

UN Calls For Extention Of Mid-East Ceasefire

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The Asian African group rammed through the U.N. General Assembly Wednesday a call for a 90-day extension of the Middle East cease fire and immediate resumption of peace talks.

The resolution was approved over opposition from the United States and Israel, who charged that some provisions were stacked in favor of the Arabs. The U.S. initiated cease fire expires Thursday.

The assembly approved the resolution put in by Yugoslavia and 20 Asian African nations by a vote of 57-16 with 39 abstentions.

A rival proposal sponsored by 20 Latin American nations failed to win approval. The vote was 45 in favor, 49 against and 27 abstentions.

A third resolution, put in by the United States, was not pressed to a vote by its sponsor.

The Asian African proposal may give Egypt an excuse to extend the cease fire. But it does not provide much basis for resuming the peace talks under U.N. mediator Gunnar V. Jarring.

Israel has refused to return to negotiations with Jarring until Egypt pulls back missiles it were shifted forward in the Suez area after the stand still agreement went into effect Aug. 7.

Foreign Minister Abba Eban of Israel assailed the Asian African proposal just before the ballot, declaring that it would obstruct peace efforts in the Middle east.

Eban charged that the proposal threw off balance the Security Council resolution of November 1967, which has been used as the framework for efforts to bring peace to the area.

Eban charged that the Asian African resolution, which calls for the restoration of Arab territory held by Israel, would obstruct resumption of Jarring's mission.

Eban expressed prereference for the Latin American resolution, which did not single out sections of the 1967 Security Council resolution but simply reaffirmed the entire proposal. It also expressed concern over cease fire violations which were not mentioned in the Asian African draft.

Senator Edward Kennedy grimaces during a recent impromptu debate in Natick, Mass. with Socialist Workers Party candidate for U.S. Senate, Peter Camejo. Camejo, who lost the election but won the debate, will be back at UMass Saturday, Nov. 7, at 11 a.m. speaking on "The Civil War: The Second American Revolution" in the Council Chambers of the Student Union. Camejo is one of a series of speakers participating in the Western New England Socialist Education Conference this weekend. For more information contact the YSA table in front of the Hatch.

AC Business Manager Ass't Treasurer Resigns

Minot Grose, Business Manager and Assistant Treasurer of Amherst College, has submitted his resignation to the College as of January 1, 1971.

In accepting his resignation, the Board of Trustees took note "with gratitude for and admiration of his eighteen years of devoted, dedicated, loyal and conscientious service to Amherst College."

Mr. Grose came to Amherst as assistant to the treasurer in 1952; in 1957 he assumed the duties he now holds. His responsibilities have included superivsion of the College's physical plant, including faculty residences and fraternities, and supervision of new construction.

After graduating from Amherst in 1936, Mr. Grose spent ten years with the Air Reduction Company in various parts of the country, leaving it in 1946 as Assistant Manager of the New England District. For the next six years he was associated with the investment firm of Burgess and Leith in Boston.

In Amherst he has served as a corporator of the Amherst Savings Bank, a director of the First National Bank, a member of the Zoning Board of Appeals, secretary of the Robert Frost Teaching Chairs at Amherst Regional High School (an award which he founded), treasurer of Grace Episcopal Church and of the Layman's Academy of Oecumenical Studies, and as a Town Meeting member. He is also a director and clerk of the Greenfield Community College Foundation, inc.

Cyclists Will Tour Berkshire Foothills

The Bicycle Club will have a tour to the Berkshire Foot-Hill on Sunday November 8. Anyone interested in going (the tour is open to the entire campus community) is asked to sign up on the sheets provided on the Bicycle Club bulletin board which is located on the upper level of the Student Union opposite the ride board and next to the Outing Club boards.

The tour will assemble at the rear of the Student Union, outside the Hatch, at 10:30 a.m. for the 30 mile route (approx.) as follows: North on 116 through Sunderland to South Deerfield, South-west on 5 to Whately, West to Williamsburg, then South-east through Haydenville and Florence (with perhaps a short side trip to Look Park), then via Damen Road to 9, East on 9 to Hadley, then North on 43 to North Hadley, and finally East by local roads over 116 to the Southwest entrance of campus.

The route will be through some very lovely small valleys, hard packed dirt roads, and picturesque farms. The trek is of medium difficulty; it will involve some small hills, but they can be easily walked if anyone doesn't want to try riding them. Bring your lunch and be prepared for a stop at a cidermill. If five or more people sign up; there will be a tour. If not, those who signed up will be notified of the cancellation.

NEW IDEA IN MUSICAL AWARENESS —
The National Concert Series
THIS FRIDAY
In our efforts to obtain the best musical entertainment available, we, as college students, have searched all over the country to TRULY find the country's BEST entertainment. We have been continually disappointed by the "Top 40" brand forced upon us by the music industry. As musicians, we have seen our fellow artists dealt with in a questionable manner by the "promoters" and "agents" of today's music (ask any musician for his opinion of 'agents" in general — ask yourself). Because of the obvious need for good music promoted solely because of its quality and creativity and not because of its "market value" which promotes music at the obvious expense of quality, we offer this concert to you. It is for these reason we have formed the National Concert Committee, and hence, the National Concert Series.
Our desire is to have an organized system of promotion based on the tastes of the various musical audiences throughout the nation and not on one general type of music for all. We believe that there are musical audiences in America that are made up of individuals who wish to hear pure music as the musicians wrote it and not music in a form changed and altered in order to sell it to the "bubble-gum public."
Throughout this concert series we will bring the best of new and old talent from all over the United States to areas that may never have had an opportunity to hear this music. By attending this concert you will hear music before it breaks onto the national scene. You, as an audience will be picking the music that will become national rather than listening to it after it is national. This is our way of changing the music scene across the country for the better. Please join us in this effort. Come to this Friday's concert, November 6, 1970, sponsored by George Washington Upper.

QB Club Luncheon . . .

Hughes, Sroka Cited For Top Play

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Yesterday's UMass Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheon, the eighth of its kind, was a mild affair marked by the selection of two fine seniors, Ken Hughes and Bill Sroka, as the offensive and defensive players of the week respectively.

These two persons won their citations for their play in UMass' decisive 48-6 victory over Vermont last Saturday, the Redmen's second win of the season, as opposed to four defeats and one tie.

It was Hughes' second such honor. He won the award last week for his performance against UConn. The senior quarterback had another steady afternoon against Vermont. He guided the offense well and completed ten of 24 passes.

Although this completion percentage is no figure to boast about, Hughes' real worth to the team and his dominating claim to the award stems from his leadership capabilities as he has really come of age lately, moving the offensive wheels with a consistency they lacked a few weeks back.

As for Mr. Sroka, he came through with a yoeman's effort last weekend against the Catamounts, the type of effort that has been typical of his play all fall. At the position of defensive tackle and weighing a solid 218 pounds, Sroka teams with spark plug Bill DeFlavio to form a most devastating tackle tandem.

Rarely do opponents gain success in running up the Redman middle; these two guys make movement in the middle tough.

As is the case at all QB Club Luncheons, a UMass assistant coach gives a scouting report on the upcoming Redman opponent and, in yesterday's case it was defensive line coach Bob Graham talking about Holy Cross.

He respected the winless Crusaders and pointed out that the main reason for H.C. woes is that the year layoff from playing football, because of the hepatitis outbreak, has been extremely difficult for the H.C. team to overcome.

Head coach Vic Fusia reiterated this viewpoint before running some films on the Vermont game. He commented, "The layoff of one year has hurt them. They're not really playing up to their potential, plus they've had some injuries."

The films were indicative of the score and capped off the luncheon in the mood it started, one of calmness. A lot of times QB Club Luncheons are broken up with good jokes and usually the films of the opponent-just-played are anticipated. Probably because of the Redmen's methodic thumping of Vermont, the films weren't overly exciting to watch although they were enjoyable in their depicting of the UMass efficiency.

Wrapping Up The Freshman Soccer Season . . .

Strong Fr. Booters Looked Great At Home

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

The freshman soccer team was unbeatable at home. In establishing a 4-1-1 mark the freshmen found the going much rougher away from UMass territory, as they were 3-0 as hosts and 1-1-1 as visitors.

In the three home contests the freshmen won by scores of 3-2, 5-2 and 2-0 over Worcester Polytech, UConn and Springfield respectively. While away they opened successfully, winning 3-1 over Tufts, tying Amherst 1-1, and falling to Trinity 2-1.

But the story behind the year was the team's spirited play. Its moral was extremely high and was most clearly exhibited in their booters' two final home games, against UConn and Springfield. The key to this spirited play was Coach David Jekanowski, as goalie Beggs commented, "He really knows how to get a team psyched up; he's got to be one of the best if not the best coach that I've ever had."

The high-flying Redmen began the campaign with a Mark Tyma score, and that's just how they ended it. The Tufts 3-1 victory featured two Tyma tallies, as well as a Bruce Sibson score, his first of four during the year. The finely-executed battle at Medford established the trend for future frosh frays; it featured a fast UMass start with plenty of drive at the end.

In their next game, their first at home, the Redmen romped. The scoreboard registered UMass 3, WPI 2, but the score couldn't have been further from the truth. The Redmen outran, outhustled and generally outeverythinged the visitors, as the 30-7 shots on goal margin gives a pretty fair indication of how the game went.

The second contest featured Amherst, a squad with incredibly impressive credentials. The Redmen came away with a tie, but it looked as though they deserved more than that. Mike Nugent was the sole scorer for the Redmen that day, as he booted in a Tyma corner kick, one of many Tyma corner kicks that resulted in goals this year.

Back home again, the frosh found themselves up against UConn, and the Little Redmen were the epitome of a psyched ballclub. Not 15 minutes were gone in the game before UMass had tallied four times. Their finest offensive effort of the season saw goals by McKinney, Sibson and Tyma, as the early lead enabled them to coast to victory number three.

Unfortunately though, this momentum did not carry into the Trinity affair, which featured one of the more disturbing incidents of the year. Throughout the game nearly 60 Trinity students, located behind the UMass bench, heckled the Little Redmen.

The goals just wouldn't come in this game. The 2-1 loss saw Howie Spier score his first of the season, but it was Spier's second goal that made the Redman season.

It was the Springfield game, the last of the season, when Spier knocked home number two of the year. The game-winner came late in the first period and the Little Redmen were on their way. The 2-0 win was the highlight of their season, and appropriately enough it was their final game.

Throughout the season the Redmen defense was strong, as goalie Beggs led the show in the final contest with a tremendous effort against Springfield. Behind the strong defense and the outstanding domination lies the Coach, and Coach Jekanowski has gone an exceptional job. Said Sibson, "He took an interest in all the kids. He moved everyone around, until he found a place where that boy was best suited."

This shifting was one of the keys to their success as were Jekanowski's teachings. Said Steve Needleman, "Coach Jekanowski is just an excellent coach. He has a great knowledge of the game, but most of all it's his teaching of strategy that helped us throughout the season.

However Spier best summed up the feeling of the players and the reason that they went out on a limb and tried so hard for their coach. "He's a very personable guy. He doesn't step on you like so many high school coaches do. He's someone to whom we can relate. I just liked playing under him very much."

In two seasons now, Coach Jekanowski has suffered only two losses, and has recorded a 9-2-1 record. His ability to get a team "up" for a game has been his trademark. In view of Jekanowski and the frosh season, the varsity team can look forward to quite a few good prospects for the coming season.

Redmen NippedBy SC In Final Heat, 1-0

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

Spurned on by the largest crowd of the year, the UMass soccer team held a superior Springfield eleven to a scoreless tie for three periods.

In the end, however, the Chiefs managed to break down the Redman dam for a brief moment, score a goal, and then hold on for a 1-0 victory.

The game was a defensive one with long passes and breakaways providing the best scoring opportunities. The Redmen actually had the ball in UMass territory for most of the time, but never got a good shot off. It seemed as though neither team wanted to play soccer.

UMass came alive when Dave Piccus and Ed Doherty entered the game late in the period and started tackling the ball. UMass almost scored when Slack headed a shot at the Springfield goal, but goalie Doleva made the save.

A Springfield surge caught Bill Leary out of position but the Chiefs' halfback Bonavita overshot an empty net. This near calamity brought UMass alive and for the next 10 minutes they controlled the game.

Lindo Alves sent Larry DeFelice away on a break but the senior forward shot just skidded by a prone goalie and just wide of the net.

Just near the end of the half Doleva made the play of the game (and probably the season as far as the Redmen are concerned). Piccus put a long pass down the right side of the field to Lindo Alves who sent a line drive at the right corner of the Springfield net. Doleva, who was screened out of the play by his own defensemen, seemed hopelessly out of the play. But he somehow got over to make a truly incredible stop.

The drama continued well into the third period. Every time both teams tried to move the ball the defenses stopped them cold. The tension grew as it became evident that the game would be settled on which team got the best break.

Springfield got that break just 25 seconds into the final quarter. The Chiefs brought the ball down field quickly and in a moment they scored when Bonavita rammed home a loose ball.

The Redmen now had to play catch-up and they almost did. Every chance they had, though was thwarted. With just 3 minutes left Lindo Alves penetrated deep to the right corner and sent a crossing pass that handcuffed the goalie, but skidded off again.

The hard-fought, excellently played game ended on a sour note. The Redmen made a final desperate gasp to score and it looked like a Springfield defenseman handed the ball in the goal mouth that should have resulted in a penalty kick. But the referee ruled the goalie had touched it and gave the Redmen a corner kick. The confusion came when the referee stopped the clock with two seconds left to retrieve the ball (something he's not supposed to do) and instead of time running out, the Redmen got another life; but as usual the Chiefs stopped them again.

UMass plays their final home game this Saturday against New Hampshire at 10:00 and this game could mean the Yankee Conference title for the Redmen. UMass also wants to get back on the winning trail and better their 5-2-2 record.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — J. D. Roberts, the newly named head coach of the New Orleans Saints, acknowledged yesterday that his appointment is an interim one, but observed, "I didn't come here just to finish out the season."

The 37 year old Roberts was named Tuesday to succeed Tom Fears who was fired in a surprise move by the Saints' owner, John Mecom Jr. The Saints are mired in a 1-5-1 record for the season in the National Football League.

Mecom reached into the Atlantic Coast Football League to pick Roberts, who was head coach of the Richmond Saints who have a working agreement with New Orleans.

Roberts, who played under Bud Wilkinson at the University of Oklahoma, said he did not think the change would affect the planning for Sunday's game here against the Detroit Lions.

"The staff has already begun formulating a game plan" Roberts said. "It just means we may have to work a little longer."

NEW YORK (AP) — "My golf is finished for the year but the operation isn't going to stop me from giving lessons," Juan "ChiChi" Rodriguez said Wednesday as he prepared to fly back to his native Puerto Rico.

Rodriguez underwent surgery Tuesday for removal of calcium deposits in his left elbow and forearm.

"The doctor tells me I should keep my arm in a cast for at least three weeks," he said, "but I'll be giving lessons for the next three months at Dorado Beach."

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Former Baltimore Colts General Manager Don Kellett watched his old team wallop the Miami Dolphins 35-0 last weekend, then came home and died of a heart attack.

"I'd never seen him looking better," said Colts quarterback John Unitas. "I just cannot believe it. He was never in better spirits."

Kellett, 62, died Tuesday night at a Fort Lauderdale Hospital. He retired as Baltimore general manager in 1966.

Kellett retired to Fort Lauderdale but went back to Baltimore Sunday.

Kellett's funeral is scheduled for Saturday morning in Baltimore.

NEW YORK (AP) — Three undefeated teams-San Diego State, Toledo and Dartmouth are dominating major college defensive statistics as no trio has done before.

According to National Collegiate Sports Service statistics released Wednesday, all three teams are in the top 10 in all four defensive categories, a feat never before accomplished in the 24 year history of the national rankings.

San Diego State currently is No. 1 in total defense, No. 2 in rushing defense, No. 7 in pass defense and No. 4 in scoring. Toledo stands third over all, ninth in rushing, fourth in passing and first in scoring. Dartmouth is second in total defense, 10th in rushing, first in passing and fifth in scoring.

Perplexed Crusaders Hopeful For 1st Win, Against Redmen

by BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

For the second time in two weeks, UMass goes up against a football team that has yet to taste victory this season. This time, the woeful opponent is Holy Cross, a team that is 0-7. The amazing thing is, the Crusaders are having a better year this year than last.

Everyone by now knows the story of the 1969 Crusader football team. Struck by an outbreak of infectious hepatitis, Holy Cross was forced to cancel the final eight games of its season. This all happened in Bill Whitton's first year as head coach, a year he would just as soon forget.

"It was an extremely tough blow to all of us," he says, "especially to the players. But that is now behind us and we're all together again, looking ahead to 1970 and the future."

With that in mind, Whitton has attempted to start anew and build a good football team. However, he has met with little success thus far.

The strength of the Crusaders thus far has been the defense. A look at their most recent loss points this out. The Bulls of Buffalo could only manage to put 16 points on the board against the HC defense. It is notable to mention that the same Bulls also scored 16 points against UMass.

The Crusader

George Olson, a 6'0-215-lb. sophomore defensive tackle, has proven to be the mainstay of the Crusader defense. He anchors the usual five man line and is probably the best defensive player Holy Cross has.

The true strong point of the defense is, however, the backfield. Holy Cross has three returning lettermen here despite the fact that Crusaders did not award letters in 1969. Accompanying Tom Doyle and Bill Stachowski back there will be co-captain Mike Jordan, a 6'2-195 lb. senior.

On offense, the Crusaders have a sound nucleus which has been hurt by inexperience caused by the year's layoff.

After shuffling signal callers most of the year, coach Whitton seems to have finally decided upon sophomore Gerry Lamb, who will probably start against the Redman, over scrambler Mark Mowatt and Colin Clapton. Lamb, 6'0-185 lb. has a great deal of composure under pressure.

The Crusaders have developed a fairly consistent running attack with Joe Wilson, 6'0-205 lb., at fullback with Scott Lodde at halfback. Wilson does the brunt of the ballcarrying and went for 89 yards and a touchdown against Boston University.

Holy Cross' passing attack revolves around split end Jack VonOhlen. Th 6'2-180 lb., is the Crusaders leading receiver who likes to run the hitch pattern and can catch the ball in a crowd.

The offensive line is fair with Bill Adams, a 6'3-245 lb. guard, the outstanding player. It does have good size with the five lineman averaging 225 lb. per man.

One of the things the Crusaders can boast about is their punting game. Rated by for the best punter in New England and ranking twelth in the country in that category is junior Mark Becker. He kicks for an average of 43.5 yards and seven of his 23 punts have been over fifty.

"Mark kicks the ball so high and so far we often have trouble covering his punts," says Whitton. "But let me tell you, I'm sure glad he's on our side. There's no question he's one of the best punters in the country. We leave him alone during practice when he's punting and he works very hard at it."

REDMAN RANTINGS - The series between UMass and Holy Cross, which started in 1897, stands at 11-6-4 with the Crusaders having the advantage. The Redmen are likely to close the gap a bit on Saturday

Campus Buses Provide University Panorama

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Have you taken a ride on a campus bus lately? These familiar vehicles, which provide ease and comfort for the tired of feet as well as the short of energy, are also a source of sights and sounds which provide enjoyment, amusement and, on occasion, a moment of reflection.

Where else on campus would you be able to see such bizarre examples of women's liberation as a male sweeping the center aisle while the bus is in motion. Or better yet, witness a lively heterosexual debate on the merits of women's field hockey?

Where else would you be able to hear the latest speculation about the identity and probable next victims of the man who has been entering student rooms with stolen master keys? Or amateur and some not so amateur suggestions as to how he might be caught before he causes any more alarm and apprehension.

Where else would you be afforded the opportunity to see for yourself the immense size and area that the University has grown to and the diversity in types of living situations needed to accomodate present and future enrollment figures. The sight of new highrise dorms taking shape as village north causes one to wonder if they will become a miniature Southwest in atmosphere, life style and consequences.

Where else would you be able to get a broad view of the major construction now taking place to increase the academic facilities of the University. Only in such a way can one gain a perspective on the broad range activities which the University engages in and supports, from high level research to specialized vocational training.

Where also would you be able to see in perspective the vast numbers and types of students that make up UMass. Only in such a broad overview which is afforded by the sights seen from the windows of a bus moving through all areas of the campus can one truly have a sense of the variety of students from a variety of backgrounds intent on obtaining a variety of goals.

The next time you take a ride on a campus bus put your eyes and ears to work and see in a truely significant way an idea of what the University is all about.

Oswald Tippo and Seymour Shapiro pictured here on the maiden voyage of the Student Senate Bus, are apparently enjoying the ride. The first run took place one year ago today. It is alleged that Chancellor Tippo, then Provost, was making an "0000..H" sound when the picture was taken. Dean Shapiro, now on sabbatical, seems to be content hanging on to the safety bar. Cooperation-Not Competition

Men Seek New Roles

By JAMES GOLDMAN

The achievement of self-identity through group interaction has led to an unparalleled proliferization of organizations on campus and off. All phases of the University community, administration, faculty, and students alike, participate in organizations with this intended purpose. Most recently Men's Liberation has swelled the ranks.

The basis of Men's Liberation comes from a need to extend the conventional male roles to accomodate the individual.

Members attending the meeting felt the societal pressures for competition and the achievement of status subdue the development of the inner man. The members felt a compulsion to rid themselves of the " ughts," the dictates of their present male roles.

"Cooperation instead of competition" was a reoccurring theme stressed throughout the meeting.

Drawing from the experiences of Women's Liberation, those attending the meeting felt the presence of the opposite sex may have an oppressive effect. Competition among males for the attention of females was cited as an unnecessary inhibition.

Men's Liberation was suggested as an outlet for men to "come together" without compulsion to assert their masculinity and superiority over their peers.

The aim of Men's Liberation, similar to its sister organization, is to diminish the effect of their inherent sex roles and to expand the individual's right of self-determination beyond the present societal limits.

Women's Lib Challenges Speaker's Ideas on Women

NORTHAMPTON - Women's Liberation representatives at Smith College heatedly disputed statements made by historian and author Eleanor Flexner in the question and answer period and coffee hour that followed her lecture on "Women's Rights, 19th Century Style vs. Women's Lib" last night at Smith.

The main points of contention concerned the woman's role as bearer of children, the subsequent rearing of the children forced upon her, and the lack of options presented to her.

Miss Flexner, who wrote "A Century of Struggle" in 1959 on the women's rights movement in history, spoke as part of the "Perspectives on Women" series sponsored by the Women's Studies Organization at Smith.

She maintained in her speech that the professions and jobs outside the home that appear so enticing to Women's Lib devotees are not what they seem. A man does not return home from work day after day "fulfilled and happy" she said. Her query was "how different could it be" for a female?

Women's Lib countered that there is little opportunity to know how women would react in the situation because they are burdened with the raising of children. Child Day-Care Centers, which even Miss Flexner conceded were desirable in some cases, are not yet an available option, it was agreed by all.

One woman among the 200-odd members of the very responsive audience told Women's Lib that they also "have the option of not having children" when they raised the possibility of a father keeping the house.

Another issue which Miss Flexner felt was quite important was the trend "liberated" women of today follow in fashion.

"Many women don't care how they look unless they are going out to canvass for Eugene McCarthy or Cambodia" she declared.

The current vogue of blue jeans and shirt tails has a great impact on employment in the garment industry, she noted, and if Women's Lib wants to involve women in the outside world they should start by keeping the poorer women in work at the factories.

Women's Lib returned that they do not intend to support the man-dominated fashion industry of Fifth Avenue.

Abortion is an issue that should be considered more closely said Miss Flexner, but here again Women's Lib felt that countless lives would be lost or ruined if such programs are delayed.

One last point of disagreement between the historian and the women's group was what actually is individual fulfillment? Miss Flexner disagrees with what the Women's Lib advocates say "being a woman" is.

"The main job in the women's movement, both in history and now, is academic," said Miss Flexner. She said women must master a subject - probe for real facts to find out what and who they are.

Other points of interest in the speech included Miss Flexner's ideas on the equal importance of Black women in the struggle for liberation and the utopian attitude that was taken by the Suffragettes in a past women's movement.

The Black woman has learned to fight for an identity as a Black individual, said Miss Flexner. She contrasted this to what Women's Lib strives for -- equal status as a neuter individual. She thinks Women's Lib could learn from the Black experience.

Believing that the vote could attain boundless gains for women was the dream of the Suffragettes. Miss Flexner stated. Women's Lib should learn from them, too, she said. Equal treatment will not advance their cause any more than the vote, or Federal wage laws have brought about fair pay and promotion, she added.

Programs for and about women are good ideas said Miss Flexner, but who is going to teach these courses that Women's Lib proposes? She feels that her history of women's rights cannot be the only text used in teaching the history of women.

Fac-Sen Considers Planning Report

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

In a special session, the Faculty Senate formed a Committee of the Whole to consider the report of their Long Range Planning Committee.

After two hours and twenty minutes, with the attendance down to less than half the tiny number the meeting had begun with, the Chairman summed up the Committee's progress in these words: "The only thing we have to report is that the Rules Committee should put the (Planning Committee) Report on the calendar."

About fifty Senators, on the order of one third the usual number, spent the meeting discussing two points: the Planning Committee's stand on requirements for entrance to the University, and the Report's recommended ceiling on University expansion. Discussion on these points was often heated, and was completely inconclusive.

The tone for the meeting was set by a five-minute search for a secretary. (Since this was not formally a Faculty Senate meeting, but a Committee gathering, the elected Secretary was not present.)

"I nominate Joe Marcus" someone called out. "I have a grudge against him." A Senate member was finally called upon to take notes. "I can't--I don't have any pencil or paper," he joked, at which Associate Dean Marcus offered his.

The three members of the Long Range Planning Committee--Prof. Irving Howards of the Government Department, Prof. William Mellen of Veterinary and Animal Science, and Assoc. Dean Joseph Marcus of Engineering, Committee Chairman-- finally got up before the meeting.

"Don't bother to argue with us--we can practically outvote you all by ourselves," Prof. Howards quipped. Then he began to discuss one of the more controversial points of the Report.

The Planning Committee felt that the usual standards for admission, giving emphasis to SAT scores, discriminates against students of lower socio-economic status entering the University, since past research had discovered a high correlation between high SAT scores and high SES.

In order to avoid unfairly screening out those of low SES, including many members of minority groups, the Committee proposed to apply a broader range of entrance examinations, testing several more qualities than simple verbal and mathematical skills.

Chairman Marcus reported the Planning Committee's position on university expansion. More expansion is needed to avoid stagnation, he stated, but it should be kept within definite limits.

The University must recognize its responsibility to Massachusetts, and so it must admit larger numbers of students, but to maintain quality it also should limit itself to taking on about one thousand more students per year, reaching a total of 30,000 students in 1980.

The ratio of undergraduate students to graduate students should also change during the next ten years, from the present 4:1 to 3:1.

Prof. DePillis said that the University as it stands is more oriented towards graduate students than undergraduates; perhaps, he said, the ratio should become fifty-fifty.

Planning Committee acknowleged that the University was in fact giving more attention to graduate education than undergraduate, and expressed its disproval. (Chairman Marcus had worked very hard on the old University College proposal.)

At one point a Senator asked Chancellor Tippo to join the discussion. "I think I'll just listen today," Chancellor Tippo said, calm amidst what was by then an almost heated argument. "Chicken," another Senator joked.

The Long Range Planning Committee Report will be discussed at a future Faculty Senate meeting. The Committee of the Whole will instruct the Rules Committee to place the Report on the agenda, when a member of the Rules Committee is found; no Rules Committee member was among the few at the meeting.

Members of the Faculty Senate meet in a special session yesterday afternoon to review the Planning Committee's stand on University entrance requirement standards. (MDC photo by Gary Alpaugh)

Camejo, Miles Slated To Speak At Socialist Conference Weekend

There will be a Socialist Conference for Western New England November 6, 7, and 8 in the Council Chambers of the Student Union. This conference will be sponsored by UMass Young Socialist Alliance and the International Socialist Review.

The 3 day/3 session series of lectures and workshops will be concerned with the priorities and aspects of the socialist program, and their applications in the fields of Contemporary U.S. Economy, Nixon's War Program, Women's Liberation, Third World Liberation, historical Perspective, and the Mideast Crisis.

A 50¢ registration donation per day, or a $1.00 registration donation for all three days is suggested. Main speakers will be: Dick Roberts from the International Socialist Review, Peter Camejo from the Socialist Workers Party, Joe Miles from the Socialist Workers Party and the G.I.'s United, and Cindy Jackworth from the National Young Socialist Alliance Women's Fraction.

The Friday evening program will begin at 8:00 p.m. by a lecture from Dick Roberts on "The Inflation, Unemployment, and Nixon's War Program: A Marxist Analysis".

Mr. Roberts is a Marxist Economist, Staff Writer for The Militant, and is the Managing Editor of The International Socialist Review. He lectures frequently on the socialist perspective of current events.

Saturday Nov. 7, the program will begin at 11:00 a.m. in the Council Chambers. Peter Camejo will lecture and discuss with the audience "The Civil War: The Second American Revolution, Reconstruction, and After".

Mr. Camejo is a recent Socialist Worker's Party candidate for U.S. Senator from Massachusetts, and a member of the National Committee of the Socialist Workers Party. He has spoken throughout Massachusetts on the needs and necessity for socialism today.

At 2:00 pm on Saturday, Cindy Jackworth will speak about and discuss with the audience "The Revolutionary Dynamics of Women's Liberation Today". Cindy is the coordinator of the Women's Committee of National Young Socialist Alliance.

At 4:00 pm a series of workshops will begin, these will be concerning; The Antiwar Movement, The Mideast, Third World Liberation, Women's Liberation, and Economics. At 9:00 pm the conference will sponsor a party.

Sunday, Nov. 8, the program will begin at 11:00 am Joe Miles will speak on "Third World Liberation and Socialism". Mr. Miles is a recent Socialist Worker's Candidate in the ninth Congressional District, and Organizer of GI's United at Fort Jackson.

For further information on the conference contact UMass Young Socialist Alliance, %Registered Student Organizations Office, Lincoln Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Speed Thought To Cause Fatal Disease

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A new and fatal disease among drug users which destroys arteries leading to the heart and other major organs was reported Thursday by a group of doctors here.

The doctors said they had observed 14 patients with an average age of 25 who have used various drugs for periods of three months to five years. Four of the patients died of the disease which the physicians call "necrotizing angiitis."

The doctors, who published their report in the New England Journal of Medicine, said 12 of the 14 patients used the drug methamphetamine-known in the drug users' jargon as "speed" or "meth."

One of the doctors B. Philip Citron, said "two or three" of the 12 patients who used methamphetamine "claim to have taken it by prescription only." He said the others stated they had taken it illegally without prescription.

The doctors, all from the Los Angeles County University of Southern California Medical Center, said they released their report to the public because it has "potential importance and broad implications."

"Deaths occurring in young people using a large variety of drugs often remain unexplained," the report said.

The doctors said that because the patients all had used a variety of drugs-including methamphetamine, LSD, hashish and heroin-it could not be specifically determined that methamphetaminne caused the disease.

The other doctors who released the report were Mordecai Halpern, Margaret McCarron, George D. Lundberg, Ruth McCormick, Irwin J. Pinchus, Dorothy Tarrer and Bernard J. Haverback.

The disease, which destroys small and medium size arteries leading to major organs has the characteristics of a similar known disease, periarteritis nodosa, the doctors reported.

Report Cites Decline Of Disorders

WASHINGTON (AP) — College administrators and faculty members differ sharply with students over the primary cause of campus violence, but an overwhelming majority believe university confrontations are waning, the President's Commission on Campus Unrest reported Thursday.

The most likely targets for violent disruptions this year are schools enrolling over 10,000 with low admission standards and Reserve Office Training Corps units on campus, the commission's report added.

The assessments were contained in a poll of college presidents, faculty senate chairmen and student body presidents. The poll was taken by the commission in July.

Administrators and faculty members cited the Vietnam war as the primary cause of violent and sporadic outbursts. Significantly, students felt that lack of communication was the primary factor.

As for future confrontations, 66 per cent of the students, 70 per cent of the administrators and 76 per cent of the faculty members believed violent confrontations would decrease this year.

Most authorities listed black student demands and student discontent over university regulations as the two major internal issues that could touch off campus disorders.

The Indochina war was cited as the overwhelming external issue that cold incite violence.

Colleges with an enrollment under 1,000, high admission standards, no ROTC units on campus, per student appropriations under $1,250 and an emphasis on all curricula except liberal arts were depicted as the least likely to suffer disruptions.

Recommendations included calls for the government to end the Indochina war, realign domestic priorities, and give greater recognition to student concerns.

State authorities were asked to refrain from interfering with college affairs and to grant more funds to the universities. greater communication was stressed for local communities. On the campus itself, administrators were urged to establish better channels of communication with students. Students were urged to work within the system.

The questionnaire was sent to all of the nation's 2,789 accredited schools, the commission said. Replies were received from 1,890 institutions.

Nixon Tagged "Liar" at Paris

PARIS (AP) — Ambassador Zuan Thuy of North Vietnam charged at the peace talks Thursday that President Nixon had "lied to the American people." U.S. Ambassador David K.E. Bruce sternly rebuked him for an "inadmissible" insult.

Nguyen Thanh Le, the North Vietnamese spokesman, reported what Thuy had said after other spokesmen declined to do so.

Le said he thought Bruce "had lost control and had lost his cool" when he gave the North Vietnamese ambassador the dressing down.

U.S. spokesman Stephen Ledogar declined to tell newsmen what had upset Bruce, brushing aside questions by saying:

"You'll have to ask Mr. Le." Ledogar reported: "In a sharp exchange at the end of the meeting, personally insulting remarks by Ambassador Xuan Thuy were made about the President of the United States of America."

He said Bruce promptly retorted: "I would like to say to the chief of the North Vietnamese delegation that his choice of words and his attitude in these last few minutes with regard to President Nixon is shameful and completely inadmissible.

"At least one should be courteous if one cannot be quiet." Thuy replied to Bruce by insisting that "my statement was perfectly well rounded," Le reported.

The North Vietnamese spokesman then proceeded to give what he said were examples of "Nixon lies and propaganda."

In their formal statements, North Vietnam and the Viet Cong began the session by asserting that Nixon had been personally repudiated in Tuesday's elections in the United States.

To this Bruce countered: "You have proved how little you understand our democratic process."

Having earlier dismissed the Nixon peace plan as an "electorap gimmick," Thuy and Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh of the Viet Cong implied their judgment of the worth of the Nixon proposals had been confirmed by the American voter.

Mrs. Binh restated her insistance of unconditional acceptance of her two basic demands and the allies appealed for serious negotiations-secret if necessary-on the Nixon proposals.

The Viet Cong wants a unilateral U.S. pullout from Vietnam by next June 30 and replacement of Saigon's present leaders with a provisional coalition government.

The five point Nixon plan calls for an all Indochina cease fire in place, a broadened peace conference to settle the Laotian and Cambodian problems, negotiations on troops withdrawals, a political settlement based on existing strengths and an immediate exchange of prisoners.

Room To Move Drug Series: Roaches And Other Subjects

Editor's Note:

This article is the first in a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture", drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to react to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from various publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barber shop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related issues.

Room to Move is run exclusively by and for students. The only way that drug education and self-help can be in any way meaningful is if they are carried out by people who are in touch with the community they serve, and can relate easily to what it means to be part of that community.

There is an incredible diversity among students regarding drug use, but if we are able to synthesize our experiences, both with drugs and life in general, into a coherent basis for intelligent use of drug research and documented drug experience, we can begin to improve the vitality of our culture.

Drug education can be viewed best in its separate aspects: drugs and education. Drugs can be defined very simply as anything taken in to our system which causes a chemical reaction, either assimilation or rejection.

Evolving a definition of education is a bit more complex. The first step involves the gathering of facts or information into a cohesive body of knowledge on any given subject. in the specific area of drugs, the collection of knowledge is acquired first hand, and evolves into a synthesis that condenses subjective experience into actualized myths.

The alternative source of knowledge is objective, scientific research, which although quite valuable, is often subject to individual interpretation and should be viewed in this light.

Once all the available facts have been collected, the second stage in the process begins. This is the assimilation of new facts and experience into our current body of thought, the result being the development of a new level of knowledge.

The foremost problem that people encounter with drug use is the inability to grasp the interrelationship of the many substances we take into our bodies. Food, water and even the air we breathe function in our bodies in ways similar to substances classified as drugs. They all cause reactions that alter the chemical states of our bodies.

Poor nutrition, especially relevant today because of the many harmful chemicals in our food, is a far greater social problem than drug addiction. Carbon monoxide can alter the chemistry of your brain more than LSD, but nobody is suggesting that we get our kicks by standing behind a Greyhound bus on a crowded city street.

We must remember that every man, woman, and child in this country takes drugs of several different kinds every year. There are thousands of different drugs, and several times as many reasons for taking them. Whenever a person takes a drug of any kind, be it a drink, a cigarette, an Excedrin, or a tab of LSD, he goes through certain decision making processes.

Unfortunately, he seldom has the ability or information to make these decisions intelligently. Drugs are a cop-out only if the person cannot relate the feelings that drive him toward the drug and the effects it has on his body.

The Pumphouse Gang

By EDWARD FOGARTY
Staff Reporter

Against cold winds, hot suns, drenching rains, stifling snows...there is one man, one lone individual who will brave such elements. His motto is "...come rain, wind, sleet or snow...the class.. "must go on."

He is the University of Massachusetts bi-cycle rider.

On a particularly sultry day near the bike rack behind the Hatch a senior off-campus pumper was chaining his vehicle. He is Martin Lewis of 349 River Drive, Hadley, Mass., an English Major.

"I bought the bike this summer off my newsboy and use it every day. No matter what the weather. I enjoy it. It's good clean exercize, and a lot of fun."

Lewis' running off to class left three other bikes in the rack for inspection. Two Raleighs and a non-descript black mass with two wheels.

The black mass had a peculiar attractiveness to it, in a most macabre way. There was no front fender and the rear one appeared to have been stoned, or at least there were a number of deep dents. The chain guard was bent twisted. The body was intact.

A girl approached. "You like my bike?"

"Yes, it's quite a piece..."

"It's good exercise."

She said her name was Jennifer Pollock and she lived on Northampton Road in Amherst. What was the biggest hardship in being a campus-pedlar each day?

"I find it to be night-pedaling. The streets of Amherst are loaded with people who love to stone you at night. It seems you can get stoned anywhere these days."

Bike riders are certainly a special breed. Braving stonings and weather, they wind their way to campus each day. But the "Easy Riders" take their cars.

Why isn't a big company like General Electric doing more to clean up the environment?

How much can one company do to clean up the environment?

Until the problems of pollution are under control—until its effects are reversed—no company can ever be doing "enough."

What follows is a listing of things General Electric is doing to ease environmental problems. Some are new. Some are as old as twenty-five years.

Should we be doing more? Yes, of course. Every company should. These are only a few of the more important ones. But every day sees us take more steps in many more directions.

▸ General Electric is working toward a process that will use bacteria to convert garbage into a high-protein food for cattle. One possible answer to the mounting garbage problem.

▸ GE pioneered the development of nuclear power plants. A nuclear plant makes electricity without making smoke. While there is still the problem of thermal effects, it's being tackled on a site-by-site basis and can be solved. But for now, increasing demands for power can be met without an increasing output of air pollution.

▸ GE has developed a waste-treatment unit to significantly reduce the water pollution from ships and boats.

▸ We have been chosen by the federal government to solve the problem of jet-engine noise for the aviation industry. Our present jet is already quieter than those on the passenger planes of the Sixties, and yet it's nearly three times as powerful.

▸ GE designed and built an undersea habitat called "Tektite." Several teams of scientists have lived in the habitat while studying coral-reef ecology and ocean pollution.

▸ We're designing an earth-resources satellite which will be used for a worldwide survey of the oceans. A first step toward the ultimate control of water pollution.

▸ Our newest jet airplane engine, for the DC-10, is designed to be smoke-free. Of course, there's more to jet exhaust than just smoke. And our goal is to one day make them run totally clean.

▸ General Electric makes high-temperature vortex incinerators for the complete combustion of many types of solid waste. Complete combustion drastically reduces the amount of leftover ash, as well as virtually eliminating air pollutants.

The problems of the environment are many. And some of the solutions will be difficult and costly. But, as you can see, we're working on them.

Why are we running this ad?

We're running this ad, and others like it, to tell you the things General Electric is doing about the problems of man and his environment today.

The problems concern us because they concern you. We're a business and you are potential customers and employees.

But there's another, more important reason. These problems will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

We invite your comments. Please write to General Electric, 570 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.

SOAP Tries To Clean Environment

By BRUCE MACCONNELL
Staff Reporter

"PHOSPHATES KILL!"

"If you are using any of the high-phosphate laundry products, every time you do a wash, our world dies a little."

That's what it says in a leaflet, passed out by the S.O.A.P. (Students Organized Against Pollution) Commandos from their information booth at the Stop and Shop supermarket in Hadley.

The leaflets are written and printed by the S.O.A.P. Commandos. They explain the process of "eutrophication," the rapid growth of algae which robs the water of oxygen, killing fish and plants, caused by phosphates.

The leaflets contain lists of "good" laundry products that contain little or no phosphate, and the much longer list of "bad" detergents, which have high concentrations of phosphate.

The S.O.A.P. booth displays the "good" and the "bad" detergents with signs and posters urging people to buy only the "good products."

The Commandos are an independent study group of UMass students living in Moore House, designed to provide specialized knowledge in the fields of ecology, environmental pollution, human ecosystems and community action.

The project involves 12 undergrads, two graduate assistants and a faculty advisor. The students are taking 15 pass/fail credits in: Zoo. 176, Human Ecology; Soc. 385, Community Action and Social Change; Phych.. 387, Group Behavior; Hist. 385, History of Conservation and Ecology Action Movements in 20th C., and Eng. 385, Expository Prose.

Instructors from the various departments were chosen by the students and invited to assist in the project by offering courses, seminars and individual instruction within a balanced curriculum, designed by the students with the aid of their faculty advisor, Prof. Dean Albertson of the History Department.

The idea for the S.O.A.P. Commandos originated with Dean Albertson in his History 151 course last spring. A concern for the deterioration of the environment and a need for action was expressed.

"We want to provide a model for an unchallengeable relationship between learning and doing," Albertson said.

"Most of American culture assumes that within the cliche of the 'ivory tower' that relationship doesn't exist. We want to act."

You can't say, 'What can they do about stopping pollution'? You have to say to yourself, 'What can I do to stop pollution'?"

The Commando leaflets offer one small way to help end pollution: "Let us unite as human beings to stop pollution.

STOP SELLING PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS.

STOP BUYING PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS.

Ray Deplores Man's Exploitation of Sea

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Man's future may depend on his making intelligent use of the sea, Dr. Carleton Ray warned in a DELS lecture last night.

Dr. Ray discussed in some detail the legal problems involved in attempting to prevent damage to the sea. Forces for conservation have had very little success up to this point; they failed to stop the killing of the whale, and are failing to cut down oil spills; there is only the saving of the fur seal to point to, "one small pea in a very large pod."

Much harm is being done which conservation forces have been almost powerless to stop. There is the growing number of fish being taken, in a completely primitive way: "Man is a simple hunter and gatherer in the sea." There is the careless way that oil is being taken: an oil spill creates permanent damage; while a spill's appearance may be removed, toxins are released to the water which we cannot remove. And there are many kinds of pollution from the land, including DDT, chemical fertilizers, and radioactive wastes, which are already affecting the carrying capacity of the sea.

Some sort of international regime is called for to monitor what is being done to the ssea. Unfortunately, the legal difficulties are immense. There are several kinds of law for the sea, categorizing it in terms of territorial waters, continental shelves, the high seas, and so on. None of the categories now applied make ecological sense.

The United Nations is generally considered an ineffective agent for international control. However, Dr. Ray raised the possibility that the Food and Agricultural Organization and UNESCO could build a combined organization within the UN which could be charged with aiding international cooperation. FAO—UNESCO would tax parties benefitted by given services, such as weather prediction, and use any profits towards, e.g., the advancement of underdeveloped nations.

In the end cooperation may come about naturally, as has happened with the oil industry, which is nearly as powerful in its own domain as its home nations. In such a case the military would have to disappear from the sea.

Electric Power Plants Damage Conn. Valley

By KERRY KELLEY
Staff Reporter

Professor Brower of Amherst College warned of the danger the environment is in because of increased building of electrical power plants in the Connecticut River Valley. The warnings came in a speech delivered yesterday afternoon in Holdsworth Hall to an audience of about 80.

"Do we have the right to sacrifice every river for the generation of electricity?" questioned Dr. Brower. He was referring to the development plans for future power plants in the valley by the U.S. Corps of Army Engineers.

These plants, Brower warned, are an "Intrusion on the river's ecological system." The valley is in danger because of the chlorine being dumped into the river, the power lines being run through the countryside, and the erosion of the river banks -- a major source of food for much of the river life, he explained.

The use of these plants will also create tides and reversals in the river flow, he went on to say, adding that the migration of fish could be greatly affected by this.

Brower seriously questioned "how far can we afford to degrade our environment in this manner?" The ecological system could be reduced to a minimum where it could no longer sustain any kind of life, including man, he told his audience.

Brower also told his audience that the Connecticut River is "gentle" and not really capable of producing the electricity expected by the power companies. Because of this, he said, water is held back by the dams when needed, altering the environmental process in the valley below.

The speaker referred to the companies involved in these projects as either "irresponsible or ignorant". Brower wondered if they planned to write off the ecological losses as part of the economic venture.

Part of the basic problem behind the increase in power plants is, in Brower's opinion, the population growth in this part of the country. A solution to this is some sort of limiting factor, according to the speaker.

This limiting factor, he suggested, could be water and electricity. Brower explained that by charging for it, people would be discouraged from using it as much.

Dr. Brower finished by saying "what we should recognize is that the quality of existence depends on a healthy relationship with our environment." What has happened, he said, is the result of the advances made in any technological society such as the one in this country. The solution will be to become less dependent on many of these improvements, he concluded, so that nature can be given a much needed rest.

Rep. Bolling To Lecture On Congressional Reform

Congressman Richard Bolling, Dem.-Mo., will appear at the Distinguished Visitors Program lecture Monday, at 8:00 p.m., in the Student Union Ballroom. The topic of the lecture is "Congressional Reform."

Bolling has written two books, House Out of Order and Power In the House, along with numerous articles on this subject.

The Congressman is a member of the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee and Chairman of its Urban Affairs Subcommittee. He is also a member of the Committee on Rules and its Special Subcommittee on Standards and Conduct.

Richard Bolling was elected to the 81st Congress in 1948 and has served since, representing the 5th Congressional District of Missouri.

Bolling received his B.A. and M.A. degrees at the University of the South at Sewance, Tenn. where he was later awarded an honorary docturate degree in Civil Law.

Prior to his election to Congress, Mr. Bolling has taught at Sewance Military Academy and served as Director of Student Activities at the University of Kansas City. He is a recipient of the American Political Science Association's Congressional Distinguished Service Award. Bolling has served as Chubb Fellow at Yale University and as a Fellow at the Center for Advanced Studies at Wesleyan University.

Road Map

MEMO TO AMERICA: Thine alabaster cities are no longer alabaster, and they don't gleam either. I can still see by the dawn's early light, but by mid-afternoon it's rather difficult because the air is grey and yellow. Some of your purple mountains are still there, but many have been raped for coal. And Human tears is particularly hot item right now. P.S. You lost the War of 1812.

Birth Control Committee

To the University Community:

On October 26, 1970, the first meeting of the UMASS Birth Control Committee was held. All of about 8 people showed up. The veneral disease rate has gone up tremendously on this campus and we have the continued problem of unwanted pregnancy, and only 8 people out of 20,000 care enough to do something about it. The goal of the Birth Control Committee is to publish an informative, up-to-date pamphlet on contraception, abortion and venereal disease. Hopefully, it will explore both the psychological and physiological aspects of all three. It will contain information on where and how to get an abortion, and the cost for one. It will help you decide which form of contraception is best for you and your partner, and where to go to obtain it. It will give you all the facts about venereal disease so that you won't end up sterile, blind, or worse because you didn't recognize the symptoms.

If any of you out there care enough about you fellow students, or your sex partner(s), or yourself to work on this pamphlet, come to the next meeting, November 9th at 6:30, in rooms 805-809 of the Campus Center. Thank you.

CANDIDATES FORUM

There will be a Candidates Forum for Freshman Class Officer Candidates in The Daily Collegian on Monday, November 9th. One letter from each candidate for President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer will be accepted for publication.

The letters must be no longer than one type-written, double spaced, at sixty spaces, 8" by 11 1/2" page.

Letters must carry the candidates name, address, telephone number, and signature.

Any letter deviating from these specifications will not be printed.

Beware The Door To Door Salesman

AMHERST---College students, peer underprivileged people and housewives all have something very much in common.--They are daily being exploited by door-to-door, mail order and telephone salesmen.

These slick young men in their dull gray suits may look innocent enough, but under that clean-cut exterior functions a cool and calculating machine whose sole objective is the aquisition of your pocketbook.

These men and women who often have college backgrounds are hired because of their good looks and their glib tongues. They will persuade you by fast, complicated and unreasoned logic and coerce you by blinking eyes, serenades and even downright seduction.

The products or services which these people are usually pushing are for the most part characterized by their uselessness. Salesmen will go door-to-door selling anything from arch supports to water wings, and with few exceptions will make their merchandise out to be necessities.

There are three standard approaches which these misintentioned people use to force themselves into unsuspecting human lives. Many companies mail out form circulars with promises of introductory gifts or large discounts for merely letting one of their "sales representatives" drop by for a visit. The telephone is another medium whereby they accomplish this same purpose. The third and most common approach is of course the direct method of door bell ringing. In any case this is the most important step in getting a "foot in" to potential pay dirt. Once past this initial phase, the salesmen has won the first battle and half the war. It remains only for him to get the John Hancock on the dotted line behind the "X" to plant his victory flag on your wallet or savings account.

In side the home the tide of battle will quickly turn against his unsuspecting opponent, because the middle class livingroom is home territory for the salesman. Upon familiar ground, the salesman will draw his major weapon from his arsenal--his glib tongue.

Rattling off his memorized spiel, he will on occasion say your first name if you're under 25 and your last name preceeded by Mr. if you're over 25 either to draw your attention back to him or to relax you with a sense of false familiarity or both. Going through his rap, the slick salesman will often have in front of you a colorful illustrated brochure in which he will under line key phrases as he reads them which is not only insulting to one's verbal comprehension, but also slights at one's ability to read.

The whole psychology of the salesmen is first to present himself as a father (mother) image who will by the nature of this image kindly offer to lead his prospective customer by the hand to show him what is good for him. Once this father image has taken root, he will then focus on his product which he will present as being as necessary as formula to the baby that he has attempted to reduce his victim to. His next step is what all of his efforts have been leading up to from the start.

If by this time the customer isn't ready to sign on the dotted line immediately behind the "X", he has run into a pretty unusual customer. The usual phrase following the surprised expression on the salesman's face following a potential customer's hesitantcy is, "Well what's the matter?", as if something has to be the matter with someone who is maybe short on bread or more likely, completely uninterested in the product. If more persuation fails, he will usually briskly gather his wares and depart still with that look of disbelief, leaving his subject with the feeling that he must be the biggest idiot in the world for not buying whatever it was the salesman was selling.

At this point it is probably worth mentioning that statitics show that millions of people in America are victimized every year by these salesmen, and a great many of these are not, as one would expect, stupid or uneducated people. People should make themselves aware of their rights as consumers. They should also be absolutely certain without any reasonable doubt before they sign on that dotted line. Beware of the products or services advertised for college seniors only or for specially selected individuals only, because these statements are more often than not out right lies. Have you ever heard of a salesman who refused to sell someone his product or service because of the customer's educational background or selection? Probably the most valuable advice that can be imparted at this point is, if you don't want to be plagued by persistant telephone calls or ringing door bells, say that you're not interested right off the bat and hang up or close the door. This kind of direct action can save you not only valuable time but could also save you some hard earned bread.

We've Come A Long Way?

Buy a can of brand-name soup and get a woman free...take a bra break to buy a Playtex bra...the best women are thin and rich...Ultra-brite gives your mouth sex appeal...dye your hair and have more fun...you've come a long way baby ..and on and on and on.

But have you ever noticed the fact that there are very few sexy adds with men in them? Has it ever occurred to anyone that women, at least some of us, are getting damned sick and tired of seeing mannequin-type broads parade across the TV screen every fifteen minutes?

Have you ever stopped to count the many subtle ways women are used to sell a product, to play a role, to remain docile dunder-heads who wear chiffon dresses to dust the house, who run int. giants in their washing machines, who just hum their way through screaming kids, mud on the floor, and a grouchy husband.

It's fun to do dishes, wash clothes, fix supper for twenty people, to break up fights between the children. I mean, she can always take a coffee break... If this is true why is it that many housewives become alcoholics, tranquilizer freaks and nervous wrecks? Oh, dig it, women are emotional anyway, they are weak. If this is so true, why is it when wifey is in the hospital having her fifth child, the husband looks so happy when she comes home?

Okay, there are women who dig being a housewife or who don't mind the commercials. Well, maybe they're happy, but what about the women who are struggling to break out of that role, who want something more from life than the latest Betty Crocker's cookbook, who want to be whole women... Consider their agony and frustration...and notice the next time a commercial comes on, the subtlety of the imprisonment policy of this society toward women. Compare the reality of a TV woman and a real woman...Have we really come a long way?

(Ed. Note: This is the second in a series of articles written by women about woman's plight, for everyone, not just women.)

Changes

You have colored your nails apricot brandy green frosted your hair
a dazzling silver changed its shade weekly and painted bust perfect the face which was once so radiant in its uncarved expressions.
It reminds me of a mask of lacquers and so sweet musky perfumes
while the girl I once knew is hidden and / or lost somewhere
deep, deep inside.

Moulding your sapling body into a shape artificial making it hard to distinguish from the clay mannequins whose only beauty is their dress of the rich pelts of animals modishly butchered and skinned for a chicness only you appear to understand.
Taking voice lessons learning how to walk again it seems you have forgotten that my love had been real and for free.

In the popular resorts of the world of status and lies you have come of age wit an easier to pronounce name a supposedly sweeter voice and a form that is false.
You no longer have any use for ideals that cannot change at the speed of a fad.
And I have been made aware that changes are not always for the better when the girl I once knew is now hidden and/or lost somewhere
too deep inside.

The Eternal Paradox

Reaching out into oblivion
I pause for the space of a breath
The limitless arms of time and space feel my inner soul and the fire of life rushes through my veins
no longer wonder why the facts are absolute and meaningless to live is to die a thousand deaths to die is to be free to be caged in life's menagerie is to become encased in glass
nevermore up to forever-
for I exist in constellar mortality my limbs hang in mortal wonder my head floats freely among the clouds
nevermore up to forever-
as the rose imbibes its short-lived dew at morn so too does man life.

All I Want To Say

Each morning now
I see another tree and another burning its beautiful leaves
into the ground

they turn

hail the world away
oh colors
not so beautiful as these falling from the trees rip children's eyes out of their heads hollow and screaming forever dead, dead, dead

Inner City Training Program Sets Up Brooklyn Airlift

An academic airlift to Brooklyn, N.Y., is one feature of a new program designed to train inner city residents to teach in their own communities.

The airlift is a time-saving means of getting UMass faculty to Brooklyn two days each week to teach classes for 200 inner city school paraprofessionals. The classes are part of a federally-funded program designed to offer these paraprofessionals a full academic experience leading to a B.A. degree and teacher certification.

A paraprofessional, according to Royce Phillips, chairman of the Brooklyn project, "is a person employed in the school system, who works in the classroom assisting a teacher but who doesn't have a degree or certification."

The Brooklyn project and a companion project for 60 paraprofessionals in Worcester, are directed by the UMass School of Education and funded by the federal Career Opportunity Program (COP). "The idea is to provide degrees and certification so these people can teach in the inner city where they come from," Phillips explained.

In the Brooklyn project, he added, the paraprofessionals come from three decentralized school districts to attend classes at the Brooklyn Urban Center Building of the State University of New York. Each Monday two light aircraft carry eight UMass English instructors to New York to teach basic English courses; on Wednesday the airlift is repeated with a similar number of School of Education faculty to teach education courses. Each group spends the day in the classroom and is airlifted back at the end of the day. Some other instruction in the Brooklyn program is done by on-site teachers and non airlifted teachers.

The Worcester program is headed by Rhody McCoy, who attained national prominence as the unit administrator for the Ocean Hill-Brownsville School District in New York City. Of the 60 in the Worcester program, 45 take classes at the Elizabeth Street School in that city and 15 study at the UMass Amherst campus.

Rhody McCoy sees his program as "providing education for people who have committed themselves to returning to where they live to improve the educational process."

Yarborough to Ask Who Won Election

Political campaigning techniques used in the Nov. 3 Congressional elections will get the attention of U.S. Senator Ralph W. Yarborough of Texas in a lecture to be given at Smith College.

Sen Yarborough's topic will be "Who Won: Politicians or Pollsters or Film-Makers?" He will speak at 8 p.m., Thursday in Wright Hall on the campus. In case of an overflow audience, the event will be moved to John M. Greene Hall.

A senator for the past 13 years, and in public life for nearly 40 years, Yarborough was defeated in his state's May Democratic primary contest. He is chairman of the Senate Labor and Welfare Committee, and his name probably is attached to more legislation than that of any other senator from Texas in history.

He was author or principal co-sponsor of a number of landmark laws including the National Defense Education Act of 1958, which laid the groundwork for federal aid to education, and the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, which extended the federal aid concept to the public schools below the college level. The senator also personally created and saw through to passage the Cold War GI Bill, the Bilingual Education Act, Professors Emeritus Act and measures to extend educational media aid to schools and assist education of the handicapped.

The lecture is being given as another in the Alice M. Holden Lectureship series. The series was established in 1952 in memory of Miss Holden, a Smith alumna and a member of the college's government department for 29 years. It annually brings to the college an outstanding person who has made a singular contribution to American political life.

UM Counseling Center Provides Instant Intake For Problems

By LINDA A BALICKI
Staff Reporter

Sue, a senior, is worried about her upcoming job interviews and wants advice.
Chuck, a freshman, is confused about his future plans and needs advice in selecting a major.
Phil wants someone to talk to about his relationships with other people and the University as a whole but doesn't know where to go.
Each of these students present problems which, at first glance, would seem to require a number of different agencies to deal with them. Here at UMass, however; these and other problems are dealt with jointly as parts of the function of the Counseling Center.

Located in Whitmore, the Counseling Center is staffed by 7 full time professional counselors as well as 3 full time pay interns and 5 part-time graduate student trainees whose primary aim is to serve the student body and the University as a whole. They attempt to do this by providing a wide range of consultant programs and services.

Primary among these services is that of individual counseling. Such counseling is conducted in strict confidence.

Other programs such as the Interviewee Training Program are designed to help large segments of the University community. Through a series of training sessions, scheduled to begin in March, the program will attempt to introduce interested students to the practices and techniques which have proved important in successful placement.

The Center's recognition of the current trend toward a greater concern for personal growth experiences has led to the establishment of several staff-directed sensitivity groups. There are at present 7 continuous groups which meet weekly. Plans are now being made for two marathon sessions to be held Wednesday, November 11, to allow greater opportunities for student participation.

Other programs designed to benefit the community as a whole include the Residence Hall Counselor Training Program, Freshman and Transfer Orientation Program and professional training of graduate Psychology and Education students in counseling, test interpretation and research procedures.

The Center also serves as the on-campus agency for the Law Boards, the Graduate Record Examination as well as any individual performance tests which may be helpful to the individual student.

Underlying all the Counseling Center's services is a strong belief that an individual's problem should be dealt with as soon as it is presented. It is for this reason that the system of "Instant Intake" has been instituted. Under this system a student is guaranteed attention by a staff member within twenty minutes of his arrival at the Center.

Instant Intake and the entire Counseling Center are open from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, for all who have need or want of their services.

Fine Films Highlight Weekend

Music

The Virtuosi di Roma
This famous Italian chamber orchestra under its conductor Renato Fasano this evening in Bowker Auditorium. Among other works to be performed will be Vivaldi's The Seasons. Tickets for undergraduates $1.00, others priced to $3.00, available at Bowker Box Office.

Swallow Black Forest Roads, and Jennifer Paris, Captain Video's Light Show
Tonight these three talents will perform as part of the new National Concert Series to bring onto campus struggling, talented musicians for some good concerts. Sponsored by George Washington Upper in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Theater

The Skin of Our Teeth
Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer-Prize Winning Play is being presented this weekend in the Laboratory Theater at Mount Holyoke College. Performances are at 8:15 through Sunday and admission for students is $1.00, all others $2.00.

"Underground" Plays
Three short, avant-garde plays, Ionesco's The Lesson, Strindberg's The Stronger, and Schisgal's The Tiger are to be done next Monday and Tuesday evenings by students from the Five Colleges. Performances are at 8 and the admission is 25¢, at the model theater in Sage Hall, Smith College.

Films

The Baby Maker (Academy of Music, Northampton)
Barbara Hersey stars in this film about a childless couple who employ her services as the title suggests.

Catch-22 (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Mike Nichols and screenwriter Buck Henry have attempted to capture the essence of Joseph Heller's novel. Whether they have succeeded is debatable, that they made this admirable attempt makes it probably the year's best film.

Easy Rider (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
"Man, it's like this, man, me and-uh-Billy, man, make this really gas of a trip and like-wow man it was out-of-sight, like too much, man."

Finnegan's Wake (The Talkie, Northampton)
Excerpts from James Joyce's quite unreadable book have been ambitiously brought to the screen in this 1965 film.

Five Easy Pieces (Paris Cinema, Springfield)
A lyric journey up the west coast of America in this episodic film similar, yet supposedly much better than Easy Rider. It won the best film award at the NY Film Festival and contains a highly praised performance by Jack Nicholson as a prodigal son returning home.

For Whom the Bell Tolls, (Tuesday, Nov. 10, Thompson 104, 6 and 9 p.m.)
The 1943 film adaptation of the Ernest Hemingway novel with Ingrid Bergman and Gary Cooper.

Goodbye, Columbus (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:30 and 9:30)
Philip Roth's novella has been updated as Richard Benjamin and Ali McGraw wade their way through the Jewish experience on Long Island.

Hallelujah (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
This interesting and famous film was probably the first serious screen treatment of Negro life. Directed by King Vidor, by today's standards it is viewed as exaggerated, patronizing, and sentimental.

Little Fauss and Big Halsey (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Butch Cassidy meets C.W. Moss and do the Captain America thing, with a nod to Hud, in the American Southwest. Robert Redford and Michael J. Pollard are featured in this not very unique comedy-drama.

Lovers and Other Strangers (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)
Remember the wedding in Goodbye, Columbus? It's back, in spades, this time Italian. Plus related tales of infidelity, sex, divorce, and seduction, all done with good humor and fine performances.

M and Metropolis (GEFF Films, Wednesday, Nov. 11, Thompson 104, 6 and 10)
Two films by the great German director Fritz Lang. The latter is a futuristic fantasy about the horrors of a machine Utopia. The former is a story of a child murdered with Peter Lorre in his first important role.

Monte Walsh (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Lee Marvin stars in this western which is short on talk but long on cliche.

On A Clear Day You Can See Forever (Amherst Cinema)
The perfect night out for the Silent Majority or for fans of Barbra Streisand.

Soldier Blue (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A more honest look at how the White man approached the Indian problem in the west with not-too-subtle allusions to My Lai. Candice Bergen adds love interest between massacres.

The Strawberry Statement (Tonight and Sunday, Southwest Cinema, Hampden Commons, 7:30 and 9:30)
Put Che Guevera in your window and wear those crash helmets to those peace rallies for, as the man sings, the revolution's here and you know that it's right.

Winning (Thursday, November 12, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:45)
A film about auto racing in the gendre of A Man and A Woman and Grand Prix with Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward, and Robert Wagner.

Winter Light (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)
Another in the continuing festival of Igmar Bergman films.

Z (Calvin, Northampton)
Political repression in Greece, a bit heavy in politics but brilliantly executed. The film won an Oscar last year as Best Foreign film and features Yves Montand and Irene Pappas (what's a film about Greece without Irene Pappas?) It's the perfect cartharsis film for liberals.

Grad Student To Exhibit In Student Union Gallery

The second exhibit of the season will be presented by Lawrence Frates at the Student Union Gallery from November 11 to 30. The exhibit consists of thirty-five acrylic paintings of the Amherst area. A noted difference in these works is the treatment of the paint in a watercolo fashion and loose application to the surface.

FINE ARTS

Mr. Frates is a graduate student in the School of Education majoring in aesthetics, and comes to us from the Massachusetts College of Art where he received his B.S. in Art education. He has exhibited throughout the New England area, has been awarded many state and national awards, and lectured at Emmanuel College, Mass. Art, SMU, and UMass, on a variety of subjects ranging from filmmaking in the schools to learning contracts.

The artist was art director for the United States Dept. of Labor through Learning to Learn, and is presently art consultant for the Department of Human Development, creator of LOLLIPOP: a multi-arts program at Mark's Meadow School, art education resource for School of Ed., along with his presently working on a book entitled The Reel World.

Open Rehersal Announced

A special open rehearsal by I Virtuosi Di Roma will be held this afternoon, Friday, November 6th at 2:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. This famed Italian chamber orchestra concludes its two-day visit to the University this evening at 8:00 p.m. when it performs three Concerti Grossi by Corelli and Vivaldi's Four Seasons in Bowker Auditorium as the second of five pairs of concerts in this season's Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series.

This afternoon's open rehearsal will be conducted by the ensemble's founder/musical director, Maestro Renato Fasano.

Rare Earth Easy To Dig

Rare Earth are six native Detroiters in their early twenties who have welded themselves into a self-contained musical entity whose recent single, "Get Ready" went all the way to the number two spot on the nation's record chart.

They provide their own back-up, with Pete Rivera on drums, John Persh on bass and trombone, Kenny James on piano and organ, Ed Guzman adding extra percussion, Rod Richards on guitar and Gil Bridges on saxophone and flute. And all the Rare Earth sing, providing their own vocal background along with the lead.

With the exception of Ed Guzman, a relative newcomer, the present group assembled four years ago as an outgrowth of a trio working in local clubs.

John, Gil and Pete grew up together in the same general neighborhood. At 16, the boys began playing together for parties, dances or "whatever paid." John and Gil both played in their respective school bands at the time, while Pete was primarily self-taught on the drums.

Their musical style evolved from the amalgamation of many separate influences, with each man bringing his own particular background and ideas into the group as it grew. Kenny, for example, has studied accordion since the age of seven. The free association and exchange of ideas inspired them as their own distinctive style emerged from this fusing of forms and individual expressions.

Progressive jazz, hard rock, funky blues and a combination of various other elements all went to make up the style of their characteristic groove.

Part of a continuing expansion and diversification in the record industry, Rare Earth became the first group signed when Motown founded its Independent Division last year. In this capacity, Rare Earth had the unique distinction of recording on the label bearing their own name.

For Motown, the impact of the Rare Earth on the record market has been nothing short of heavenly. "Ecology", their album, was a nationwide break-out in the first week it was released. The chart-crashing LP re-echos the success of Rare Earth's first Motown album, "Get Ready", a follow-up to their hit single. Their smash "I'm Losing You", also hit the top of the charts.

"Communicating with the audience is the motive," Pete said without hesitation, "and you try to get across the enjoyment you feel playing to the people listening. That's what makes it worthwhile."

And the Rare Earth obviously enjoys playing very much, for their audience is growing fast, due at least partially to the enjoyment to be had listening to the heavy sounds as Rare Earth does its thing. It's easy to dig that Rare Earth.

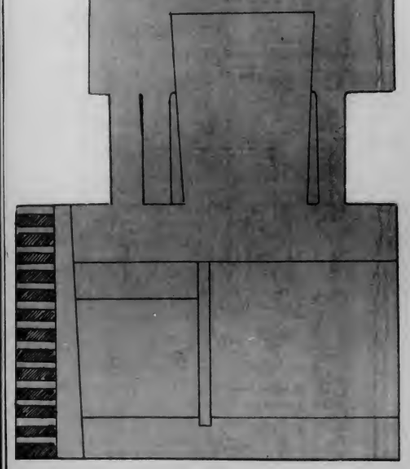
Tippo Hour Will Examine Campus Crime

The weekly administration coffee hour, held Mondays from 12:00-2:00 p.m. in the Student Union Colonial Lounge will deal with the campus security problem and the growing crime rate on campus.

Representing the administration will be Dr. Randolph "Bill" Bromery, special Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs. Dr. Bromery is responsible for the University police and has been the administration's chief trouble-shooter concerning security problems.



Richard Story, assistant to the Chancellor who has been present at the weekly coffee hour discussions regularly, noted that the reason for the special emphasis on security at this week's meeting stems from the preponderance of talk about the problem during past meetings with Chancellor Oswald Tippo.

Frosh Footballers Seek First Win, At UConn

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Forced to go with a revemped line-up because of injuries, the UMass freshman football team will be looking for its first win of the season tonight when it meets the UConn freshmen at UConn. Game time is 7:30.

According to Coach David Kelley, his team has already lost linebacker Bill Hale and offensive halfback Phil Roland for the season with knee injuries. Add this to the fact that linebacker Mike McNiff and tight end Ed Hadjuser are out for at least the Connecticut game, and seven other players are doubtful for tonight's game, it is no wonder that Kelley will have to go with a virtual single platoon type football--playing almost all of his starters on both offense and defense.

The new line-up has Paul Hanson at quarterback and defensive halfback, Tim Berra at both offensive and defensive halfback, Tom Price at center and defensive tackle, and Johnny Jones at offensive guard and defensive end. Gene Pease and Kevin Moran are at the offensive guards, John Crooks will replace Hadjusek at tight end Paul Putes has been moved to offensive halfback and Tom McMahon, who has filled in at just about every position except coach, will start at fullback.

Kelley had this to say about McMahon, "He is one of the best all-around athletes on the team and has been extremely valuable to us by filling in so capably at so many positions."

Dave Yushinsky, who is nursing an injured elbow will get the starting nod at defensive end if he is ready. Yushinsky has been immense all year, and his presence is vital to the defensive front four.

Completing the defense, Rick Marsella will be at tackle, Mike Duffy, Bob Powers, Paul Riley, and Carl Mattarochia at the linebacking positions, and Steve Moschella at safety.

Looking past his injury list to the game at hand, Kelley mentioned that included in UConn's 2-3 record are a loss to BU, which beat UMass, and a victory over URI, which also beat the Little Redmen.

He also noted that Connecticut boasts a fine halfback in Eric Torkelson and a solid quarterback in a boy named Robustelli (yes, another one!).

As might be expected, Coach Kelley feels that his team's chances tonight depend entirely on how the injured player's perform.

Ruggers Exit At Colgate

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

The UMass Rugby Club travels to Colgate University tomorrow to play a match which will either see the Redmen end with a winning or a losing season, as their record now stands at 3-3.

Peter Harrison was lost to the ruggers for the rest of the season, but the side is relatively unhampered by injuries.

Not much is known about Colgate, but they should be basically a university club compared to the foreign clubs the Redmen have been playing.

In action Wednesday, the B team lost to the Amherst Rugby Club, 6-0. This was a very fine effort for the young B's, who will also play tomorrow.

"I Am Champ," Says Clay In NY

NEW YORK (AP)-Muhammed Ali made a triumphant return to New York for the official announcement of his Dec. 7 fight with Argentina's Oscar Bonavona at Madison Square Garden. But he lost one decision in a hurry.

The 15 round closed circuit television fight won't be recognized as a title contest although Ali, also known as Cassius Clay, loudly proclaimed, "I am the heavyweight champion of the world."

Affable and articulate and obviously delighted to be the center of attraction again in the city where he was stripped of his heavyweight crown, Ali either lost his poise, or was just putting on newsmen, when he argued about the title.

In introduced as the "former heavyweight champion of the world," Ali shouted:

"I am the heavyweight champion of the world. There's an imposter running around calling himself the heavyweight champion of the world. We will soon see who is the real champion of the world.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

It's been a slow week for the Great One. All he's done the whole time is sit around wondering why, if there was an election going on, how come he hadn't heard anything about Harold Stassen. Or Estes Kefauver. Is politics dying? Why elections just don't seem the same without Dick Nixon to kick around. Or was he around?

But with all that behind us (where it belongs), the Great One has regrouped his Redman resources to recite his rhetorical rhymes. Whether or not he is once again able to please his perfidious public is another matter. But as the somber savage likes to say, "caveat emptor" (translated literally from sign language).

UMASS 28, HOLY CROSS 7
Crusaders this year have been drawn and quartered, and Redmen not what doctor ordered.

MAINE 16, VERMONT 9
Black Bears are raging and have won two straight, Make that three as Cats have too little too late.

TEMPLE 24, RHODE ISLAND 13
Ram is recovering after crunching affairs, But this is a Temple of players, not prayers.

NEW HAMPSHIRE 14, SPRINGFIELD 13
Wildcats crunched Rams and played without flaws, Another game like that and they'll turn Chiefs to squaws.

CONNECTICUT 21, WILLIAM & MARY 20
Old Virginia is the sight of this Indian war, Although D.C. is near, there'll be blood but no Gore.

BOSTON COLLEGE 35, BUFFALO 3
Eagles are better and may start to get greedious, BC will score so much the game will get TD'ous. (The G.O.'s poetic license has just been revoked).

BOSTON U. 24, RUTGERS 17
Rutgers is slumping but is setting its sights On beating BU, but its black day for Scarlet Knights.

DARTMOUTH 28, COLUMBIA 7
Big Green are without doubt the Ivy League champs, And against them the Lions come off looking like tramps.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio women have an abundance of extrasensory perception. They can feel when something of importance is about to occur. These women are surrounded by an aura of mystery. The Scorpio woman is explosive; she can lose her temper, but she can also show much loyalty, display passion and be present when she is most needed. This woman is anything but easy to completely comprehend. At times, some people proclaim they do not know what to do with her, while realizing they cannot do without her.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Money and responsibility pressure is heavy. Hold off on financial moves. Check tendecy to fly in face of logic. Some friends are troubled. Be understanding without getting involved.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Obtain hint from Aries meanage. Best to delay where sweeping moves are concerned. You have some unfinished business at hand. Fulfill obligations — then path will be clear.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): New procedures are favored. Don't permit anyone to push or threaten you. Assert greater degree of independence. Not wise to trust others with important message. Attend to details personally.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Some who claim to know what is best for your money need not be jolted. Show that you have a mind of your own. Call a halt to bullying tactics.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Lie low. Play waiting game. Permit close associate, mate to set pace. Leave detail to others. Take long-range view. Roadblocks are temporary. Refuse to be depressed. Attend social function.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): You discover opening and make forward progress. Many now are discouraged. But you are able to utilize past contacts. You surprise many who felt you had already expended energy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): New starts set you going in right direction. Surprise due which is associated with children, opposite sex. Virgo individual lends helping hand. Express gratitude.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You may be trying to expand too quickly. Steady your pace. Accent on home, security, possible change of residence. Mate or partner is insistent concerning gift or major concession.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Delay short journey. You may require minor medical, dental work. Communicate with neighbors concerning pet. Some who depend upon you may be shy. Analyze needs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 18): Money decisions appear imminent. Display willingness to handle responsibility. Overtime assignment could aid in lifting prestige. Older person offers sound advice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): You overcome odds to gain recognition. Key is willingness to stick with project. Ignore individual who sounds discouraging note. Be practical. Stick to business.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Hold off on commitments. All facts have yet to be considered. Someone may be withholding information. Know this and proceed with caution. Adhere to personal convictions.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you love children; they do not necessarily have to be your own. You have smeared from period during which you discovered real values. It has not been easy. Now, however, some major efforts will bear fruit.

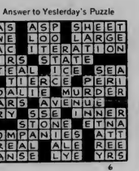
NFC Stronger Than AFC

NEW YORK (AP) - The National Football League heads into the second half of its season this weekend with National Conference teams having established a clear superiority over American Conference clubs in their first 17 meetings.

The score is NFC 14, AFC 3.

In addition, the three teams from the old NFL who moved over to join the 10 American Football League teams in the AFC - Baltimore, Cleveland and Pittsburgh - have built a 12-5 record against former AFL opponents.

At least two coaches - Jerry Williams of Philadelphia and Tom Landry of Dallas - feel the results of the first 17 of the 40 interconference games that will be played this season indicate NFC superiority. "I think that over all the NFC is probably stronger at this time," said Williams. "It would seem to indicate that the NFC is still a little bit better balanced over all. But there isn't much difference. The American Conference has outstanding teams."



"I'd have to say the old NFL teams are stronger this season than they have been in two or three years," Landry pointed out. "However, it is obvious there is tremendous balance in pro football and it appears the 'super' teams are things of the past."

While the two NFC coaches saw it that way, Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins and former coach of the NFL's Baltimore Colts, said he thought it difficult to talk about NFC superiority over the AFL's victories in the last two Super Bowls.

"It would be hard to say the NFC is still stronger after what happened in the last two Super Bowls," said Shula, whose Colts lost to the New York Jets in one. "I'd like to take a look at the end of the year. I look for it to even out a little."

Redmen Chase Third Win Vs. Winless Crusaders

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Chasing its second victory in a row and its third of the season, the UMass football team takes a hop, skip and jump to nearby Worcester tomorrow for a matchup with the Holy Cross Crusaders, a team that hasn't tasted a win since late in 1968. Starting time for this tilt is 1:30 p.m.

Poor H.C. The old school had a poor 3-6-1 record in '68, fired its coach and hired a new skipper, Bill Whitton, and faced last season with high hopes of regaining a winning form. The high hopes were harassed by hepatitis.

After the Crusaders lost their first two games, an outbreak of hepatitis cancelled the remainder of the season forcing the team to try and start anew this fall. Thus far it had not been able to get untracked and suffers an 0-7 mark.

A year layoff from playing the game itself has effected the Crusaders. Head UMass coach Vic Fusia talks about them, "Holy Cross is winless but we know they've had their trouble, and that year layoff didn't help them very much. And they've had injuries."

Being winless this late in the campaign can have one of two effects on a team. One is that the team can be really down and feel that victory is just a hopeless entity in the immediate future. The other is that the team can be really hungry for a win and strive to achieve as many victories as possible to make some worth out of such a disastrous year. Coach Fusia lists Holy Cross as one of the latter type of teams.

He is sure that the Crusaders will be hungry and adds something else. "Because they're playing an interstate rival, I know they'll be ready."

And to spice up this interstate rivalry, UMass will suit up, at Holy Cross tomorrow, no less than eight football players from the Worcester area. They are Pat Scavone, Bill DeFlavio, Joe Sabulis, John Hulecki, Steve Greaney, Walter O'Malley, Skip Parmenter and Ron Lesniewski.

Coach Fusia comments, "We have a lot of Worcester boys and we'd like to make a nice homecoming for them."

About the team in general on the day before the tilt, he has this to offer, "We had another good work week. There seems to be a little extra there this week." The spirit in the Redman camp is higher than ever, what with that good feeling of having just come off of a convincing victory, 48-6 at Vermont's expense.

UMass will be looking for that third win to help balance off the four losses and one tie. Thus, with one team looking to break into the winning column and the other hoping to remain in that column for a change, the makings seem to be there for fine, high-spirited affair.

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES-Not to dampen anyone's fervor for following the Redman football team, but there is another "foot" ball team on campus and it's playing at home tomorrow afternoon at 2...The UMass soccer team, probably the best this school has ever had, will be playing New Hampshire tomorrow and, should it win, it will capture the Yankee Conference soccer title..The Redman booters have an overall record of 5-2-2, losing those two games by one goal each... They are exciting to watch and, if one can't make it to Worcester, he is advised to meander down to the field across from Boyden and take in this important soccer match...Back to the gridmen, Fusia was asked to comment on quarterback Ken Hughes' fine play as of late...He rest of the offensive line has Bob Pena at guard, Bob Donlin at tackle, Dave Levine at center and John Hulecki and Steve Shubert at the end posts...The quarterback will be Hughes; his backfield mates will be Scavone, Mark Russell and Dick Cummings...Dick Heavey will be suited up but will not play, having sustained an injury against Vermont...He played a good part of that game nagged by an injury and finally impaired himself badly when he struggled for six tough yards on the next to the last play of the game..He was deservedly awarded the game ball by his teammates.

answered thusly, "I think Ken is putting our offense together. The last two games he's been moving the team with consistency....He just seems to be coming into his own"..... Starting on defense for the Redmen will be the famous 11-combo of Wood, Sroka, DeFlavio, Kelliher, Collins, Leamy, Farrelly, Sabulis, Keating, Bush and O'Neil ..The offensive picture has a couple of changes because of an ankle injury to guard Jim Queeney and a knee injury to tackle Clarence Brooks...Dick Etna will be in there replacing Queeney; either Bill Byron or Tom Mullen will fill Brooks' shoes...The

Soccermen Bid For YanCon Title

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

Looking to be the first UMass soccer squad ever to win the Yankee Conference title, the 1970 Redman booters will host the Wildcats from the University of New Hampshire tomorrow afternoon at 2.

The soccermen will attempt to bounce back from Wednesday's 1-0 loss to Springfield College. The Redmen won last year's ballgame, played in Durham, N. H. and began an undefeated streak that lasted for eight games, including six this season.

New Hampshire, however, will be eager to play the role of the spoiler, and it has the personnel capable of doing it. As everyone knows by now, the UMass soccer season "is" tomorrow, as this game is the biggest in a series of must ones the boosters have played.

UNH has three players among the top ten in Conference scoring. Team leader Joe Murdock has five scores, as does forward Mark Peltz, and Dave Philson has three goals to go along with his four assists. The other scoring threat for the Wildcats, Dick Berdon, has two tallies.

The visiting booters are backboned in the net by a freshman, Jim Mueller, who has a very fine goals-against-average of 1.3 a game. He was recently named to the weekly Conference all-star team for his fine performances.

At fullback the Wildcats have two solid ballplayers in the persons of Dave Dranes and Dick Pettingill, both of whom will attempt to control the Redman forwards. At halfback UNH has captain Henry Brealey of San Jose, Costa Rica, home of veteran Redman forward Gus Penon.

UMass enters the game in good shape physically, although the playing status of winger Larry DeFelice is questionable. DeFelice was injured in the Springfield contest. Otherwise the booters are ready for New Hampshire.

Several seniors will be making their last home appearances Redman uniforms. Three-year starter and two-year co-captain Rick Matusczcak, three-year leading scorer Duane Brown, two-year starter Marc Cantor, Larry DeFelice, second leading scorer last season, Gus Penon, Tony Nunziante, Dave Piccus and Dan Hoewle will all be looking to go out winners, and more especially a champions of the Yankee Conference.

Harriers Score Shutout In New England Tune-Up

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Team depth was the name of the game once again as the UMass cross country team shut out Central Connecticut, 15-50, Wednesday, in its final tune-up before the New England championship on Monday.

The Redmen were led in this race by Senior Larry Paulson and sophomore Tom Jasmin who finished in a tie for first place. Both runners ran with apparent ease over the 5.2 mile Central Connecticut course, as they averaged 5:02 per mile.

Two more sophomores, Tom Swain and Rick Barry, nailed down the third and fourth positions. For Swain, who finished second in the YanCon championship last Saturday, this was another in a long line of consistent performances. Barry was only 15 seconds behind Swain as he showed signs that he has recovered from his bout with the flu and will be ready to go on Monday.

The next three places went to Rich Tashjian, Arnie Morse, and Bob Sullivan. With the absence of Ron Wayne and Leo Duart from the Redman line-up, these three came through with big performances as they kept the number one Central Connecticut runner from not only scoring but also from breaking into the top seven Redmen finishers, resulting in the shutout.

For Tashjian, this was his best race of the year, with his fifth place effort giving the Redmen a time split of just over a minute.

Coach Ken O'Brien was surprised at this easy victory. He expected Central to be much stronger than it showed on its home course.

The Redman win upped their dual meet record for the season to 6-2-1, with one more meet remaining with New Hampshire next Thursday at home.

On the freshman level, the UMass frosh trounced Central Connecticut, 17-44. This was the best race to date for the Redman frosh as they easily handled a Central team that was touted as one of the best freshman units in New England.

Rich Sevigny led the way for UMass with a record setting performance of 19:49, breaking the old 3.2 mile freshman course record by nine seconds.

Joe Frontierro and Roger Nasatka also turned in their best performances of the season, as this race gave all indications that the UMass frosh will be ready on Monday to battle it out with the freshman units from UConn and Northeastern for the championship of New England.

Socialist Conference Weekend . . . .

Cindy Jackworth, Women's Lib

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

The strategy of the women's liberation movement must continue to be one of mass demonstrations, according to Cindy Jackworth, who spoke Saturday afternoon at the Socialist Educational Conference. She is the coordinator of the Women's Committee of the National Young Socialist Alliance and has been very active in women's liberation.

Miss Jackworth said that women must take lessons from both the black ank and peace movements and follow their lead by taking their own cause into the streets in mass actions. She said that just as peace candidates have done little for that cause compared with the response to demonstrations, women's lib candidates cannot expect to reform the country through the two-party system.

A nationwide demonstration on August 26 pointed out that the masses can be effective. On that date, women rallied in the streets in their widest-spread action yet and for the first time were taken seriously by much of the nation. Miss Jackworth said that the response on that date showed that the four basic demands made were relevant to all women.

The four demands call for:

free abortion on demand of the pregnant women;

free 24-hour child care units controlled by the users; equality on the job, with equal pay and equal opportunity for the same jobs as men hold;

equal opportunity in education.

At some time in their involvement, no matter what their background, women will come to question capitalism and see that "The only real solution is in a system where needs are served by the whole society."

According to Miss Jackworth, a capitalistic system cannot meet the demands of women's liberation, but socialism can. Only the anti-materialism of socialism could make available the resources necessary for such things as free abortion and free 24-hour child care.

In the conversion to socialism, one thing that must be done away with is the traditional family unit, Miss Jackworth said. The family provides capitalism with an escape from social care for the young and the aged; with a means for inculcating in the young, "bourgeois" beliefs and morals; and with a justification for the whole oppression of women, denying them much opportunity because they "belong in the home."

From her perspective as a socialist, she said that women must therefore join in a revolution against capitalism. She called for women, as a movement, to join the other masses of oppressed people such as students, Chicanos, and blacks to form a united movement against the one cause of all their oppression, the capitalistic system.

Dick Roberts

By WALTER SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

Speaking before a group of 35 people Friday night, Dick Roberts, staff writer for The Militant and managing editor of The International Socialist Review, said, "In a capitalist society, the needs of mankind are secondary to that of accumulating capital."

As part of the Western New England Socialist Conference, Roberts was speaking on "Inflation, Unemployment and Nixons War Program: A Marxist Analysis."

Dick Roberts, managing editor of The International Socialist Review, spoke to a group of 35 people Friday night on the problems of a capitalistic society. (MDC Photo by Steve Schmidt.)

He started out by stating the fact that growth of population, accumulation of capital, and advance of technology should go hand in hand. "A closer look, however, will reveal that these relationships are not so harmonious," he said.

Roberts went on, "Capital accumulates, simply enough, by the production and sale of goods. What makes a product more valuable from one form to another? The value of a Ford is more than that of its component parts. There is only one way that goods can become more valuable from one form to another - by the human labor put into them. The problem is that people think the products themselves have value, but the price you pay is the result of human labor. Thus, labor gives a product its value."

According to Roberts, capitalists purchase human labor power at less than its value. The resultant surplus value is received entirely by the capitalists. This allows them to expand. The workers, he said, are exploited, and this exploitation is carefully guarded by the capitalist states, military, judiciary and police.

Proposing to show that America is a class society, Roberts quoted from the U.S. Gov. Income Tax figures, and came to some revealing conclusions. He showed that 71 per cent of Americans are making less than what the government feels is adequate for a comfortable income.

In the matter of unearned, or dividend income, he said that in families making $5000 or less a year, dividend income averages at $36 per person per year. For the 2853 persons in the U.S. making $1 million or more a year, the annual unearned income is $500,000 per person.

"Capital must accumulate in this system because if one company doesn't expand, the next one will. Human labor is the only limited commodity in the system, and competition for this force causes a lot of anarchistic behavior in the world. Capital MUST expand and accumulate. That is the capitalist economics that confronts us.

On the relationship between capitalism and technology, he said, "Technology is improved solely for the purpose of accumulating capital, not for the health and safety of the workers. There is a contradiction between the technologial advances made and the exploitation of human labor...Wastefulness implied by advance in technology should be emphasized. Planned obsolescence is a necessity for capitalists. Imagine what productivity could be if not hindered by capitalism. America could raise its productivity for the benefit of the world rather than capitalists.

Roberts concluded, "The most dangerous thing to capitalism is what we're doing here tonight. Thinking about reality."

. . . . Alternative To The Present Systems

Joe Miles

By SANDY MITCHNER
Staff Reporter

"A chicken can not produce a duck egg. The oppressive system of government can not produce freedom," Malcolm X quoted by Joe Miles, one of the speakers at the Socialist Conference of Western New England, in his address given yesterday morning in the Council Chambers of the Student Union to an audience of about 25 people.

Mr. Miles a member of the socialist party and a black ex G.I. had an audience of mostly young white students. He spoke to them of his concern for liberation and unity amongst the 3rd world peoples using as an example a successful organization of a community of Chicano Indians who were able to gain influence and control over the important areas of consideration such as choosing a jury and in community control over schools.

Miles stressed that this type of unity would be needed within the black communities for determination of any means of control.

He said,"A brake with the formal Democratic and Republican parties and the formation of an independent political organization is needed. An organization which would be able to defend any black person, such as in the case of Angela Davis."

He also advocated that an organization of this type, while working on and in election years would also work in between election years on other important issues; such as community control of school and community control of the police.

Miles, advocates that in a community such as Boston's violence would be curbed if there were community control over police. He mentioned a black radio program aired weekly on a Boston Radio station W.I.L.D. which sights in idents of police brutality.

"An independent political organization could also conduct rent strikes to demand better living conditons and also protest the Vietnam war by demanding that black men be exempt from military service" said Miles who was organizer of the G.I. United Front. An organization which consisted mostly of black and puerto ricans, gained support from white G.I. who were also opposed to war.

In offering the history of the black man as a guide line to the struggle, Miles accussed the old political parties of having no interest in blacks from the time of reconstruction to now. He stated, "Americans need racism to oppress indians and blacks into doing the lesser jobs and in instituting capitalistic threats other whites, with the loss of their job to members of the minority groups."

He said, "Oppressed blacks are all proltarian they are in the forefront to more against the oppressor in the struggle", and pointed out that the only people who can effect the struggle would be racist people who had any control in the power structure.

More 3rd world liberationist ere said to imbrace scientific Marxism then nationalist but Marxism said Miles is the only way to liberation and cited Cuban nationalist as an example.

Miles accused American and Western European countries of preventing industrialization within the 3rd world countries by the use of high tarriffs and blockades.

"The American eagle has become a vulture by praying on 3rd world countries," ended Joe Miles by quoting Malcolm X.

Peter Camejo

By KERRY KELLEY
Staff Reporter

Peter Camejo, recent Socialist Senatorial candidate in Massachusetts, gave a history of the oppression of blacks in America Saturday, as the second in a series of lectures given at the Socialist Conference over the weekend.

In a lecture entitled "The Second American Revolution -- the Development of a Black Nation", Camejo traced the reasons for black oppression in this country back to what happened during the "second revolution", or the Civil War.

Camejo told his audience that the basic issue behind the war wasn't slavery, but the control of a capitalistic economy in America. The only reason Lincoln developed an anti-slavery policy for the north, he declared, was because it was needed to win the war physically. Camejo called Lincoln a "racist, vicious animal" who was "willing to compromise on slavery for the unity of the country."

This "unity", Camejo said, was based on the fact that a capitalist country can't survive economically if it is split internally. Slavery was adopted by the abolisitionists, he explained, as an ideology for the war.

The reconstruction period marked the birth of the black rebellion, Camejo went on to say.

The reconstruction period marked the birth of the black rebellion, Camejo went on to say. The "revolution" hadn't been completed, he explained, and the blacks began to push for the necessary reforms.

But southerners sought the half of reconstruction because the blacks were going to get in their way, the speaker told his audience. The blacks were still a necessary source of labor, he explained, so laws were instituted to exploit the blacks.

A counter-revolution developed with this as its first success, and, Camejo said, with racism as its ideology. The Afro-American nation can be defined by what happened to the blacks during this time, he said.

The black struggle became a "nationalistic one", Camejo said, because they were "suppressed as a nation". So they began to rebel as a nation.

The rebellion was continued into the twentieth century by urbanization and a decrease in a need for cheap labor in the south, Camejo explained. It was now that the movement could find a firmer base, he added, since repression became more difficult.

Along with urbanization as a favorable factor in their struggle, Camejo said that the world situation today is helping the blacks. There is more sympathy on an international scale for repressed minorities so that the government won't be able to exploit blacks through laws anymore, he explained.

Suicidal Death Claims UMass Chaplain

By MARK SILVERMAN
Managing Editor

UMass chaplin the Rev. Ronald W. Hardy, 27, died Friday from burns suffered in an apparent suicide Thursday night, according to State Police.

Rev. Hardy, police spokesmen said, doused his clothes with Kerosene and then set them on fire early Thursday evening near his home in Conway. He was taken first by local police to Farren Memorial Hospital and was later transfered to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

His wife said he has been depressed for several weeks (by the frustrations he said he was having as one of the University's chaplins) and had been under the care of a psychiatrist for several weeks.

The Rt. Rev. Monsignor David J. Power of the Newman Center said he spoke for all members of the University community when he expressed his "deep sorrow" over Rev. Hardy's death last night. Monsignor Power said, "He was a man who dedicated his life to God, a man who was a perfect minister for all the students on this campus. I hope all members of our community will remember him in their prayers."

Rev. Hardy was one of 25 persons arrested two years ago during the occupation of Whitmore in a protest against the presence of a Dow Chemical Co. recruiter on campus.

Mr Hardy was born on January 12, 1943, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Hardy of Norwood. He received his B. A. from Brown University and his Bachelor of Divinity degrees from Andover Newton Theological Seminary in 1968.

He came to Amherst in 1968 as an intern in the University's campus ministry program of the United Christian Foundation and was ordained at the First Baptist Church of Amherst on May 25, 1968.

His wife, the former Anne Gabaver of Oregon, his parents and a brother, David, survive him.

Private Funeral Services will be held today at the Nelson Congreagational Church in Nelson, and buriel will take place in the cemetary there. A memorial service is planned for noon Tuesday at the First Baptist Church in Amherst.

Contributions in his memory may be made to the Ronald Hardy Memorial Fund care of the United Christian Foundation, 319 Hampshire House

There will be a manatory meeting of all Collegian business personnel (ad layout and sales people) Tuesday at 2 p.m.

War To End Before 1972 Election Nixon Claims In Time Interview

NEW YORK (AP)-Time magazine quoted President Nixon yesterday as telling his Cabinet and top advisors the Vietnam war will be over by 1972, enhancing the party's chances in the presidential election.

Moreover, the magazine said, Nixon told them the country would be prosperous by the election and that the upward trend in crimes would be reversed.

The magazine noted, in a statement, that it could give no source for its quotations.

The President, Time said, told the meetings attended also by his daughter, Tricia: "The war will be over and we will have peace with prosperity." As for the economy, it will be good in 1971, with a very strong upturn in 1972.

"Law and order will also be an issue to this degree: crime has gone up 150 per cent in the past eight years, but it is now finally beginning to go back down. We the Republicans have a remarkable record on the law and order issue, with crime legislation, obscenity and narcotics bills. We now have the most effective program to deal with crime."

Time said Nixon closed the meetings with some advice to his team: "If any of you are betting men, you can give your friends in the press odds on the presidential success in 1972."

The meetings were called as a postmortem on the 1970 election.

Time said the two sessions-the first for the Cabinet and the second for about 30 top White House advisors-were told by the President: "The election, ideologically, was enormously successful."

The magazine said he told them that analysts who stated it was not a Republican victory were writing "what their hearts, not their heads, tell them."

Time said Nixon told his associates that he decided to campaign, against the advice of his aides, Oct. 8 when he saw that polls which he had commissioned were running against the Republicans.

Nixon said Time, claimed that success came because "We emphasized the peace issue."

The whole secret of any campaign is to talk about your issues. The peace issue was very beneficial."

"We gained a working majority of at least three," Time quoted Nixon as saying. "In addition there's the fallout effect on senators up for reelection in 1972. The changes this year might make some of them read the tea leaves."

Nixon downgraded Democratic successes in gaining governorships, Time said. "I have yet to see a popular governor pull in a president," it quoted him.

"The governors cannot produce votes for a president, only a machine can. The only machine left is Daley's and we'll see if we can't offset that with the Ogilvie machine."

Richard Daley is Democratic mayor of Chicago and Richard Ogilvie is Republican governor of Illinois.

Time said Nixon masterminded the strategy which beat liberal Republican Sen. Charles E. Goodell in New York. The magazine said he saw victory shaping up for Democrat Richard L. Ottinger, sent Vice President Spiro T. Agnew into the field to pull liberal votes away from Ottinger to Goodell in sympathy for Agnew's attacks, thus "leaving the way clear for Buckley's end run."

Muskie to Sound Out Democratic Leaders

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D Maine, said yesterday that "in a tentative, limited way," he has started to sound out Democratic leaders to the chances of their supporting him as the party's 1972 presidential candidate.

But Muskie, who was re-elected last Tuesday to a third term as Maine's senator, said that "effort obviously has to be expanded and escalated" if he does make up his mind to run for president.

Muskie declined to name the persons he has contacted and said it has been "too limited" a list. "To reveal it would misrepresent the nature of my interests and my drive in this connection," he said.

The Maine Democrat was interviewed on NBC"s radio television program, "Meet the Press."

On election eve, Muskie broadcast on all three major television networks an appeal for votes for Democratic candidates. Muskie's broadcast followed one by President Nixon.

In a post election analysis yesterday, Muskie said Democratic party victories and generated "considerable momentum and enthusiasm" among members and had a strong unifying effect on them.

"I hope that we will not focus upon our differences but upon the challenge of electing a president," Muskie said.

Muskie said he as well as his supporters would not agree with a published report that he has an "imposing" campaign organization already at work to get him the 1972 presidential nomination.

"We do have an organization but it must be expanded to meet the needs of the future," he said. "It is far from imposing in size and numbers at this point. Nevertheless, we are taking the first steps that could lead to the next."

He said he has no timetable as to when he will announce his decision whether or not to run for the White House.

"It would depend on the response I get: the feeling I develop about the sense of timing; and the unfolding of events," he said. "I don't intend to be coy about it...I plan to pick the time that will be best."

In the next two years, Muskie said, he will direct his efforts towards giving the country the leadership it "desperately needs to heal our divisions."

When the decision is made on who will be the party's presidential nominee, Muskie said, "it will depend on whether I am the candidate who can best fill that function."

National Guard Patrols Riot-Torn Carolina Town

HENDERSON, N.C.(AP)-National Guard and highway patrol troopers patrolled the racially tense town of Henderson yesterday and a curfew was ordered for the third night in a row.

City Manager R.W. Buck announced that, although the town was calm, the guard had been asked to remain another night to enforce the curfew.

He also said school bus transportation which has been halted for more than a week because of the unrest, would resume Monday.

The town of 15,000 persons remained quiet Saturday night under heavy patrol, although by dawn yesterday 101 persons had been jailed for curfew violations. Three white men also were booked on charges of firearms violations after officers reported finding two shotguns in their car.

Gov. Bob Scott paid a surprise visit to the town, which has been troubled by school desegregation problems for more than a month.

Scott arrived about 11 p.m., met with city and National Guard officials and then toured the troubled section of the city.

Scott had ordered about 350 guardsmen into the city Saturday after a night of sporadic shooting and firebombing which left a tobacco warehouse and a home destroyed. Several persons suffered minor injuries.

A contigent of 60 highway patrol troopers had been sent into the area to help quell Friday night's disturbances, which began after police used tear gas to disperse a group of Negroes protesting school policies.

One fire bomb was reported Saturday night at a community center in Bobbitt, about five miles south of Henderson, but there was no property damage. An arson attempt was reported at a grocery in a black section of Henderson.

Iranians Threaten

BEIRUT, Lebanon(AP)-Iran has given warning that if British troops are withdrawn from the oil rich Persian Gulf, it is prepared to use force to back its claim to a group of islands at the gulf's eastern entrance.

Kidnapped Trade Head Believed Unharmed

MONTREAL, Canada (AP) - Canadian newspapers published yesterday four different photographs that appeared to be of kidnaped British Trade Commissioner James R. Cross who is being held hostage by a terrorist cell of the Quebec Liberation Front.

The pictures, sent out by the Front, known as the FLQ for the initials of its name in French, apparently meant to show that Cross, 59, who was kidnaped Oct. 5, is alive and well.

Quebec's labor minister, Pierre Laporte, was kidnaped by FLQ terrorists Oct. 10 and strangled a week later. A 19 year old student, Bernard Lortie, was arrested by police Friday and told a coroner's inquest that he and three other FLQ members abducted Laporte from his home. Lortie said, however, that he had left the hideout house in suburban St. Hubert the day before the labor minister was killed.

One of the photos purportedly of Cross was received along with a note by the newspaper Journal de Montreal. Contents of the note were not revealed by either the newspaper or authorities.

The Associated Press in New York also received a photo and communique through the mails Saturday. The statement gave no information about Cross but said the FLQ was "determined to carry out a revolution." The two other pictures were received Wednesday and Saturday by the weekly Quebec Presse.

Lortie, who gave the inquest a detailed account of Laporte's kidnaping, had been arrested by police at the Gaston Apartments near Montreal University.

Marcel Champagne, 53, manager of the apartment house, and his son, Michel, 22, said detectives arrived at the building at 7 p.m. Friday and went directly to apartment 12 where Lortie was hiding.

Michel said "there were police on the roof of this building and the buildings on both sides. Fifteen cars were outside."

Lortie was handcuffed and led out of the building by police who referred to their prisoner as Bulduc.

"Apparently it was to keep us from finding out who he was," said the son. He said his family was surprised to find out that the prisoner was Lortie.

"Red Rudi" Ouster Causing British Political Row

LONDON (AP) - A major political row seemed to be building up Sunday because of government moves to oust German Marxist student leader Rudi Dutschke from Britain.

Tagged by the conservative Sunday Telegraph "The Affair of 'Red Rudi'" the case provides the first test of the Immigration Appeals Act instituted this year to set up machinery for appeals of deportation orders.

The independent Sunday Times suggested that Home Secretary Reginald Maudling, who branded Dutschke, 31, a security risk in ordering him expelled, may find himself on trial politically.

Dutschke came to Britain in 1968 for brain surgery after an assassin shot him in West Berlin. He promised not to engage in political activities and was granted an entry permit good for six weeks.

This permit was extended three times. This fall Dutschke was granted a scholarship to do research at Cambridge University into the works of Gyoergy Lukacs, a Hungarian Marxist, but was ordered to leave the country by Sept. 30 as he was about to begin his project. When protests arose, Maudling extended the deadline and set up a special panel to hear the appeal.

At Cambridge, Dutschke, living in the married quarters with his American born wife, Gretchen, and their 3 year old son, Che Guevara, has received visitors from every part of Europe. But he denies he has engaged in "direct" political activities. "Presumably someone has gained information from sources capable of putting an ominous construction on simple visits with friends and conversations on political matters," he said of the charges.

"Red Rudi" was born in East Germany but fled nine years ago to West Berlin, saying he could not serve communism as interpreted in East Germany. He studied sociology at th e American backed Free University of Berlin.

Wooden Raft Completes 7,000 Mile Voyage

BRISBANE, Australia (AP)-A balsa log raft with a crew of four men and a cat completed a 7,000 mile journey Thursday from South America. The voyagers offered it as proof ancient man could have made the same westward trip.

Hundreds of Australians gathered in the small town of Mooloolaba and cheered as the raft, La Balsa, bobbed into the harbor at the end of a trawler's towline. It had been towed the final 60 miles of the voyage from Ecuador after a 24 hour search for the craft in the reefs of Australia's east coast some 80 miles north of Brisbane.

The Spanish captain, Vitale Alsar, said his crew was in good shape but "it was very lonely out there with nothing but hundreds of sharks-big, ugly sharks."

Making the 161 days voyage with Alsar were Frenchman Marcel Modena, Chilean Gabirel Garces, Canadian Normand Tetreaul, and the feline mascot, Minette, which was placed in quarantine.

Alsar told the crowd "we are very happy the voyage is over. We have proved that ancient man could have come from South America to Australia. We had many adventures. I began badly by being seasick for the first 45 days."

The greatest danger occurred several days ago, Alsar said, when the raft hit a submerged reef and the keel was damaged. They even succeeded in making repairs, however.

Man Freed 28 Years After Trial

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - A federal appeals court ordered freed Thursday a man sent to prison 28 years ago on a rape conviction, saying discrimination existed against Mexican Americans on juries.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals applied an 1880 law in ruling in favor of Samuel E. Muniz of El Paso.

The State of Texas had argued that modern day concepts of jury composition should not be given retroactive application in the case.

In its order the court ruled that in 1942 the application of Texas statures in El Paso County resulted in an unconstitutional underrepresentation of Mexican Americans in the selection of juries.

The appeals court said that if the state chooses to seek a new trial, Muniz could be held in prison for a "reasonable" period.

24 Charged In Canadian Disturbances

MONTREAL (AP) - Twenty-four angry defendants were arraigned Thursday at a tumultuous court session under the emergency War Measures Act proclaimed after the kidnap-slaying of Quebec's labor minister last month.

Some shouted obscenities and waved their fists as they were charged with offenses ranging from seditious conspiracy to membership in an illegal association.

They were arraigned under heavy security precautions on the sixth floor of provincial police headquarters. Many had been held for 21 days - the maximum time they could be detained without being charged under the War Measures Act. All pleaded innocent and their trials were set for Jan. 7.

Police and soldiers arrested 429 persons in massive searches after the War Measure Act was invoked Oct. 16, but 372 were released, leaving 57 in jail awaiting charges. The act remains in effect.

Thirteen other persons arrested under the emergency measure have been arraigned in other parts of Quebec Province, including Richard Hudson, 24, who gave his birthplace as the State of Alabama.

Hudson, who said he now lives in L'Islet Sur Mer on the St. Lawrence River, was charged in Quebec City with advocating principles of the terrorist Quebec Liberation Front - FLQ.

FLQ cells claimed responsibility for the slaying of Pierre Laporte, provincial labor minister who was kidnapped Oct. 10, and for the Oct. 5 abduction of British Trade Commissioner James Cross, who is still missing.

Assassination Try On Nixon Rumored

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla.(AP) - FBI agents here and in Washington are pressing an inquiry into an unverified report that a shot may have been fired at President Nixon before his limousine was stoned Oct. 29 in San Jose, Calif.

Agents are interviewing members of the White House staff and newsmen who witnessed the attack on Nixon's motorcade during the violent antiwar demonstration outside a San Jose auditorium where the chief executive had delivered a campaign speech.

The FBI is focusing on a brief time span during which Nixon emerged from the hall, stood on the hood of his car and waved "V" signs with his fingers at the demonstrators.

Questions asked by FBI men seemed to suggest they suspect that if a shot was fired at Nixon, the weapon may have been equipped with a silencer or was of relatively low caliber and was fired from a distance.

No newsmen on the scene at the time, so far as is known, had any reason to believe a shot was fired.

The FBI in Washington said earlier that it had been investigating the attack on the presidential motorcade for several days, but refused to go into any details.

Campus Problems Of Security And Crime To Spotlight Coffee Hour

By WILLIAM LONGRIDGE
Staff Reporter

This week's Administration coffee hour, scheduled for today from 12 P.M. to 2 P.M. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union will examine the campus security problem and the growing crime rate on campus.

Representing the administration will be Dr. Randolph Bromery, special assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs who is responsible for the University police and their function on campus.

During a telephone interview last night, Dr Bromery voiced his proposals for alleviating the campus security problem and his long range plans for a more humanistic approach to University living, both, he believes, being directly related.

"The University has grown with such tremendous strides, that the student has lost the feeling for his brother," stated Dr. Bromery, "he lack of personal ties between students is a major cause of interdorm thefts--no one cares." "This situation can also be related to the parking lot thefts which are widespread in the student lots," the Doctor stated.

The Doctors' plan for remedying the situation is long range, but one which he is sure will be effective. "The student should want to live in his dorm room, not just sleep and study in it" he declared, "the room should be the students' haven when he is tired and alone, not a reminder of his loneliness." Improvement can be brought about the Doctor believes by individual preference, in terms of varicolored walls, individual selection of rooms, and a coordinated effort by dormitories to humanize their surroundings.

To improve the dorm theft situation, Dr Bromery feels that the dorm inhabitants are the most effective security force. "Plans are underway presently to improve security communications, so that as soon as a theft is reported, it can be dealt with efficiency. "The one situation to avoid is that of the self-appointed vigilante committee," the doctor stated, "a simple telephone call will accomplish much more in solving the problem."

In order to alleviate the car thefts from student lots, the Doctor proposes that fences be erected, lights installed, and guards posted.

"This procedure will result in increased cost for parking lot stickers". Bromery cautioned, "but will insure that the cars are not vandalized and incur even higher costs to the automobile owner."

Finally, Dr. Bromery believes that better working relations must be assumed between the security guards and the regular officers of the Campus Police force. "As the situation stands now," the Doctor stated, "the two groups are distinct in their fuctions and thus suffer a loss in efficiency on the job." "The sixty man force must be utilized effectively in order to ward off the current rash of vandalism," Doctor Bromery concluded

Congressman Richard Bolling, Dem.-Mo. will appear at the Distinguished Visitors Program lecture tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The topic of the lecture is "Congressional Reform".

The Congressman is a member of the Joint-House-Senate Economic Committee and Chairman of its Urban Affairs Subcommittee. He resides on the Committee on Rules and its Special Sub-committee on Standards and Conduct.

The University community is urged to attend this next in a series of programs sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Committee.

"Focus" On Politics In Low-Income Areas

Tonight at 10 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" program will examine some of the problems faced by political organizers in low-income ghettos, both rural and urban.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests will be Peter Hawes, a former UMass student in business administration who is presently serving as a VISTA in the small rural town of Brickton, North Carolina; two residents of Brickton's black community; and Alwin Schmidt, chairman of the Community Action Foundation's Committee on Poverty, which is initiating a local project in cooperation with "Frontlash," a nation-wide voter registration drive centered principally in low-income Negro and Puerto Rican urban communities.

The live 60-minute program will conclude with a brief memorial statement in tribute to Rev. Ronald W. Hardy who died last Friday. Rev. Hardy, a chaplain with the University's United Christian Foundation, was well known for his tireless commitment to the peace movement and his service as chairman of the Board of Directors of the now-defunct Martin Luther King Council.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM on the radio dial.

DVP-Hillel Brings Shlomo Back For Third UMass Concert

Last fall Shlomo Carlebach appeared in Bowker Auditorium under joint DVP and Hillel sponsorship. By the end of his concert most students were sitting around him on the stage or dancing in the aisles. The closing time of the building ended the concert. There was no applause because there was no sense of audience and performer. All were participant. Some students followed Shlomo to Rabbi Kowal's home where singing continued till two in the morning. Hillel brought Shlomo back about a month later because of popular demand. By midnight the audience in the SU ballroom was draped over the furniture, floor and stage in total, danced out exhaustion. Some referred to the evening as a "mass freak-out".

RABBI SHLOMO CARLEBACH

Shlomo is a unique experience. A Rabbi in the Hasidic tradition, he chose the night club and concert hall rather than the pulpit to bring his message. His message is undeniably universal, though expressed in an uncompromisingly Jewish particularism. He is understandable to all.

Because interest in the Shlomo experience has not been sated Hillel has arranged to bring him back again to UMass. He will give a concert on November 10th in the Student Union ballroom at 8:30 p.m. Admission charge is $1.00 and advanced tickets may be bought at the Hillel Office, 420 Student Union.

Muskie 'Reaching' For Prexy Support

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D Maine, said yesterday that "in a tentative, limited way" he has started to sound out Democratic leaders as to the chances of their supporting him as the party's 1972 presidential candidate.

But Muskie, who was re-elected last Tuesday to a third term as Maine's senator, said that "effort obviously has to be expanded and escalated" if he does make up his mind to run for President.

Muskie declined to name the persons he has contacted and said it has been "too limited" a list. "To reveal it would misrepresent the nature of my interests and my drive in this connection," he said.

The Maine Democrat was interviewed on NBC's radio-television program, "Meet The Press."

Muskie said he as well as his supporters would not agree with a published report that he has "imposing" campaign organization already at work to get him the 1972 presidential nomination.

"We do have an organization but it must be expanded to meet the needs of the future," he said. "It is far from imposing in size and numbers at this point. Nevertheless, we are taking the first steps that could lead to the next."

He said he has no timetable as to when he will announce his decision whether or not to run for the White House.

Commitment To The Group's Goal Asked Of Precisionette Tryouts

In the past three years, the student senate has cut, and finally eliminated the Presicionettes' budget. But like Avis, the team is actively determined to try harder. They have marched at several football games, and currently the team and the band are planning to do a joint half time show—the first time they will do so since 1960. Also, they have participated in parades in North Adams, Springfield, Pittsfield and the Homecoming Parade on campus.

Their fund raising activities include a car-wash and cookie sale. They are planning to have a carrally and a drill competition at Westover, A.F.B., with approximately 75 teams from the east coast participating. In addition to their fundraising activities, the team practices approximately 450 hours per semester. However, Precisionettes is not all work and no play; they have had several picnics, parties, and are now planning a hay ride for the end of the month.

Precisionettes is hard work, but the members get a real sense of accomplishment when they've executed a manuever properly. Being a Precisionette means making a total committment to an ideal and a goal--to be the best.

For people interested in making such a commitment, tryouts are November 16-23 from 7-8:30 p.m. at Boyden Gym.

Pricisionettes are shown practicing drill maneuvers at Dickinson parking lot.

B.F. Skinner Lecture Filmed At Mount Holyoke College

Friday afternoon, November 6, Dr B. F. Skinner, leading behavioral psychologist, was filmed at Mount Holyoke College, demonstjating to an audience of students the basic principles of shaping behavior in pigeons and doves.

Although he has demonstrated the process of operant conditioning many times in his classes, Dr. Skinner has never previously recorded this process on film. Three examples were filmed, showing how the behavior of a pigeon or dove may be changed (or shaped) by something reinforcing. n this case food.

Concern about the unfavorable by-products of punishment in our present educational system has led Dr Skinner to formulate and improve methods of positive reinforcement in edication, such as teaching machines and programmed instruction. Using these methods, Professor Ellen Reese, the behavioral psychologist from Mount Holyoke College who will be editing and processing Friday's film has been able successfully to teach retarded children arithmetic without employing punishing techniques. This is the subject of her latest film -- Born to Succeed -- which will be released this month.

Dr. Skinners film will be released in March or April for distribution by Appleton-Century-Crofts Company. In its edited form, it will run approximately twenty six minutes and will therefore be available to television educational channels.

It will also be distributed for psychology classes to demonstrate more vividly the processes of operant conditioning and behavior shaping which Dr. Skinner has emphasized in his books and papers.

Alternative to Dining Commons

According to a recent poll, three out of four persons questioned had no idea what the NOODLE is, or that it existed at all. The NOODLE is a new student-run restaurant for the person that wants to avoid meat and restrict his diet to "health foods" and sugarless products.

It is the belief of Demian, the young overseer of the NOODLE, that much of the food we eat today is highly over-processed and "unfit to eat." Fruits are a good example of this because their production involves the use of DDT.

The use of macrobiotic (life promoting) foods is not what it should be, and their volume should be increased.

Menu items such as "steamed seaweed" or "chicken-pea croquettes" are varied daily and are obtained from Boston Markets and other nearby sources. The main concern is that the products be as fresh as possible. For this reason, no canned products are used.

Demian is aided by other students all of whom demand a personal involvement in the food preparation, "so no bad vibes can be transmitted into the product."

Not only can vegetarians benefit from items served at the NOODLE but diabetics may also find items to their liking.

The NOODLE, situated in the Suffolk Room of the Student Union, is open from 5:30 till 11 p.m., Tuesday through Sunday.

Academic Programs In Freiburg Offered

If, during these chilly November days, you miss the bustle of a lively university town, you should look into the possibility of spending the next academic year in Freiburg, Germany. Or you might spend next summer in the summer Freiburg program.

The fall semester starts about October 15 and ends February 15, while the spring term is somewhat shorter, lasting from mid April to early July. The summer program dates are June 18 to August 26 with three weeks for independent travel.

Life in Freiburg is largely clustered around the university with its contigent of 12,000 students, of whom nearly one thousand are non-German.

The town offers many cultural diversions: frequent concerts, two repertory theaters, several museums and about a dozen cinemas, but it is probably the 'genius loci' that adds most to the charm of Freiberg.

It is nestled against the mountains of the Black Forest and within a few miles of the center, thanks to a cable car, one can be several thousand feet above sea level and enjoy a magnificent Alpine panorama. There is excellent skiing less than an hour's drive away--and rates are remarkably low.

Living conditions are comfortable, public transportation is excellent and there are close to one hundred restaurants in town offering a wide choice of succulent menus.

The current chairman of the Freiburg committee is Professor Peter Fliess of the Government department. To apply for next year's program, students should contact Mrs. Barbara Burn, Director of International Programs, 229 Whitmore. For the summer program, see Professor Albert Reh, German Department, Herter Hall.

The UMass year program in Freiburg, largely designed for graduate students, can be tailored to your needs provided you have a fluency in German, and during the spring semester a special course is offered here to help students attain this goal. The summer program concentrates on German language and literature and will include a week in Berlin plus various excursions.

There are several staff members on campus who have taught at the University of Freiberg within the last three years and who can give any prospective student additional information on the year program:

Prof. W. Bernhard of History department, Prof. F. Vali of the Government department, Prof. L. Holesovsky of the Economics department, Prof. L. Tikos of the Slavic department, Prof. Z. Salzmann of the Anthropology department, Prof. P. Mankin of the French department.

Prof. Bernd Ostendorf from the English department of the University of Freiburg is now a visiting member of the UMass English department.

Hindu Discussed

A panel discussion on "Hinduism and Indian Philosophy" will be held tonight at 7:30 in the Webster Main Lounge on Orchard Hill.

Participants in the panel, moderated by Gary Taro of the Art Department, will be Prof. Shute of the Philosophy Dept., a Jesuit priest from India and Prof. Mani from the Mechanical Engineering Dept.

Orchard Hill may be offering a course next semester on Hinduism.

The teachers for this tentative course are Gary Tarr and Terry Havens.

Good Journalism

(Ed. Note: This column was written on an airplane barf bag enroute from exotic Minneapolis, Minnesota. This was intentionally symbolic, symbolizing both the writing and the content).

ACP (Associated Collegiate Press) had its annual conference last weekend in good old Minneapolis. It was the kind of weekend that was personally matched only by an appendicitis attack.

You see, ACP is an organization that is the establishment of collegiate journalism. And most of its members are drawn from journalism school-oriented newspapers and yearbooks, with heavy emphasis on traditional midwest flavor. Therefore their conference takes on the groovy appearance of a Youth for Billy Graham Rally.

UMass has stayed in the damn thing for numerous reasons, an important one being the ACP annual ratings, (MDC was 1st class this past semester). God knows the conferences are worthless. There is just so much talk you can have on a "censorship" case involving a Michigan junior college sports writer being intimidated by administration because the writer wanted a wrestling team.

ACP is rivaled by USSPA (U.S. Student Press Association) which sends out a weekly press service that purports to speak for the movement, purports to be radical and usually is poorly written and factually specious. So, the best place to be is out of both these august institutions.

However, ACP really pulled a beaut this weekend when they awarded a special award to none other than S.I. "Shoot' em Up, Fascist Pig administrator," Hayakawa. The repungent picture of the smirking repressors and field commander of San Francisco State receiving an award for his school's student newspaper (a paper that Hayakawa formed after destroying the paper of the student body) was too much to overcome. USSPA tried to disrupt the presentation, but in their typical inept fashion, ended up handling a typically poorly written leaflet and shouting twice. Right On. (Most of ACP cheered old S.I. lustily).

And finally the real trouble with the whole useless conference was that Minneapolis is not exactly New York, or even Pelham. The most exciting thing in town was Maggies All-Night Sauna Bath.

College editors, of which most are ACP types, enjoy the Hayakawa's, Minneapolis' and ACP's. I did not get along too well in the situation. And USSPA's stereotype weekend rads, who'll call you a pig because you don't want to buy their crappy press packet service, is just as big a gross.

Which left yours truly, scoring Minneapolis for fun and games, getting a big kick out of the fast elevator in the motel.

The weekend, ended in a stuffy plane, with my barf bag and a stain on my shirt, the result of a bitch stewardess switching down the aisle.

Where Nixon Went Wrong

WASHINGTON - The question that everyone is trying to figure out is where the Nixon strategy went wrong. Heinrich Applebaum, elite professor of political science at Moribund University, believes he can pinpoint the exact moment when President Nixon lost his chance to gain control of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

Applebaum told me, "My surveys indicated that up until the Sunday morning before Election Day, President Nixon had it made. The violence issue, thanks to San Jose, had taken hold and an indignant nation was waiting to go to the polls and vote out those candidates whom both Nixon and Agnew indicated were permissivists who condoned student unrest. I have never seen a better orchestrated campaign, and I was willing to cede the Senate and House to the Republicans."

"But what happened, Professor, to change the picture?"

"The pro football games. That's what happened."

"I don't understand."

"The Republicans bought time on both NBC and CBS for a special political appeal by President Nixon to be aired between halftimes of all the pro football games in the country. It was a blunder of colossal proportions."

"I don't understand."

"Who watches football on Sunday in the United States?"

"The Silent Majority," I said.

"Exactly. The very backbone of this country. Now the Silent Majority is willing to listen to anything the President of the United States has to say six days a week. But Sunday they set aside to watch football. They don't want to hear about the Vietnamese war, the economy, law and order or violence in the streets. All they want to do is drink their cans of beer and watch two football team try to kill each other on the gridiron."

"That isn't asking much," I said.

"Up until halftime, the Silent Majority was willing to vote the straight Nixon-Agnew slate," Applebaum said.

"But, suddenly, President Nixon appeared on millions of screens all over the country. The Silent Majority couldn't believe it. They were expecting to see a halftime show with a marching band, drum majorettes, baton twirlers and all the things that make pro football worth watching.

"In fury, they changed to the other channel only to discover President Nixon had also bought time between the half of that game. And, instead of talking about football, Nixon was discussing politics.

"It takes a lot to get the Silent Majority angry," Applebaum said. "But this was too much. When you mess around with their football games on Sunday, you're hitting them where it hurts.

"All over the country people started throwing beer cans at their television sets. Husbands began screaming at their wives. Kids began to cry. By the time the President finished making his appeal, he lost all the good will he had picked up in his three weeks of arduous campaigning. The Silent Majority decided anyone who was that insensitive to pro-football-watching on Sunday afternoon could just go whistle 'Dixie'."

"But, wait a minute, Professor. The Democrats also bought spots at halftime and actor E.G. Marshall and Democratic Chairman Lawrence O'Brien made a pitch for their party."

"No one knew who they were," Applebaum said. "The Silent Majority thought they were doing a meatball commercial for Alka Seltzer."

Heresies&Interludes

----Is there a need for inter-collegiate sports? What exactly do inter-collegiate sports do for the University of Massachusetts that the present, or even an expanded intra-mural program cannot do? Certainly, because of the Athletic Department, we have a stadium...used perhaps a dozen times during the course of the year. We have a reputation...something which other schools achieve for educational reasons. And, because of inter-collegiate athletics, we have the athletes...many of whom would not be able to attend college otherwise. The Athletic Department, outside of intra-murals, drains the UMass budget every year. How many students would actually support their teams if they had to pay for their tickets directly? Where is the written law that says a university must have competition with other schools? I propose that all inter-collegiate athletics be abandoned, and that the intra-mural program be expanded to the fullest. And that's heresy.

----The faculty has once again proven its concern and sincerity for education. Anyone who sat in on the special Faculty Senate meeting last Thursday had to be impressed by the size of the meeting, the debate, the moderator, and overall quality of discussion. Oh well, the faculty are only paid by the taxpayers.

----I wish someone would do something about the junkies hanging around Southwest. And this means the infirmary, not the police.

----The Noodle, the vegetarian restaurant in the Student Union, has a nice atmosphere and is inexpensive. Unfortunately, when I went to eat supper there Saturday night, they were out of all food except tea, apples and hay, and pasy bread with sesame street peanut butter. It was a very interesting evening.

----One of the little-publicized pleasures of UMass is the Fine Arts Gallery located in Herter Hall. Currently, there is an exhibition of German expressionist prints, that is well worth visiting for a half-hour interlude from classes.

Candidate's Forum - '74

Kinkead–President

To the Class of 1974:

As candidate for the office of Freshman President, I have become increasingly aware of the fact that what you as Freshman voters want, is a candidate with ideas to solve the problems confronting our class. It goes without saying, that student apathy, especially in class government, is at an all time high. The turnout for Freshman primaries - less than one tenth of the class, will attest to that.

What can be done about this problem? I feel the class has to be informed. You, the Freshmen, must know of the functions of class government and be aware of the activities taking place within the class. Good public relations is the key; and the best way I can think of to better inform the class is through the already available University communication media. In my opinion the Collegian, W-MUA etc., would be ideal in informing the class of events taking place and of how the individual student can get involve.

These ideas on better communication with the class are useless however, unless we are sponsoring events which can be publicized. As a class, I feel we have the potential to do some really great things this year. Though we have a rather limited amount of funds, $12,500), there is still much we can do along the lines of concerts, speakers, and other activities. A big rock concert in the Cage is pretty much out of the question, due to our budget. One possibility, however, might be a free, open-air concert with smaller name groups. Contemporary and informative speakers would also be an answer to what kinds of activities we could have. The key to getting the class involved and together, is to have a class which is doing things.

In conclusion I can only say that if ideas and a will to work and make those ideas a reality is what you as Freshmen voters want in a class officer - Vote November 10 for Kinkead, President of the Class of 1974.

Robert H. Kinkead
238 Brett

Roy–Treasurer

Despite my three years of experience as treasurer in high school, I feel that experience is not the only necessary qualification. We don't want someone in office who only knows facts and figures. What our class needs is capable leaders who are able to identify with the students. These people must have the time and must not be afraid of becoming deeply involved. They must keep in close contact with their classmates and must keep them informed on anything that is happening. They have to be able to reach out to the students and they must be able to feel their needs. They have to care alot and must never become discouraged when they are not getting substantial feedback. The officers must stimulate the students so that they want to become involved--not because they are forced to. A feeling of unity must also be generated by these leaders. This is really going to be a tough job considering the fact that our class has 4,000 students--each being a unique individual. I feel that I am qualified because I can devote a great deal of time to our class and I am truly concerned. Please get out and vote tomorrow, November 10th. Thank you.

Cindy Roy

Long–President

Freshmen:

Tomorrow is the election, the election for your class officers. I am one of the candidates for president. There is something more important and that is our class, the class of 74. That may not mean much but it is what we make it. The idea of class is so vague but we could make it into something really great. Concerts and parties are good but the people I've met in the short time here are something else, we could do alot. Tomorrow when its time to vote, if every single freshmen got out of the routing of the day for 10 min. and went to the student union and voted, voted for anyone the class would have taken one huge step toward unity and we would have accomplished something not much but it is a step in the right direction toward the only goals I know for someone aspiring to a social office to lead people who have been defined so often as social beings.

John P. Long

Kos–Secretary

Freshmen,

I'm running for freshman class secretary. My reasons are fairly simple. I want to help organize a good class government, one which the people of the class run, and I want to meet people and help people meet people.

These problems can partly be solved by communication. The officers can serve the class well only if they know what the class wants. It takes a lot of talking and sharing of ideas for this.

The class must unite and become strong and I would like to try to make it so. Give me the chance to help find the rest of the answers to class problems.

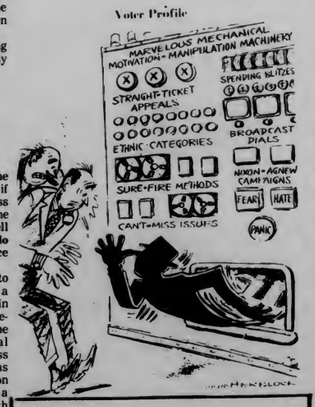
Elect me your freshman class secretary. Thank you.

Joseph Kos

Krukonis–Vice President

To the Class of 1974:

As a candidate for the office of Vice-President of the Freshman class I have much to offer the class if elected. I could tell you that I want to get the class together and keep everyone informed like all of the other candidates; however, instead I am going to tell you some of the preparations that I have made to do something about these and other problems that face the class.



It is vitally important for anyone who wishes to become an officer of his class to be involved in a variety of activities at the University in order to gain experience; therefore I am qualified to be the vice-president of our class. I participated in the Association of College Unions-International (A.C.U.-I.) conference that was held here at UMass this past weekend. The purpose of this conference was to discuss common problems that face union organizations, such as class government. I was a member of a workshop that discussed problems with student leadership. We were concerned with the problem of "too much for too few, too little for too many." I gained valuable ideas from the 26 Canadian and New England schools represented on how they deal with these problems.

To gain program experience I assisted with the Soph-Frosh picnic and the Senior-Sophomore Weekend. In order to understand class organizations I attended executive council meetings of the classes of '73 and '71. To understand the workings of the University I became involved in the Student Workshop on Activities Problems (S.W.A.P.), which is now in the process of planning their annual conference which involves students, faculty, administration, and trustees. In S.W.A.P. I am working on four committees other than the main conference committee, including committees on applications, pre-SWAP meetings, and a continuation program.

I have made an effort as a candidate to learn all possible that would be benifitial to the class as your vice- president. Now, each and every freshman must do his part by voting for GAYLE KRUKONIS Tuesday.

Campus Comment

Please, Chancellor

To the Editor:

The University policy of housing students in other dorms during vacations when such students are unable to go home is now an unnecessary policy due to the 20 million dollar Campus Center that we are paying for. We realize the necessity of some students remaining on campus during vacation periods, but see no need for inconveniencing students who have set their rooms up for the year.

We realize the fact that money made from renting the Campus Center Hotel rooms is used to help lessen the fees payed by UMass students. Then, isn't it better to earn $2 a night per room in the Campus Center then have to use the $2 from renting dorm rooms for dormitory security. Of what use are a lot of empty hotel rooms during the vacation?

Every student's room holds many personal belongings which can never be replaced. It's physically impossible to move everything of value to the 1 or 2 rooms allotted to use to store our belongings. There would be many instances of broken, destroyed, or stolen articles, which may not be of monetary value but hold deep meaning for the student who owns them. The Campus Center has articles of monetary value only. Anything broken or missing could easily be identified and the occupants of the room would be held responsible.

Does this involve the thousands of students that don't live in JQA Upper? Perhaps not, but what if we fight only to have the students housed elsewhere---where would they be housed? In your rooms? The possibility does exist that if JQA Upper opposes this invasion of privacy long enough and strongly enough, the students will be housed in your dorm. We need your support. Just as we don't want our privacy invaded, neither do we want you to be imposed upon. Therefore, we need your support and your help to change the policy now.

You could do several things. It is our hope that at least one student from every dorm will take the initiative to start circulating petitions opposing this vacation housing policy and present them to Chancellor Tippo on the third floor of Whitmore.

WE NEED YOUR HELP TO PUT THE WAFFLE TO USE!!!

Evelyn Replies

To The Editor:

A recent letter to this page raised questions about the advertising used by Reading Dynamics. Much of Mr. Santeusanio's commentary shows a misunderstanding (or mis-reading) of printed material. Even he had to admit "that the Reading Dynamics course apparently does produce some measure of reading improvement in their pupils."

Our only claim is that the course will triple your reading efficiency, which is a product of speed and comprehension. This is backed with a money-back guarantee. Some 98% of our students are able to do this.

Now because the Evelyn Wood techniques allow people to achieve much more impressive scores, we certainly have every right to make the public aware that the average graduate improves his reading index 4.7 times. Fantastic speeds and comprehension increases are also not unusual and these are used in advertising the same as stars are used in movies and Joe Namath is used to get fans out to a game.

It must have been very difficult for this Standford Taylor (whoever he is) to find 41 utter failures to test out of 500,000 graduates. These forty-one should have asked for a refund.

Apparently Mr. Santeusanio has a long-standing axe to grind. We suggest that he not criticize without first-hand knowledge of his own from taking the course himself. That would be fair.

Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics has a long-standing reputation and the course is recommended by many respected people. However, if public education were doing its job and teaching people to read effectively, we would soon be out of business. Our success on college campuses shows there is a crying need for improvement of reading skills.

An Impartial Press?

To The Editor:

Thank you for your enlightening and unbiased analysis of the current political situation in your editorial of Nov. 4 (afternoon edition). It is obvious that you possess a rare insight into the motives of the Nixon administration. You seem to have your hand on the pulse of the campus. Certainly you are a worthy spokesman for the average UMass student.

Particularly enjoyable was the picture of Ronald Reagan published in this edition. Somehow that picture exposed Reagan as the racist puppet of the Nixon administration that he most certainly is.

With the possible exception of the National Enquirer, your publication is without parallel in its objective and balanced presentation of the facts.

WILLIAM NOWLAN
JEFFERY HUTCHINS

P.S. Please continue publishing all those unflattering pictures of Spiggy Agnew. Certainly you must be hurting his feelings. Maybe you can find one of him sticking his tongue out. Just for the record, we don't belong to Y.A.F.

"Our" Student Senate

To The Editor:

We get screwed in the bookstore, the cafeterias, and the Union in general so that our student agencies will have funds with which to offer us inexpensive programs of questionable value. This same rationale is applied to the student activity tax. It would be much fairer if we were spared the burdens that these policies require, and instead were permitted the freedom to support each enterprise, should we so choose, on the basis of its merits.

Our own Student Senate, whose members are strongly predisposed to denigrate at great length the unresponsiveness of the bureaucracy at Whitmore, have been conspicuously inactive with regard to this area of injustice, despite the obvious inequities and the strong criticism that present policies evince.

So I ask you, august senators, can we expect some mitigation of the student tax? ...Or is your industry directed only toward encouraging strikes and demeaning the administration?

The Friday Night Concert
An Amalgamation Of Styles

RARE EARTH records for Motown Records on their own Rare Earth Label and now have two albums on the market. Last summer their single "Get Ready" was a huge hit and their latest album "Ecology" has just been released.

Part of a continuing expansion and diversification in the record industry, they became the first group signed when Motown founded its Independent Division last year. In this capacity, Rare Earth had the unique distinction of recording on the label bearing their own name.

Their musical style evolved from the amalgamation of progressive jazz, hard rock, and funky blues, with each man bringing his own particular background and ideas into the group as it grew.

The Blue Image hails from Tampa, Florida, and has been described as having a Latin flavor to their style. The feeling projected in blues yet it is permeated by a Latin beat. Conga drums, maracas, claveis, added to the organ and the bass give this group a new and unusual sound.

Worth Waiting For

Diversified Entertainment Awaits Sat. Night Crowd

Traffic

TRAFFIC, the magical musical union of Steve Winwood, Jim Capaldi, and Chris Wood, are once again "getting it together" after a year's separation.

Their re-emergence is simply and best explained by Steve Winwood, the guy who originally got the band started almost three years ago.

"We did a couple of sessions together, had a good time, got to talking about things, and mutually decided Traffic ought to be given another chance."

"There were a lot of things we intended to do last time around we never actually did, so it was natural that we get back to them."

David Frye

"I AM DAVID FRYE....MAKE NO MISTAKE ABOUT THAT!"

Today, the name David Frye is synonomous with political caricature and mimicry. His characterizations are sparked with an uncanny ability to make himself look as well as sound like the personalities he imitates.

Frye is one of the most in-demand comedians in the nation and there is hardly a video variety show or late night panel program that has not had him as a guest.

His fame further increased recently with the release of Elektra Records' "I Am The President," an album containing original sketches of Frye performing as the President, Vice President, Humphrey, Johnson, David Susskind, Henry Fonda, and others.

Buffy Saint-Marie

Buffy Sainte-Marie's songs have been performed by the great names in pop, rock, folk, country, jazz, and even symphonic music. Her concerts have been described as "splendid and somehow mysterious." Buffy herself is a petite soft, and pretty girl who has been given the title "ambassador of peace and strength."

Born and raised in New England, Buffy Sainte-Marie graduated from UMass a philosophy major and "beatnik." Her homemade, shockingly truthful songs were performed in an area cofree house and later in New York City before recording and appearance offers started her professional singing career.

Says Buffy, "I don't write for any reason except that there's song in my mind. I don't know where songs come from, but they end up in my dreams and at my fingertips like stray dogs and wild blueberries. They appear naked on my lips like kisses and that's the feeling with which I offer them to you."

Peace Parade Offers Audience "Freedom Through Unity"

The PEACE PARADE is the crystallization of what has been implied in theatrical and musical productions in the recent past. The Parade people, rather than set spectators apart from their actions, instead make a deal with the audience, in effect: "we give you our vibes and you give us yours."

The play's theme, "freedom through unity," can only be expressed by having the crowd "share" the show with those on stage.

The Parade can best be described as an experience, with a light show, films, and extensive audience participation in addition to the musical score from "Hair."

A recent performance of the play at Cornell University inspired a crowd of 5000 to clap, dance, and generally "blow their minds."

The cast, including members of the original casts of the New York and Los Angeles productions of "Hair", are into a "communal thing" where the spontaneity they display is an expression of their own life styles — the freedom to get up and simply enjoy.

Paul Jabara is one of the cast members of "Peace Parade" who will be "sharing" the show with Sunday's Cage audience.

Concert Re-Admission Policy

When you purchase your tickets, detach and keep the accompanying stub with you at the concert. In the event of any unusual circumstances this stub will serve as a basis for re-admission to the Cage or for an appropriate refund if deemed necessary by the sponsor. Nothing else will be honored.

If asked to leave the concert, please go to Bartlett Hall or Herter Hall where secondary tickets will be given out to assure readmission to the concernt.

Entrance to the concerts will be through the south doors of the Cage as usual. In order to leave the concert, you must ask for a pass out ticket at the front door lobby. No one will be allowed back in without a pass out ticket.

UMass Debate Team Capturing Top Honors

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

Winning is in danger of becoming boring if UMass debaters keep it up much longer.

One team making the final round at the MIT tournament didn't satisfy them. A speaker's award at LaSalle's tournament wasn't enough either. And even qualifying two teams for elimination rounds at the Brandeis University tournament still didn't satisfy them.

So the UMass debate team has captured top spots at three intercollegiate debate tournaments at West Point, Boston University, and Emory.

At West Point, the switch side varsity team of Roger Legendre and David McCaffrey captured second place after compiling the best preliminary rounds record (5-1) of the tournament.

The sophomore duo bested Rutgers in the semi-final round before losing to George Washington's debators in the final round on a 2-1 decision.

Victories in preliminary rounds came over Scranton, Kings, Navy, St. Anslem's, and Army, while the only loss was to another West Point team.

In Boston, the four man team of Bruce Murphy and Paul Drager on the affirmative and Gerry Hayes and Michelle Champigny on the negative, followed suit in capturing second place.

American University was downed by Hayes and Champigny in the semi-final round on a 3-0 decision. In the final round against an affirmative team from LaSalle, UMass was beaten with a 2-1 decision.

Varsity wins on the negative were against BU, Rhode Island, Maine, Wesleyan, and Bridewater State with the only loss to a team from NYU-Washington Square.

Affirmative wins were over teams from Emerson, BC, New Hampshire, Bridgeport, and Connecticut with a loss to LaSalle.

UMass novices at the same tournament chalked up an overall 5-5 record. On the affirmative, Diane Buckley and Andy Klyman went 4-1 while the negative team of Harry Feinzig and Jim Mitchell went 4-1.

Meanwhile, in Maddox country, varsity switch-siders Tim Hynes and Phil Doyle missed a spot in the elimination rounds at Emory by one speaker point. With a 5-3 record in preliminary competition and high speaker points, the team ranked 27th out of 138 intercollegiate debate teams representing some of the stiffest competition in the nation.

Hynes and Doyle were victorious over teams from Eastern Illinois, George Washington, South West Missouri, Pacific and Middle Tennessee State while losing to Harvard, Southern California, and Baylor

Militant Forum Studies Revolution

Tonight, Monday, Nov. 9, The Militant Forum, the weekly socialist educational series will present a lecture/discussion on: "The Russian Revolution, Part I, 1905-1919". The lecture will be led by David Morgan, an anti-war activist.

This forum will concern the nature and role of Czarism, the provisional government and the socialist revolution. This presentation will describe and explore one of the most important and far-reaching proletariat mobilization in recent history.

Although no reading is required for background, those interested in greater background should read chapters 1-5 & 8 of The Basic Writings of Trotsky edited by Irving Howe. This is one of the outstanding historical accounts of the revolution, and is available from the UMass Young Socialist Alliance.

The campus community is invited to tonight's lecture/discussion. at 8:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union for an introduction to the revolution which has shaped world history, and will continue to do so in the future. Coffee will be served.

Zoology Proposes Program In Mathematical Biology

Currently under proposal by the Zoology department is an undergraduate program in mathematical biology.

According to Drs. Francesco Scudo and Arthur Mange in the Zoology department, "Many biological phenomena are complex systems in which mathematics can be useful. Progress in these areas is being slowed because few biologists have training in the types of mathematics, statistics, or computer techniques designed to deal with difficult interrelationships. Apart from acquiring specific techniques, the manner in which biological data are collected often presents an 'empirical mess' which does not allow cookbook methods of analysis. Here a mathematical frame of mind, per se, would be an aid."

Currently, there are no undergraduate courses which give training in mathematical biology. Anyone interested may pick up a draft of the program at the Zoology Office in Morrill (5-2287). Anyone interested to contribute thoughts on modifications or additions to the draft should contact either Dr. Francesco Scudo or Dr. Arthur P. Mange in the Zoology department.

Newman Club Sponsors Holiday Food Drive

To enlist the support of those students who would like to help the poor enjoy a happier Thanksgiving, but who don't know how, the Newman Club is conducting a food drive from November 7th to 21st.

Boxes will be placed in each dorm where any kind of dry, boxed, bagged or canned goods may be deposited. A box will also be left in the Newman Center.

On November 21, the Singing Friars, a pop group, will give a concert at the Newman Center in the Social Hall. Tickets will be available for a 99¢ donation. The money collected will be used to buy ham and turkeys for the poor.

Students who wish to help but who don't have any spare food or money are urged to donate time and effort. Those who wish to do so, or who have any helpful suggestions are asked to contact the secretary at the Newman Center.

Chess Club Checkmates Spfld.

By MAXINE FORWARD
Staff Reporter

The UMass Chess Club, last Thursday night, ripped through the Springfield Chess Club with a smashing victory of nine wins out of twelve.

The match began at 7:30 with the arrival of the Springfield players by invitation of the UMass team. The big game of the night was the UMass master, Steve Jones, versus Springfield's high rated expert, David Lees. The game was very close during the first twenty-five moves, but the balance changed when Lees made his first shattering blunder. From there, Jones was able to crush Lees into a humiliating checkmate.

UMass winners for the evening were Barry Cohen, Jim Shepard, Mark Ordung, Bill Kelleher, Mark Lane, David Sumner, Robert Corwin and Al Searlemen, who sacked his queen and was still miraculously able to pull off a win.

The players were tense during the fervent match, but team captain Robert Corwin was confident of a cutting victory for the UMass Chess Club.

but have you ever been to his house?

Sure, you got through Shakespeare in class. You can even quote lines from his plays.

But have you ever walked down the streets where he walked? Like Henley Street where he was born. Or visited Hall's Croft, the home of his daughter Susanna? Or some of the other homes he held dear? Because only then can you truly understand the man and his times.

There's so much more you can learn about history simply by being where it happened.

Ruggers Drop Toughie To Colgate, 5-3

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

HAMILTON, N.Y. - In another tight match, the Redman ruggers came out on the short side of the scoring as they lost to a hard-hitting Colgate club, 5-3.

The first half saw a kicking match develop, centered around Mike Bull and Dale Toohey. Little offense and contact highlighted the half, but Colgate finally scored a try on an intercepted pass and a 30-yard jaunt. The conversion was good, and the half ended 5-0, Colgate.

The second half saw a complete change in the mood of the match. It became a very tough, hard-hitting game with an abundance of defense, but little offensive progress.

The Redmen scored their try on a fine run-Bull to Jack Long to Al Brown for the score. The conversion was no good, and the scoring ended at 5-3, Colgate.

UMass dominated the scrums and Colgate the lineouts, but the Redmen were hurt by costly mistakes in key situations. "It was a solid team effort, and the forwards played exceptionally well, but we were weak in certain situations, and this obviously hust us", said Coach Toohey.

Again the B's succeeded where the A's failed as they romped the Colgate B team, 21-0. John Long scored two tries as he made a fine effort in both matches.

Jimmy Devir made two conversion kicks and a penalty kick as he lead the ruggers in scoring for the day with nine points.

Leif Erickson and Chris Mehan scored the remaining two tries. Mark Chenoweth, who played a fine A match, made a conversion kick to close the scoring at 21-0.

Long, Steve McElroy and Doug Knapp shone on offense in the romp. The A's now carry a 3-4 record and the B's are even at 4-4.

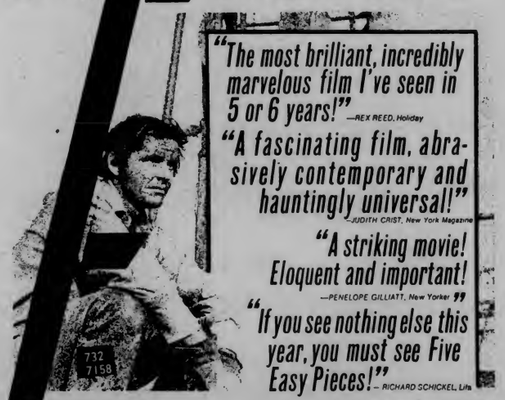
Punchless Pats Put Down, 31-0



ST. LOUIS (AP) — Powerful MacArthur Lane ran for three touchdowns, one on a 25-yard gallop, in leading the St. Louis Cardinals to a 31-0 National Football League triumph yesterday over the punchless Boston Patriots.

The victory boosted the Cardinals into first place in the NFL's National Conference East with a 6-2 record, a game in front of the Dallas Cowboys, 5-3, who lost 23-20 to the New York Giants.

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Tom Dempsey kicked a record 63-yard field goal on the last play of the game to give the New Orleans Saints a 19-17 upset of the Detroit Lions in a National Football League game yesterday.

Detroit appeared to have won the game when Erroll Mann kicked an 18-yard field goal with 11 seconds to give the Lions a two-point lead.

But Saint quarterback Billy Kilmer completed a pass to Al Dodd after the ensuing kickoff and Dodd went out of bounds at the New Orleans 45 with two seconds left on the clock.

The out-of-bounds play gave the Saints time to get Dempsey and the rest of the field goal team on the field. Then Dempsey, whose kicking foot is partially missing, booted the 63-yarder.

It bettered the NFL record by seven yards.

Dempsey's boot was not a thing of beauty but it cleared the cross bar by scant inches, sending a crowd of 66,910 into an unbelievable frenzy.

ROME (AP)—Carlos Monzon, the powerful Argentine boxer, and his manager say they'll be happy to give Italy's Nino Benvenuti a crack at the world middleweight title he lost to Monzon by knowkout Saturday night in a stunning upset.

Argentina's top boxing promoter, however, protests that there are other middleweights in line ahead of the Italian ex-champ.

Monzon, 28, handed Benvenuti his first knockout defeat in 11 world title bouts by tagging Benvenuti with a smashing right to the jaw in the 12th round.

Monzon and Amilcar Brusa, his manager, told The Associated Press after the title bout that they appreciated Benvenuti's talents as a boxer and would be happy to have him fight Monzon in Argentina.

Benvenuti, at a news conference yesterday, commented: "I still feel worthy to fight at the world level." He added that Monzon "must not deny me the chance" for a rematch. No such chance was provided for, however, in the contract for Saturday's fight.

STANFORD, Calif. (AP)—Stanford University, unable to win the big game a year ago, has earned the right to its first Rose Bowl appearance in 19 years with its third important Pacific 8 victory of the season.

The Indians' come from behind 29-22 triumph over Washington Saturday was again the artful product of quarterback and Heisman Trophy candidate Jim Plunket, a man his coach says "rises to the occasion in the big games."

The big passer rifled a 15-yard scoring strike to split end Randy Vataha late in the Washington game for the go-ahead touchdown as the Indians upped their Pacific 8 record to 6-0. In etching that unbeaten conference, Stanford beat three teams which were top pre-season candidates to go to Pasadena New Year's day. Each time, Plunkett led the way.

"I don't know where we'd be without Jim Plunkett," says Coach John Ralston. "We'd be going somewhere but not toward the Rose Bowl."

All four Stanford touchdowns in the clinching game against the Huskies came on Plunkett passes, giving the 6 foot 3, 210-pounder 16 scoring tosses for the season and 50 in his three-year career.

He also established an all-time major college career passing record with 268 yards through the air for a two-year, nine-game total of 7,082 yards. His total offense mark is now 7,410.

Frosh Gridders Fall On Late UConn TD's

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

STORRS, Ct.-Two fourth-period touchdowns sent the winless UMass freshman football team to its fourth straight defeat, 25-15, to UConn Friday night at UConn.

Ahead 15-13 with six minutes left in the game, UMass the committed two costly mistakes, something which has plagued the team throughout the dismal season, and the Huskies capitalized on the errors for two quick scores and a victory.

UConn opened the scoring in the first quarter when linebacker Gene Newman intercepted a Paul Hanson pass and ran it back 25 yards for a TD. The conversion kick was good and the Connecticut frosh led 7-0.

The visiting frosh tied the score a few minutes later after a 45-yard Ken Hoff ramble on a draw-play set up a five-yard touchdown run by quarterback Hanson. Kevin Dwyer's kick was good and locked the game at 7-7.

UMass went ahead in the second quarter after a Redman punt had put the Huskies back on their own two-yard line. Two plays later, UConn halfback Rich Koshlap was caught in the end-zone by a host of UMass tacklers for a safety. This gave UMass a 9-7 lead, which is the way the score stood at the end of the first half.

The only score in the third quarter came after a fumbled punt by UMass gave Connecticut the ball on the Redman 40 yard-line. Four plays later, halfback Dave Sorrell ran it in from 25 yards out to give the home team a 13-9 lead. The conversion failed, and the score remained 13-9 going into the fourth quarter.

A brilliant diving touchdown catch by Redman halfback Tim Berra on a pass from Mark Tripucka who was now in at quarterback, put the visitors ahead with about six minutes left. The touchdown pass came on a crucial fourth-and-four situation from the Connecticut four-yard line. A two-point conversion attempt was no good and the score stood at 15-13.

The lead, however, was short-lived as a UMass fumble set up a seven-yard scoring run by the Huskies' Eric Torkelson, and an interception of a Tripucka pass by UConn linebacker Ben Jocabellis set the stage for a 45-yard gallop by Sorrell, and UConn had evened its season record at 3-3.

The UMass soccer team won its first Yankee Conference title ever by beating the University of New Hampshire last Saturday by a score of 4-0. The win made UMass undefeated in conference play. For details see page 16.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

PISCES is regarded, by astrologers, as the sensitive soul. Renoir was a Piscean; his impressionistic paintings reflected the intuitive, romantic qualities of his zodiacal sign. Jackie Gleason, to cite an extreme contrast, portrayed a "sensitive soul." He, too, is a Piscean. In most instances, natives of Pisces are intuitive, impressionistic, artistic and capable of perceiving the pulse of the public. Pisces is rarely heavy-handed, usually delicate and, very often, psychic.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Cyclothin; use natural qualities of aggressiveness. Take initiative. Stress originality, independence. One who confides problem deserves your attention. Provide assurance.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): You gain if discreet. Less results if you tell all. Strike balance. Be versatile, but don't spread too thin. One behind the scenes is trying to work to aid your cause.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Accent on friends, hopes, desires. Key is willingness to adhere to basic rules. Otherwise, you will offend those who must be in your corner. You now have facts. Act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Accent on career, civic responsibilities. Communicate desires. Others now tend to be receptive. Key is not to ask for more than you can handle.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides with communications with those at a distance. A family situation requires diplomatic approach. Be willing to make amends for what appears to be a minor slight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Debts, past commitments come into focus. Be sure you know what you are doing —and why. Element of self-deception is present. Strive for realistic approach.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Lie low. Be receptive, a willing listener. Review partnership plans, alliances. Be sure you are moving toward goal. One who tries to dissuade you should be ignored.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Finish what you start. Keep medical, dental appointments. Don't look for excuses to skip basic chores. One who performs special service deserves recognition. Act accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Favorable lunar aspect indicates creative endeavors will bring positive results. Some dynamic changes are on horizon. Special person expresses appreciation. love.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Accent on advancement. You go forward via green light from those in authority. One who has finger on current trends offers constructive suggestion. Be receptive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Stress on movement, change, short journey. Strive for a more versatile approach. Some may want to expand too quickly. Set your own pace.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Spotlight on finances, ability to get what you want at bargain price. Protect interests, possessions. Be familiar with vital facts. Do your own checking.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have ability to handle distribution and publicity. You can popularize and create trends. New project is going to flourish.

UM Bops HC, 29-13, With Strong 4th

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

WORCESTER—After struggling for over three periods with an air-minded Holy Cross unit, UMass finally broke open a 13-7 cliffhanger in the final stanza to down the Crusaders handily here Saturday, 29-13, before a good-sized Parents Day crowd of 12,881. it was the eighth straight loss for the Crusaders, while the victory upped UMass' record to 3-4-1.

The game turned out to be a contest between the Redmen's grinding ground game vs. the Crusaders consistent passing attack. All in all, the two sides balanced each other out with UMass picking up 307 yards on the ground while the Crusaders netted 285 yards in the air. But the Redman defense wau tough when it had to be and came up with a couple of crucial plays to turn the tide in the contest.

UMass scored touchdowns the first time it had the ball in both halves and added two fourth quarter TD's and a safety for the victory. The Crusaders, despite moving the ball well for most of the game, hurt themselves with a couple of fumbles and couldn't come up with the big play when it was needed.

Pat Scavone, who had 64 yards on the ground and 30 via pass receptions in the game, was the key in the Redmen's first scoring drive. The Worcester native took the opening kickoff on the three and returned it 29 yards to the UMass 32.

On the first play from scrimmage, quarterback Ken Hughes pitched out to Scavone who was sweeping the left side. The senior halfback cut the corner, evading a couple of tackles, and burst down the sideline. Before the Crusader secondary could catch him, he had made it down to the Holy Cross 26, a gain of 42 yards.

But it was a costly play for the Redmen as O'Neil had to be carried off of the field and did not see any more action. O'Neil was greatly missed as not only is he a fine safety but he is also the team's punter

The Crusaders took advantage of O'Neil's absence. Jack VonOhlen, Holy Cross' leading receiver, became the key offensive weapon for the Crusaders as he nabbed six passes for 120 yards. But the UMass defense toughened when it had to, sometimes double teaming VonOhlen, and the Crusaders were not able to capitalize on the loss of O'Neil as much as they might have hoped.

It took the Redmen only three plays to score their first touchdown in the second half. With a third-and-six situation on their own 44, Hughes dropped back to pass and fired one over the middle to Bob Cabrelli. The junior receiver broke a tackle and then simply outran the defense down the right sideline for a 56-yard scoring play. Gagnon got back on the track and it was 13-0.

But Holy Cross was not about to roll over and play dead just yet.

The Crusaders came right back, and on their first play following the kickoff, halfback Scott Lodde galloped 33 yards before being brought down on a touchdown saving tackle by Bill Bush. But Holy Cross was not to be denied this time. With the ball resting at the UMass 41, Clapton hit Lodde, who was all alone, with a bomb at the UMass ten, but the junior halfback fell down at the seven.

Fullback Joe Wilson got the score with a six-yard romp and with only 3:30 gone in the second half, Gagnon's missed extra point loomed large as the Crusaders trailed by only six, 13-7.

The rest of the game was virtually all UMass however. The Redman defense stopped three Crusader drives with a fumble recovery by Russ Wood, a pass interception by Dennis Keating and a safety on a tackle by Bill Sroka to put the game away.

After Wood fell on the loose ball at the Holy Cross 33 UMass drove for a score of their own with Dick Cummings, the game's leading ground gainer with 109 yards in 19 carries, bursting through a huge whole on a trap up the middle for eight yards and a score. Gagnon made it 20-7.

The safety was set up by Scavone who was doing the punting in O'Neil's absence. With the wind at his back, Scavone booted one 58 yards and the ball rolled dead at the Holy Cross two-yard line to the Crusaders dismay. After an incomplete pass by Clapton, Wilson took a pitchout, bobbled it, and was finally hit in the end zone for two points by Sroka. That made it 22-7.

The Redmen finally put it out of reach after the ensuing free kick with a drive of 55 yards in nine plays. Hughes took the ball over himself on a one-yard plunge and with only 3:46 remaining Gagnon's conversion put the count at 29-7.

Holy Cross got a face saving score moments later with Gerry Lamb, who had just replaced Clapton, connecting with Von Ohlen on an eight yard TD pass. The game Crusaders then attempted a two-point conversion but a Lamb pass earmarked for Wilson was battled down by Keating. The scoring ended with UMass on top, 29-13.

REDMAN RANTINGS - A rarity occured in the second half when a dive rabbit appeared on the field and put on a devastating show of broken field running, leaving many would be captors in his tracks. However, the harassed hare disappeared into a hole before eigher of the teams could find a uniform for him.

4-0 Win Over NH Reaps First YanCon Title

Booters Are Champs!

By STEVE FERBER
Staff Reporter

At 21:18 of the second period a Lindo Alves boot gave the 1970 Redman soccer squad the Yankee Conference championship. The Alves score was just one of four Redman goals, as UMass romped over the visiting Wildcats of New Hampshire, 4-0.

For the first time, a UMass soccer team took the Yankee Conference title, and it couldn't have been won in a more convincing manner. The Redmen performed brilliantly all afternoon, with beautiful passing and ball-handling.

Leading the crew was Abdu Thraya, as he delighted the Saturday afternoon crowd time and again with his slick maneuvering. But the story was a tremendous team effort as the Wildcats never had a chance.

Although they forced the play throughout, the Redmen just couldn't find the net in the first half. No less than 21 shots were taken by the Redmen in the half, and it was the 21st that made history for them.

Breaking a goal drought of 215 minutes, or just under two and a half games, Alves found the goal with just 42 seconds left in the half. The result of a Marc Cantor pass saw Alves out-maneuver two UNH defenders and drill the eventual game-winner past the goalie.

It was 1-0 at halftime, and the conference title was just 44 minutes away. The Redmen were well aware of the second half stakes, as they came out for the third period as strong as ever. Twice in that third quarter they were rewarded for their efforts, as they put the game out of UNH's reach.

It was Thraya, at 6:10, who found the right side of the Wildcat net. Thraya who alone had taken six shots on goal in the second quarter, finally saw one go in as the ball slithered off of the diving goalie's hands. With just over six minutes gone in the half Cantor had his second assist, and UMass its second goal.

The second goal of the period came at 16:15 and it was Alves again. A beautiful lead pass by Joel Cerniawski was picked up by Alves on the right side. Ahead of the field he had only the goalie to beat. Drawing the goalie out he booted it past him and chalked up his second score of the day, and UMass was sitting pretty.

By now the Redmen were thinking shutout, but more importantly, they were thinking Conference championship.

With the entire Redman bench standing, the substitute starting making an appearance in the final period. As starter after starter came off the field he was greeted by a joyous UMass bench.

Waiting impatiently for that final horn, the Redmen added a little frosting to their championship cake. A Crossman shot found the right side of the New Hampshire net, and the home team's fourth score wrapped up the day's tallies.

The sixth UMass win featured Bill Leary's fifth shutout, a Redman record. The closest that New Hampshire came to spoiling the shutout was early in the game, when a Wildcat forward had a clean shot at the goal but kicked it wide. Only eight other times did New Hampshire take a shot on the Redman net. UMass kept the UNH netminder quite a bit busier with 34 shots.

In bringing its championship conference mark to 3-0-2, UMass closed out its home season. The 1970 soccer squad's mark of 6-2-2 has placed them fifth in New England, but more importantly has brought them a conference title never before held by a Redman soccer team.

This is the big day on the New England collegiate cross country scene as the top running units in the region will be assembling at Franklin Park in Boston to battle it out for the cross country supermacy of New England. Two races are on tap, with the freshmen leading off the festivities at 1:45, the varsity race to follow at 2:30.

Both races have favorites among the participants and, on both the freshman and varsity level, UMass will be in the position of being one of the favorites. On the varisty level the Redmen will be sharing this roll with Northeastern, which is the favorite of the favorites, Boston College and Dartmouth. The freshmen will be sharing their position with the Northeastern and UConn frosh.

For the varsity, Ron Wayne will be once again leading the Redmen into battle. He is undefeated this season and is also one of the favorites for the individual title.

The next four places will be manned by Tom Swain, Tom Jasmin, Larry Paulson and Leo Duart. These four have been running as a unit all year and a continuance of this type of running today may pay dividends in the end.

Positions six and seven belong to Rick Barry and Rich Tashjian. Barry ran a strong race his last time out, showing signs that he recovered from his cold and he should be in good shape for today's race. Tashjian earned his spot on the team with a fifth place effort against Central Connecticut on Wednesday.

Coach Ken O'Brien indicated that the team has not peaked to date and could do it today. The runners are healthy and raring to go. back at Northeastern and Boston College, the only two teams to defeat the Redmen this season. On both occasions UMass was setback with sickness, but with everyone ready to do today, all things are even between these three teams and, along with Dartmouth, a good team battle is expected.

Running for the Redman frosh will be Doug O'Connell, Rich Sevigny, Joe Frontierro, Bill Lowry, Roger Nasatka, Jay Nestor and Ted Beaulieu. Earlier in the season these runners were defeated by Northeastern and UConn, the other two favorites in the frosh race.

However, the Redmen have been coming on strong the last half of the schedule and have allowed only one runner to score on them in their last four races. The runners have improved tremendously as a team. This is the type of unity that makes for a winner and today they will be ready to meet the runners from NU and UConn with this unity in their ranks.

Bromery. UMass Needs Unique Security

By WALTER SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

At a well attended weekly Administration Coffee Hour yesterday, Dr. Randolph Bromery, Assistant to the chancellor for Student Affairs discussed the security problem on campus in detail.

He started out by mentioning that after speaking to the Yale security chief and the New Haven chief of police, all seemed to be of the opinion that the University should develop a unique security program, since problems at different institutions are never alike.

The problems of developing an effective, "flexible" system were discussed by students with Bromery he noted that, while vandalism and harassment have been going on for quite a while, the problem is only now coming to the attention of the student body. Even now, however, only a minority are really concerned, he said. "I think it's impossible to write a security proposal on campus without everyone getting involved. People who have been victims are really the only ones who are concerned," Bromery said.

He emphasized that vandalism in parking lots is a relatively simple problem to solve compared with theft and assault in and around dorms. As soon as enough money is appropriated, fences and lighting will be provided for the parking lots, he announced.

Thefts from labs, Bromery said, are "very frequent" and can be accounted for in two ways. The first explanation is that of "carelessness" by the students and professors. The second is that of organized theft.

He said that a community relationship must first be established in the residential colleges. If such a relationship came into being, better security would be only one of the benefits. "There is no simple solution. A lot depends on the community itself, the layout of the program and the actual implementation of the system," Dr. Bromery emphasized.

When asked about short range security measures in effect, Bromery listed several items. First, nine vacancies in the security group have been filled. Indoctrination for these officers will probably be Sunday. Second, is being worked, funding for additional residence hall assistants. Last, Bromery mentioned, a better logistical use of the security system be being studied.

He explained One flaw in the system is that the night and day security guards are the same people. The situations are vastly different. We should redefine what the functions of each should be...We will increase the number of security guards, residence hall assistants and, possible, police, only after we know how to use them. I recognize the gravity of the problem and that is why I am taking a few extra days to make sure it works."

One solution, he gave as an example, is to have a security guard in each dorn with campus policemen walking beats outside. Bromery reported that since last week policemen have been walking beats. The beats will be better defined as time goes by, Bromery reported.

SPEAKING AT A NOON—HOUR GATHERING Dr. Randolph Bromery, commented on the security problem on campus and received advice students who had come to listen. It was agreed by all present that security is bad and that something, though no one is quite sure what, should be done. (MDC Photo by Ed Fenwick)

Gov't Majors Grouping To Form Committee

By Joyce Kacoyanis
Staff Reporter

Twenty-two undergraduate government majors are in the midst of forming an "Undergraduate Steering Committee" to evaluate, improve, and expand their academic department, according to Jane MacDonald, a member of the committee.

A petition to form this committee and a list of its aims are available at a special table in the Student Union Lobby.

"We'd like to form small committees to work on our different aims. These include course evaluations, professor evaluations, requirement policies, and independent study options," Miss MacDonald explained.

She said that graduate students experienced in a "Graduate Steering Committee" are helping the undergraduates to form their organization.

The University's Government Department has yet to recognize the group. "They know of the movement but we won't be recognized until we're more organized and come up with some formal proposals. This will hopefully be in about three weeks", she continued.

Government majors can sign the petition and receive further information on the Steering Committee today and Thursday, in the Student Union, between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Warden Comments on Prison Program

By MAXINE FORWARD
Staff Reporter

Merton Burt, prison warden of Berkshire County Jail at Northampton, spoke at Action Lab last night on the proposed program of the rehabilitation of inmates.

The general plan of Action-Lab is for interested students to tutor the prisoners in the major areas of social science, mathematics, English, literature and the natural sciences. The inmates would then be able to hopefully pass a high school equivalency test (GED).

Mr. Burt told the group of twenty-five that they would have to be careful at first to establish themselves as responsible instructors. He felt that the girls would especially have trouble, unless they started out in a firm manner. He also warned the students not to be discouraged because the inmates would probably seem uninterested and bored, but that they would come around once their interest in the program was aroused.

The warden was very concerned about the welfare of his prisoners. He felt that prisons are for rehabilitating the men, not just to punish them every day of their lives. Jails only serve to stop the actions of the offender, but with the right people, he can become a useful and productive citizen again. As an example, one of Mr. Burt's inmates, a junkie, was able to pass the GED with the help of tutors. His moral was boosted, and today he is holding a good job and has remained straight.

Action-Lab plans to send student-instructors to the jail next semester, twice a week. They hope, through the School of Education, to get three academic credits for their work. Action-Lab's advisor, Jerry Thomas, a School of Ed. grad student, sincerely feels that this program will inhance the batterment of prisoners and prove to be a rewarding experience for both the tutor and the inmate.

Former Prof Rejected By Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court rejected Monday an art professor's plea his nude paintings were removed from a university building in violation of the First Amendment.

Charles Close, who was an art instructor at UMass during the 1966-67 school year, contended his paintings were a form of free expression protected by the Constitution.

Although he won his suit in U.S. District Court, the U.S. Circuit Court at Boston reversed the decision by saying the university "had a right to afford protection against "assault upon individual privacy."

The Supreme Court made no comment in unanimously rejecting Close's appeal.

Student Group To Offer Alternative Life Style

Three students have written a proposal for an educational experience which would integrate academic learning with all other phases of a student's life. 12-15 students, along with a facilitator, will remove themselves from the university environment and pursue two or three independent study topics of their choice. The remainder of the credit load will be made up of six credits which will be granted to each participant for work relating to the structure and dynamics of the group.

Each student will also be responsible for discussing with other members of the group what he is learning in his particular fields of study. Although there will be no teachers residing with group, professors are being encouraged to come and join in the seminars, either as participants or observers.

This experiment is an attempt to revitalize academics. Anyone who is interested in participating as a group member or in any other capacity is urged to attend a meeting on Thursday, November 12th in the Berkshire Room in the Student Union at 8:00 PM.

Bolling Urges Quick Action On Reform

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Congressman Richard Bolling spoke for an hour and a half last night to seventy people, in a DVP lecture on "Congressional Reform."

He began by telling something about himself. Bolling came to the state he represents, Missouri, from Tennesee and, later, Manhattan – he has managed to outlive the name "carpetbagger" by being elected for the longest period in office in his district's history.

His experience with Congressional processes began with the workings of the Rules Committee, the "traffic cop of Congress." The rules Committee controls Congress' agenda, and can stall legislation dead on center, which it often did.

Bolling realized that a thorough reform of Congress would be necessary before much progress could be made. The other branches the Executive, the Senate, and the Supreme Court, were all more advanced than the House. The actions of Congress were being crippled by a seniority system which gave the greatest power to Congressmen who had been around the longest and whose party was in the majority, "blindly" and with no regard for actual qualifications.

Bolling charged that the legislation just now passing has been pending since he was a child. If the recommendations of certain New Deal political philosophers had been accepted, he said, we could have avoided most of our present social problems.

Mr Bolling is a member of the Committee on Rules and of its Special Subcommittee on Standards and Conduct, whose recommendations led to Congress' first code of ethics. He is also a member of the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee and Chairman of its Urban Affairs Subcommittee.

As author of two books on Congressional reform--"which I am no longer even trying to sell" – Bolling offered to send free copies to anyone writing his Washington, D.C., office and requesting them.

After the lecture Bolling went into his views on the recent election. The public has definitely rejected the Nixon-Agnew strategy of concentrating on one or two issues, he said, and a potentially bad electoral situation has been avoided. The public showed good selectivity, tending to ignore mud-slinging campaigns, and on the whole made good choices from both parties.

Nixon's real strategy, Bolling speculated, was to concentrate "on the state houses and on the governors." Redistricting is coming up, and this could involve a decisive 8 or 10 seats in the House. On these grounds, Nixon was definitely defeated. The elections were not dramatic in effect, he noted. They were in fact more of a warm-up for 1972 than anything else.

The lecture finally over, Bolling stepped down and paid attention to people for a few minutes. At length he pleaded a busy schedule, and began to leave.

WMUA asked for a final two minutes, which he granted with professional good humor. The interview he gave was a shade more forceful, a shade less restrained than the lecture had been. The radio interview was soon over, and he left with controlled good courtesy. Then, at last, the politician was alone.

CONGRESSMAN RICHARD BOLLING, speaking to a small crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last night, said that a thorough reform of Congress is needed before much progress can be made. Bolling has written two books on Congressional reform which are free for the asking from his Washington office. (MDC photo by Barry Penn.)

Indian Priest Brings Out Points on Hinduism

By SANDY MITCHENER
Staff Reporter

Speaking at a meeting on Orchard Hill, an Indian priest named Father Mathias called Hinduism "one of the high points of cultural civilization in the world."

He also compared Hindu philosophy and religion with Christianity in the meeting which was held in the Webster Main lounge last night.

Father Mathias stressed many of the important points of Hindu religion in attempts to give his audience, mostly people of Christian background, an understanding of the complicated beliefs. He said, "Hinduism starts with the inner interior world perceived through spirit, there is an existence of a supreme spirit called Brahman. Brahman is called the ocean of all reality, the sea of all perfection."

Brahman is the chief member of the trinity and Father Mathias considers that creation of all religions from the two oldest, Hinduism and Christianity, is based on the old testament and the scriptures. "In Hinduism God is the axis, his existence need not be proven to a Hindu," he said.

Hinduism also deals with the reality in one's inner self and the outersell which is the illusionary personality.

Father Mathias pointed out also that religion deals largely with mystery. Western philosophers find this hard to deal with in Hinduism. He said, "no religion is devoid of mystery would be a religion but a humanoid. Hinduism is an extremely reflexable religion."

It does have one rule which all Hindus must except. This is the Law of Model Retribution which is the belief that things will work themselves out in reincarnation. The premise is that human actions bring an inevitable moral retribution worked out in the next world. The Hindu human life has a long chain of ancestors.

This idea of human actions bringing about an inevitable moral retribution in the next world is basic to the doctrine of reincarnation.

A good action in this life will bring merit which will help the soul on its journey to Nirvana. If a person is good in this life then the merit he accumulates will help him into a new life, closer to Brahma.

By doing bad moral actions in this life, a person's progress toward Brahma is retarded and he will come back as a lower form of life.

This Nirvana or Brahma is all perfect and all knowing. To enter this state is to enter a state of undescribable bliss. Zen Buddhist monks who meditate for years on little riddles called koans are sometimes able to perceive what Nirvana is like.

A famous koan involves the chief monk at a monastery who had decided that his time to go had come. He assembled all the monks and told them he was going to reveal the secret of life. All the monks strained to hear his words but he only help up a flower. They all did nothing except for the cook, a young initiate in the back row. He looked at the flower and smiled.

The retiring monk immediately named the young man as his successor.

Father Mathias said "Many Westerners believe that Hinduism is a pesimistic religion, but I disagree because the ancestral chain between the Brahman and the Hindu can be broken. The religion then spiritually proceeds along two lines, the way of knowledge and the way of love."

Supreme Court Declines To Hear Mass. War Case

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court declined 6 to 3 Monday to be drawn into a judgment of the Vietnam war.

Without stating its reasons the court rejected a suit by the State of Massachusetts that questioned the legality of U.S. military action in Indochina.

The issue now will be fought out in lower courts while the war goes on.

All the court said in response to the Massachusetts suit was: "The motion for leave to file a bill of complaint is denied."

Justice William O. Douglas, in dissent, said the court should not have deferred to the White House and to Congress but should have carried out its duty to interpret the Constitution.

"It is far more important to be respectful to the Constitution than to a coordinate branch of government," the 72 year old justice wrote.

The six man majority consisted of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Associate Justices Hugo L. Black, William J. Brennan Jr., Byron R. White, Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun. Justices Potter Stewart and John M. Harlan dissented without subscribing to Douglas's opion.

The division did not follow liberal conservative lines. Harlan and Stewart generally are cautious jurists while Brennan and Marshall area usually numbered in the court's "activist" wing.

The ruling was handed down, without comment, with scores of other orders on pending appeals. The court then heard argument in two death penalty cases that could determine the fate of more than 550 condemned prisoners.

The Nixon administration had advised the court not to hear Massachusetts. Justice Department officials said a judicial inquiry into the legality of the war would hamstring the President, insult Congress and embarrass the nation.

In last Tuesday's election, Massachusetts voters over whelmingly approved an advisory referendum supporting President Nixon's plan for phased withdrawal of troops.

The war question is likely to return to the Supreme Court. In the past few months several federal judges have upheld the government in suits brought by soldiers and civilians, who now will appeal from the adverse rulings.

Kent Prexy Condemns Grand Jury

WASHINGTON (AP) - Kent State University's president said Monday a state grand jury acted blindly in its probe of the shooting deaths of four students and returned findings which pose a threat to all major schools.

"In the grand jury's analysis," Robert I. White said, "I see a prime example of a brewing national disaster.

"The grand jury report was inaccurate, disregarded clear evidence and, if pursued in all its nuances, would eventually destroy not only Kent State but all major universities in America."

Twenty five persons were indicted in the grand jury inquiry stemming from the four days of campus disorder last May that ended with the shooting deaths of four students and wounding of nine during a confrontation between students and National Guardsmen.

The grand jury exonerated the National Guard.

The jury, White said, placed the major responsibility for the disorders on the school administration.

"More particularly," he said, "they noted what they called 'general permissiveness' reflected in the nature of speakers, inability to control 'radical elements,' too much shared responsibility with the faculty, in effectiveness of the student conduct code, tolerance of rallies and emphasis on dissent."

He termed the criticism about campus speakers "naive, fundamentally unworkable and ultimately undesirable."

"In a real sense," he said, "the report leads into a censorship of points of view going quite beyond constitutional limits."

The university should not be a refuge for lawbreakers, he said.

"Nut neither is the academic community a place where ideas - no matter how offensive - are to be suppressed. The constitutional safeguards of the Bill of Rights and, in particular, the First Amendment rights of free speech, press and assembly are worthy of utmost protection."

He said the grand jury "made every effort to review testimony, to study evidence."

"At the same time," he said, "we must recognize that their general report reflects a frightening misunderstanding of the role and mission of higher education in an American society dedicated to progress."

"We are dedicated to the preservation of a free and open society," he continued. "We must remain so dedicated."

GM Strike Settlement Seen Vital

DETROIT (AP) - Under a reported agreement to continue bargaining through the night, negotiators for the General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers strove Monday to reach a contract agreement that could end an eight week, economy hobbling strike.

The company said it must have an agreement by Tuesday if it is to get back into production by Dec. 1.

A source close to the bargaining table said the company had not made a new contract offer and added that bargaining consisted of "shuffling the pieces back and forth, trying to fit them together."

Another highly placed source said the chances of reaching an agreement by Tuesday were "50 50...or 60 40, if you want to be optimistic."

"There are so many things up in the air," the informant added, "that they could bog down on any one of them."

GM reportedly has offered to move towards the union's demand that an unlimited cost of living escalator be restored to the contract provided the union makes some concessions in other areas.

The company also has reportedly offered to raise its first year wage offer from 38 cents hourly to 48 cents hourly. The union has been demanding a 61 1/2 cent hourly increase.

The average hourly wage in the auto industry is $4.02, and automakers estimate they spend an additional $1.75 an hour on fringe benefits.

The third major union demand was for a $500 monthly pension for anybody retiring after 30 years service regardless of age. Before the strike the company offered the $500 monthly pension to persons with 30 years service who were 60 years old.

The strike began Sept. 15, and has idled 400,000 workers in GM plants and thousands more in supplier industries.

Negotiators are bargaining under a threat of government intervention which came 10 days ago from J. Crutis Counts, chief of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Counts said he would get into negotiations actively if more progress was not made soon.

Bargaining has stepped up the past few days.

TV Appeal Hurt Republicans

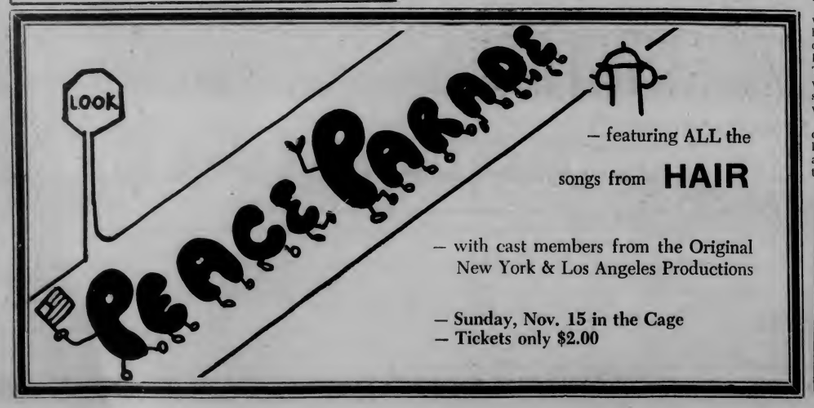
WASHINGTON (AP)—A leading Democratic image maker says he thinks President Nixon's election eve law and order television appeal stirred a political backlash against the Republicans.

As a result, adman Charles Guggenheim said in an interview, the man who decided to put excerpts of Nixon's speech at Phoenix, Ariz., on television-presumably Nixon himself-"probably had more effect on the election than all the mass media men."

The reason for the backlash, he added, was the contrast between the 15 minute excerpt of Nixon's hardline speech and the talk by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine that followed it.

"Nixon is the one who should have sat down and reassured the American people," Guggenheim added, saying that the GOP presentation undid the good that had been done for the party by the telecast three nights earlier of the President's speech in Anaheim, Calif.

"If he had left off there, he would have been in very good shape," Guggenheim went on, but the final Nixon appearance convinced people "this law and order thing was being exploited in a crass, political way."



Guggenheim, a liberal who works mainly for Democrats, said he thinks the backlash from hardline GOP attacks on Democrats Frank E. Moss in Utah and John V. Tunney in California probably were responsible for their suprisingly large margins of victory.

"The demagogic approach if often effective, but never for any length of time," Guggenheim said, adding "The people of Utah began to realize they'd been had."

15% Rate Reduction Ruled Unconstitutional

BOSTON (AP)-The state Supreme Court ruled Monday that a mandatory 15 per cent reduction in Massachusetts' auto property damage insurance rates is "confiscatory and therefore unconstitutional." The decision was unanimous.

In a 15 page decision written by Justice Francis J. Quirice, the high court said, "The writing of insurance is a lawful business and the Commonwealth may not impose unconstitutional conditions on the right to engage therein.

"While the state is not constitutionally required to fix rates which will guarantee a profit to all insurers, it may not constitutionally fix rates which are so low that if the insurers engage in business they may do so only at a loss."

In a statement released following the court's ruling, state Insurance Commissioner C. Eugene Farnham said that he and Gov. Francis W. Sargent "anticipated this possibility.

"On Oct. 1 the governor directed me to exercise emergency powers granted by legislation...to require companies to offer property damage deductibles to give drivers the option next year to get reduced property damage insurance, regardless of today's court decision."

Farnham said "I have a plan, which I will detail tomorrow, Tuesday morning, to require companies to provide insurance that will give drivers at least 15 per cent rate reductions.

"That means," he said, "that 95 per cent of the motorists of Massachusetts who drive safely in 1971 and who chose the options I will suggest, will get those reductions without extra costs."

Insurance companies writing more than 86 per cent of all the property damage liability in the state had filed suit with the court, charging that the reduced rate for property damage would cause an unreasonable loss.

The companies told the court that property damage rates in effect in 1969 resulted in a total underwriting loss of $10.3 million.

If the same rates were in effect in 1971, they said, the underwriting loss would amount to more than $20.5 million.

The property damage rate reduction was part of a 15 per cent across the board rate reduction on all types of auto insurance, ordered by the last session of the legislature as an amendment to the state's new no fault insurance reform law.

The insurance companies said they were willing to reduce rates on compulsory liability and other tyies of insurance policies, but asked for a 51.5 per cent increase in property damage rates.

Eight companies said they would ban business in the state if the property reduction remained in effect. Others threatened to do the same.

The high court's decision came on the eve of the deadline for the companies to send out notices to customers, telling them whether or not they would continue to insure them in 1971.

The companies are required by law to notify customers of cancellation by Nov. 15, and they were told by postal officials that Tuesday was the last day such notices could be mailed out to be sure of arrival by the 15th.

The no fault insurance law, incorporating a merit rating plan and the rate reduction amendment, was an effort by the last session of the legislature to reform Massachusetts' 40 year old compulsory auto insurance loss.

Monday's decision by the Supreme Court does not affect reductions in other rates, already set by the commissioner. Nor does it affect the no fault law itself, which provides that claims under $2,000 will be litigated in court in the usual manner.

Union Unsatisfied With Wage Offer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A presidential emergency board recommended Monday the biggest wage settlement in railroad history for more than 500,000 workers, but a union spokesman said "It isn't enough."

The five man board appointed by President Nixon to try to head off a threatened nation wide rail strike recommended a total average wage hike of $1.32 an hour over three years on top of the current $3.68 average hourly wage.

"They're short on money," said C. L. Dennis, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks, largest of four AFL CIO unions involved in the dispute.

"How can they expect me to live with that in the transportation industry when the government okays $1.65 an hour increase for the Teamsters in three years." said Dennis in an interview.

He referred to a recent wage settlement of some 425,000 Teamsters truck drivers. But he said the recommendations could be "the basis for real hard, gut negotiations," beginning Thursday with the industry's chief negotiator, John P. Hiltz.

Under federal labor law, the two sides have 30 days to consider and negotiate on the basis of the board's recommendations. The earliest the unions could strike if there is no settlement would be 12:01 a.m. Dec. 10.

Denis' union represents more than 200,000 of the workers involved.

He also objected to the White House board's recommendations against more holidays, against increasing the current four weeks maximum vacations after 20 years service, and against extra vacation pay.

"How in hell can we live with that when everybody else is getting five weeks vacation, or 125 per cent of regular pay while on vacation." Dennis said.

The unions had asked three year wage hikes totaling some 40 per cent or more, plus improved vacations, holidays, cost of living pay and other benefits. The board made no recommendation for cost of living pay.

Dennis, asked if the board's recommendations were the biggest in the history of railroad negotiations, said:

"Yes, you're right about that, but in view of runaway inflation, that's the reason why they have to put more on the table."

Living costs have been rising at a rate of about 6 per cent a year for the past two years.

Government sources also confirmed it was the biggest wage offer in industry history.

A spokesman for the American Association of Railroads said the industry had no immediate comment on the board's recommendation.

Farnum To Issue New Insurance Rates

BOSTON (AP)—Insurance Commissioner C. Eugene Farnam said he would issue a new set of auto insurance rates Tuesday morning for property damage deductible policies, to replace the 15 per cent property damage rate cuts struck down by the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

The high court ruled Monday that the property damage rate cut provided in the same bill that established the new no fault auto insurance system for 1971 was unconstitutional and "confiscatory."

Insurance companies must decide by noon Tuesday whether they will renew coverage next year for policy holders, and Farnam said "We are hopeful that they will accept" the new rates.

Eight companies writing about 40 per cent of auto insurance policies in the state have threatened not to renew policies for 1971 unless they obtain what they consider acceptable rates for property damage coverage. They asked a 51.5 per increase in those rates at a hearing Oct. 14.

At a news conference Monday afternoon Farnam said he would exercise emergency powers "to require companies to offer property damage deductibles to give drivers an option next year to get reducted property damage insurance."

Farnam said drivers who qualify would be able to purchase the property damage deductible policies with "at least 15 per cent reductions" in rates. He said 95 per cent of Massachusetts motorists would be eligible.

Farnam said the new rates to be announced Tuesday had not yet been determined Monday afternoon. He said actuaries of the state insurance department were compiling statistics that would form the basis for the new rates.

The commissionr declined to comment on the court decision that threw out the property damage rate cut.

He said he could not predict whether the insurance firms would find the new deductible rates acceptable or whether they would carry out their threats to mail out notices that they would not renew existing policies.

He said the decision of the court did not affect the no fault system-which goes into effect Jan. 1-or the 15 per cent-rate cuts for compulsory and other bodily injury insurance.

Muskie Claims Dems Can Win In '72

AUSTIN, TEX. (AP)—Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes said Monday that Sen. Edmund Muskie, (D) Maine, a potential Democratic Presidential candidate, told him last week the Democrats have a chance of recapturing the White House in 1972.

Barnes said Muskie, the 1968 Democratic vice presidential nominee, called him the day after the general election to inquire about the Texas political picture and to congratulate Barnes on his re-election.

"I told Sen. Muskie that when he came to Texas and wanted to meet someone, I'd arrange for him to meet them," Barnes said. "I told him the fact that he and Hubert Humphrey carried Texas in 1968, gave him an advantage."

Barnes said Muskie told him "There is a possibility of the Democrats carrying the White House" in 1972.

The lieutenant governor said he told Muskie the South "is not in the Republican Party's pocket" but wanted "to be heard from....to be recognized and given an opportunity to talk about the Democratic platform and the needs of the South."

Barnes said he also received a post election telephone call from another possible Democratic presidential aspirant, Sen. Birch Bayh of Indiana.

He said Bayh "wanted to know how to get to know people in Texas."

Daisy . . . Daisy . . . Dazy

I've been out with my camera looking for daisies to photograph, but I can't seem to find any. It seems like just a little while ago when they grew along the roadway leading to my house, hardy little buggers taking root in the grass and sprouting blue flowers with yellow centers.

They grew, you know, in just about all the states of the country. That's one of the reasons that Everett M. Dirksen, late Minority Leader and Senator from Illinois, used to sponsor annually a bill to make the daisy the national flower.

The ones that stand along mid-western corn and wheat fields are slightly different than the ones that grow around here. They seem to stand taller, and if I remember, they're usually the plainer colors of yellow or white.

It wasn't too long ago that I saw daisies along the ocean shore. The same misty afternoons that I'd see dew-drops on spider-webs, and patches of beach among the rocks, I'd see a little blue variety of the daisy. I remember wondering whether the salt water mist had made it evolve much differently than the midwestern variety. The days spent out on the shore have been among the best in my life; as I think about it, most of the times I've noticed daisies have been quiet, peaceful and comforting.

This Is an Abstract

They don't seem to grow on the campus, though. Perhaps they grow on the edges-I used to see them on the walk home; perhaps they're grown in the greenhouses-I once saw what I thought was a daisy in the botanical gardens at Smith, labelled "Phlox Subulata: 'The Bride'; but the concrete dorms and walkways seem to be anethema to this hardy little plant.

If I were the University gardener, I'd plant some daisies.

Paranoia Has Set In

WASHINGTON-I am happy to report that the people of the United States are no longer in a mental depression. They are now paranoid.

The day after the election, I ran into Roundtable, who was shaking visibly.

"What's the trouble, Roundtable?" I asked.

"I don't know what's going to happen. President Nixon and Agnew said if they didn't get a majority in the Senate and the House, there would be crime in the streets, violence on the campuses and pornography in every home."

"That was just political rhetoric, Roundtable," I said. "They didn't mean it."

"And the Democrats said if President Nixon remains in the White House, there will be a depression and all Americans will lose their jobs, their homes and their Social Security."

"You shouldn't believe everything you hear during a campaign, Roundtalbe. The party out of power always says the same thing."

"I don't want to die," cried Roundtable.

"You're not going to die."

"The Republicans said if they didn't win the election, President Nixon wouldn't be able to end the war in Vietnam or stand up to the Russians in the Middle East or the Cubans in the Caribbean."

"They were just trying to scare you into voting for them, Roundtable. It's part of the game plan."

"The Democrats said if they didn't win, we would all die of pollution or go bankrupt bailing out the Penn Central Railroad.

"They were scrounging for issues, Roundtable. They didn't expect you to believe them."

"Why did the President stand up on his car in San Jose?" Roundtable said.

"I don't know why. He probably thought it was a good idea."

"I know why he stood up," Roundtable said. "He stood up because he was hoping they'd stone his car."

"I don't believe it."

"Well, the chief of the San Jose police said his car wasn't stoned."

"If he said that, then there's nothing to worry about, is there?"

"No, except that the Secret Service said his car was stoned, and the President went on television and told everyone he was stoned, and he said if we didn't elect the candidates he supported, we could expect more of the same from the anarchists in the country."

"The President was just trying to dramatize the point that there has been a breakdown of law and order in the country and the Democrats were responsible. That's fair comment during an election year."

"The Democrats said the Republicans purposely played a bad tape of the President's speech so the people would accuse the TV media of sabotaging the Nixon Administration."

"We don't know that for a fact though, do we, Roundtable?"

"No," he sobbed, "that's the trouble. We don't know anything for a fact. I'm scared."

"Look, friend, everyone gets frightened during an election year, but in a few weeks it will all be forgotten. We'll still have violence in the streets, student unrest, unemployment, pollution and trouble with the Russians, and it won't come up again until the presidential elections."

"That's why I'm scared," said Roundtable, shaking.

"How's that?"

"If this is the kind of stuff they're going to throw at us in an off-year election, what the hell are they going to do to us in 1972?"

Yippie

(Reprinted: Worcester Telegram)

LONDON (UPI) - A London television official called yesterday for an inquiry into how a mob of "American revolutionaries" invaded the David Frost show while Frost was interviewing Jerry Rubin and drove the host off the stage with obscenities.

Mrs. Mary Whitehouse, general secretary of the National Viewers and Listeners Association, said the group would ask for an investigation by the Independent Television Authority and London Weekend Television, which staged the show.

Mrs. Whitehouse said there had been a preconceived plan to take over the Saturday night show and that the network should not have allowed Rubin on stage.

"American revolutionaries have said TV is their platform," she said. "I think it was a mistake to have Jerry Rubin on that program because they achieved victory."

Rubin, Chicago Seven defendant and founder of the American Yippie (Youth International Party) movement, refused to answer Frost's questions at first but lighted a cigarette which he implied was marijuana and offered it to Frost who refused it.

About 20 hippies in the audience then stormed the stage at Rubin's invitation, shouting four-letter obscenities, sprinkling the stage with flower petals and squirting a water pistol at Frost.

Frost left the stage and sat in the audience where he tried to continue the interview with Rubin.

Rubin said the society he and his followers envisioned would not be money-oriented, prompting Frost to say, "if you're so much against money, why did you demand twice the fee we normally pay guests for appearing on the show?"

Buy Bombs

Rubin laughed and said, "Why not? We're going to use it to buy bombs to destroy your society."

Campus Comment

Your Gray Lives

If the Campus Center looks like a huge Aztec monument to the dead this is only because that is what it is. It is a fitting tribute to the apathy, the mental death that reeks from this campus. Apathy is atrophying of the soul; the death of the spirit.

I have known this to be a fact for a long time but it became much more apparent to me this last weekend. Kids from other universities were here for a conference. The difference in the mood of the Campus Center was tremendous.

I was sitting in the cafeteria when one of my friends came running in shouting: "There's a guy playing bagpipes in the hall." So at 1:30 a.m. we dashed out into the hall to see what was going on. Indeed there was a guy in Scottish kilts playing the bagpipes. About 20 people were following him like the Pied Piper. We all danced and clapped over hands to the music for about ten minutes and then they disappeared as we returned to our seats completely out of breath, yet very happy to have danced.

As I walked around the Campus Center strangers talked with me. When was the last time you spoke to a stranger? Or do you walk around with that special spaced-out U. Mass. stare which manages to ignore everything around you?

In the Globe's magazine sections this weekend there was an article about the campus Center at M.I.T. Now seemingly, it almost looks as bad as our building.

But the beautiful thing they are doing with their environment is that they're using it. They have one of the walls for a graffitti wall. They've allowed students to paint many of the other walls.

They've even set up a fruit stand in the building. One day a girl just sat down and began to play a cello in the middle of the hallway. Since then there have been many spontaneous happenings in the halls like singing and dancing. Dance majors did impromptu programs. People just started to dance.

A building is only a background environment for what the people decide to do there. A building seems lively only if it contains life. Please don't let the color of the building reflect the grayness of your lives.

P.S. No, you don't have to be stoned to do it.

Reading Courses

In response to the manager of the Evlyn Wood Reading Dynamics Institute, whose letter of November 9 made light of Mr. Santeusanio's earlier well-documented letter criticizing the commercial reading course, I disagree. In my opinion, Mr. Santeusanio was correct. Students reading this letter may come to my office (204 Education) to get a copy of a lengthy bibliography of research studies further substantiating Mr. Santeusanio's accusation that the Reading Dynamics advertising is misleading.

I would like to invite interested students to take the no-credit, no-fee reading course which is offered by the School of Education Reading Program, then decide whether or not it is worth $175,000 to take the Reading Dynamics course. Registration for the no-fee, no-credit course will be Thursday evening at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Council Chambers. Mr. Santeusanio, by the way, is Director of the College Reading Program.

More to White Activists

By RICHARD SEVERO

The use of opiate drugs-including heroin-appears to be increasing more rapidly among white activist college students than among their black activist counterparts, a group of psychiatric researchers was told yesterday.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Psychiatric Research Association at the New York Hilton also heard a detailed report on what appears to be increasing widespread abuse of a non-narcotic painkiller called Darvon. The drug is prescribed by physicians with great frequency and the report blamed much of the upsurge on overprescription.

The reports on both Darvon and the opiates were prepared by researchers of the New York State Narcotic Addiction Control Commission.

The study on opiates was conducted by Dr. Walter C. Bailey and Mary Koval, who said their effort was conducted during the 1968-69 school year on the campus of one of the country's larger universities, which they did not name.

The total study involved 154 representative students, including whites and blacks both politically active and politically indifferent. The study showed that the majority of them-white or black-used or abused one drug or another. This finding is no surprise, since marijuana use on campuses had been widely reported.

The disturbing note was the report that among white students who were actively concerned with changing society, there was an increased tendency to consume drugs that produced euphoria and sharply altered and decreased the perception of reality. Said Dr. Bailey and Miss Koval:

"Our data appears to confirm the notion that white activist college students are markedly more drug-involved than are nonwhite militant college students. In terms of opiate use, allegedly increasing at a rapid rate on college campuses, white activists reported much greater involvement than nonwhite militants, though their use was likely to be occasional."

The researchers also noted that LSD was also used by more white activists than by their black counterparts. White activists also used more marijuana, although here, there was substantial black involvement as well.

In a sense, the apparent greater willingness of whites compared with black militants was not surprising, since many of them now represent what Dr. Bailey and Miss Koval called "a hostile anti-heroin subculture."

Resistance Explained

There has been ample evidence in recent year that blacks are painfully aware of what heroin has done to them and thus it is understandable why blacks at the college level would resist the drug.

But if the report is accurate, some white activists who so frequently support black causes do not share the black abhorrence of heroin.

The researchers explained it, by saying that the white activists were rebelling against "the values of their culture orientation, as well as seeking a substitute of identities."

On the other hand, they said, "nonwhite militants are in the process of incorporating both new value systems and new identities based upon an egoenhancing ideology which provides little stimulus for escape from the real world of their involvement."

The Darvon study was by Dr. Carl D. Chambers with the assistance of Barbara K. Sheridan and Thomas Willia. They point out that a major thrust for the advertising of Davon has been "that it is equal to codeine in intensity and duration of analgesic action," but that it has fewer side effects and does not have "codeine's potential for abuse and addiction."

The study sharply disputes that assertion. The researchers studied Darvon abuse in a black slum in Philadelphia, in a white, middle-class suburban community in the South, and among adult drug users in Greenwich Village.

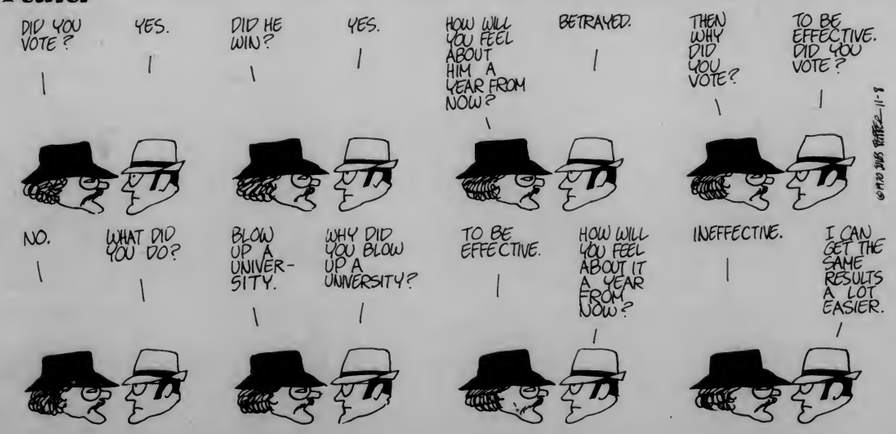
In the black slum, the researchers took detailed information on four Darvon abusers, all of them girls in their teens. Says the report:

"The girls normally took five capsules (325 milligrams) at a time, and reportedly received a euphoric reaction each time. After approximately four months of regular abuse, three or four times a week, one girl ingested 10 capsules (650 milligrams) and received what can only be described as a narcotic-like overdose."

The researchers said that in the black slum where there is a great deal of experimentation with many drugs, Davon was not the primary drug of choice.

In the middle-class suburban community in the South, which was not identified, the researchers found that 11 girls in a private high school for girls with an enrollment of 112 had abused Darvon.

In this instance, the researchers said they found strong evidence of taking the drug as a form of rebellion against authority. The girls tended to gather "in one room after the required hour for retiring, where they would smoke cigarettes, take the propoxyphene (the generic name for Darvon) and drink any alcohol they had smuggled into the school in mouth-wash bottles."



One girl told the researchers her mother was being treated by the family doctor for "a drinking problem" with sleeping pills and Darvon and the girl concluded:".....if they made mother feel so good and act so drunk, I knew they would do the same for me."

In Greenwich Village, 12 Darvon abusers were studied for four years (June 1966-June, 1970). Seven of them had got the drug through medical prescription. Eleven of them, after getting the drug legally, provided Darvon to other persons, thus spreading the abuse. All 12 studied in Greenwich Village were white "and most from upper middle and upper income brackets, with parents of professional background." Ten of them were going to psychiatrists.

The report noted that Darvon, which is manufactured by Eli Lilly & Co. "has become one of the most widely prescribed analgesics."

Abora, (API) The long lost and notorious world conquerer Kubla Kahn was found yesterday wandering through a measureless cavern looking for a local damsel reputed to be playing a dulcimer. When interviewed by Geraldine, a reporter for the Christabel Daily, Kahn stated that he was looking for the river Alph but was unable to find it because the sun hadn't risen for 200 years. API discovered that Kahn had been walking in circles in the shadow of a pleasure dome. All he had to do was look inside to find the sun. And as as we all know, once you find the sun the river is a snap.

SOMEONE STOLE THE SWANS last week, or so it seems. But the fact of the matter is that our feathery friends have been taken to their winter home somewhere in the greater Amherst vicinity. There they will spend their time reminiscing about a year that saw the pond invaded by some tub-happy freaks during the strike, encroached upon by the library construction, and threatened with urban development by the proposed Fine Arts Center. But they can take care of themselves and we can rest easily during the coming cold knowing that the frolicking fowl will be on hand come the good weather. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt.0

Home Ec Has Changing Image

The most radically changing image on campus belongs to the School of Home Economics, according to Joan Pyteraf, president of the College Chapter of the American Home Economics Association.

Miss Pyteraf cited the Professional Day for Home Economists taking place today at the Campus Center to illustrate the point. "Where Else," she asked, "Would a workshop on the Future of Cities be conducted side by side with one on Abortion and Contraceptives?" The essential character of Home Ec, she said, was in its total approach to man's created environment, from his family relationships and the clothes he wears to the design of his dwellings and the packages his food comes in.

"People are increasingly aware," she said, "That the old concept of Home Ec as a cooking-and-sewing school is rapidly being replaced by this idea of total environmental concern. We have nutritionists, ecologists, historians and designers on our faculty. A student might go from one class where the subtle effects of mass media on cultural environment was discussed into another class where he learns how to put air ducts in skyscrapers." Miss Pyteraf indicated a 15% increase in AHEA membership over last year as a sign of student recognition of the new role played by Home Ec. "There is genuine, serious concern among the students for the future of our planet and the wellbeing of man. Fifty years ago abortion and contraception couldn't even be discussed in a college, except perhaps a medical school. Today, because of the population explosion, we have to address ourselves to the real issues."

Asked what she felt the real issues were, Miss Pyteraf said that communications among people and personal identity were paramount. "If we could communicate the urgency of our ecological crisis to everyone, we wouldn't have an ecological crisis any longer." Noting that the American society is product-oriented, she pointed out that communication regarding products is rendered almost unintelligible by packaging differences and advertising. "But we're working on that, too," she said. "Miss Marjorie Merchant on our staff is one of the world's experts on metric measurements and much of the misleading packaging information on products will be eliminated when America goes metric." Asked if she felt America would adopt the metric system eventually, she replied, "Of course."

Personal Identity, she said, was a private kind of crisis, and group identity through fashions offered only a poor substitute for it. "Look around you," she said, "Everybody wants to express his individuality, and so they're all wearing jeans."

General Electric's been building bigger jet engines for 30 years.
When are they going to start building cleaner jet engines?

Not many people know that General Electric started building a jet engine in 1941. America's first jet engine.

That jet produced only 1200 pounds of thrust.

Our newest jet, for the DC-10, produces around 50,000 pounds of thrust.

In the early days of jet aviation, the important thing was thrust.

But suddenly our skies are filled with jets. And, suddenly, jet pollution is a major problem.

General Electric tackled it head on when building the DC-10 engines. And we accomplished two things.

When you see the DC-10 take to the air, you'll see no black marks against the sky. Because the engines make virtually no smoke.

Of course, there's more to jet exhaust than just smoke. Our goal is someday to make jets run totally clean.

Another problem with jets is noise. If you've ever lived anywhere near an airport, we don't have to tell you that.

General Electric has been working on noise, too.

GE was chosen by the federal government to help solve this problem for the aviation industry. At present, we know of no way a powerful turbofan engine can be made noiseless. But we've made progress in that direction.

The DC-10 engines, for instance, are quieter than any jet engines on the passenger planes of the Sixties. Quieter, even though they're more than three times as powerful.

We have more work to do before we'll satisfy all the people concerned about jet pollution, ourselves included. But because we've been working at it since the mid-Fifties, before it was widely recognized as much of a problem, we've already crossed some important hurdles.

Why are we running this ad?

We're running this ad, and others like it, to tell you the things General Electric is doing to solve the problems of man and his environment today.

The problems concern us because they concern you. We're a business and you are potential customers and employees.

But there's another, more important reason. These problems will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

We invite your comments. Please write to General Electric, 570 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Williams' Play Set For Weekend

By SHARON MILES
Fine Arts Staff

Anyone who glances into the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union around 6:30 p.m. might think the Jogging Club has moved in. But in this case, the 5 people loping around the platforms that comprise the makeshift stage for the Homecoming Production of Eccentricities of A Nightingale are just warming up to their rehearsals.

The director, Miss Judy Wilner, nimbly joins in the frolic, exhorting her protegees to work harder. She leads them onto the platforms where they jump up and down and prance over each of the two and three level stages to test for "give", to get the feel of the stage, and to "get loose". The getting loose exercises also include a short game reminiscent of "Ring Around the Rosie" in which the players hold hands, lean back, and twirl furiously. This, it was explained, is to heighten the sensitivities, to help the actors to "feel the part"

Following this physical exertion, Miss Wilner calls for the emotional. (Here all semblance of horseplay disappears and the actors set to work.) Mere memorization of the lines will not suffice. Each actor must know his character very intimately. "Alma," Miss Wilner may say to her lead who is laboring on a scene, "how do you feel about this?" "Alma" had better know how she reacts to this situation and any other that crops up, in the play or out of the director's head.

No scene gets a cursory treatment, and if it requires 5 takes before it feels right to Miss Wilner, they will replay that scene 5 times. Each actor must be interacting emotionally as well as verbally with the other players on that stage.

Meanwhile, Chris, the assistant director examines the settings from various angles on the floor to make sure that any seat in the house affords a total picture of the on-stage actions. It is not unusual to see an actor shifting his position inch by inch while Chris appraises the situation. It may be minutes before he approves it and the player must remember to stand in that spot and in that position the next time the scene is rehearsed.

Even seeing all this work going into each scene, it is always a jolt to see the actors leave the platform at the end of a rehearsal and to realize that they are just playing make-believe. Then again, under the direction of Miss Wilner, maybe for that brief time on stage they really are those characters.

Deborah Hall as Alma and David Hopcroft as John Buchanan rehearse a tender scene from Tennessee William's ECCENTRICITIES OF A NIGHTINGALE. The production, a revision of SUMMER AND SMOKE, is to be presented this Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 in the Commonwealth room of the Student Union. Tickets are free and are available at the Bartlett Box Office, seating though, will be limited.

N.J. Voter Program Explained Tonight

Tonight at 7 P.M. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, a discussion and question and answer period on Frontlash will be led by Joe Burke, a New Jersey Frontlash organizer.

Frontlash, a program of voter registration and voter education, was begun in 1968. Voter registration has been concentrated in low income areas, particularly black and Puerto Rican ghettoes, where political power has been traditionally weak or non-existent. While voter education has also been carried on in such areas, white working class areas have been a focus of voter educaton aimed at encouraging the voters to follow their economic interests and not the demagogic appeals of George Wallace or Spiro Agnew.

Since 1968 Frontlash campaigns have been organized in several states, with broadly based support among civil rights groups, labor unions and radical and liberal activists. Some of the more successful drives have been in California where 100,000 new voters have been registered, and in New Jersey where Frontlash was credited with registering and getting out a substantial segment of the vote that elected Kenneth Gibson, Newark's first black mayor.

Burke, a student at Holy Cross College in Worcester, is being brought to campus by the Committee on Poverty and the UMass Young Peoples' Socialist League. These two organizations will be joining forces to organize a Frontlash drive in either Springfield or Holyoke in the near future. All students interested in such a project should attend tonight's meeting.

15,800,000 COLLEGE STUDENTS CAN'T BE WRONG

By conservative estimate more than fifteen million college students have used Cliff's Notes since we became America's first literary study aid. This preference continues to build – for two big reasons:

1 / QUALITY – The easy-to-understand commentary and explanation you get from Cliff's Notes result from painstaking work by our board of authors. Predominantly Ph.D.'s, these scholars are specially selected for their knowledge of particular works and for their ability to make these works meaningful to you.

2 / AVAILABILITY – Cliff's Notes concentrate on giving you all the plays and novels most frequently assigned in college. If your dealer is temporarily out of the title you need, ask him to call us on his special "Hot Line."

Buy Cliff's Notes today – they're a bargain in understanding college literature assignments.

Timothy F. Murphy, age 23, has been recently killed in Vietnam. Tim Murphy was a former Sports writer of the Collegian and graduated from UMass in 1969. Regarded as one of this paper's best writers ever, he is remembered by those, of the present Collegian staff, who have been with the paper for over three years. When these present Collegian seniors were freshmen, Tim Murphy was a departing reporter, going on to other journalistic endeavors after having put in much time and effort with the Collegian. His writing style was an example for those incoming freshmen cub sports reporters to emulate. He's gone. We'll remember him.

DETROIT (AP) - Bob Lanier, who became the Detroit Pistons' million dollar rookie because of his height and ability, has found his unusual size a detriment off the court.

L. Lanier, 6 feet 11 inches 270 pounds, was handcuffed and fingerprinted Sunday night by a police for investigation into a minor traffic violation. No charges were brought against the 21-year old Lanier who was detained for 90 minutes by police.

Lanier, accompanied by the Pistons' star guard Dave Bing, was driving a car which police halted near the John Lodge Freeway about 9:45 p.m. Sunday.

Lanier said the police patrolmen told him he was stopped for "weaving in and out of traffic" and then handcuffed him for a trip to a precinct station when he could not produce a driver's license. Lanier has a valid New York State license but did not have it with him at the time.

The police lieutenant in charge of the precinct declined to comment on the incident. However, another officer said Lanier was "very polite at all times."

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) - Quarterbacks Rex Kern of Ohio State and Dennis Dummit of UCLA were along 12 college seniors selected Monday by the National Football Foundation as 1970 Scholar Athlete Award winners.

Halfback David Elmendorf of Texas A&M, defensive backs James Cooch of Colorado and Willie Clyde Bogan of Dartmouth, linebacker Bill Zapalac of Texas, tackle Thomas Neville of Yale, guards Larry DiNardo of Notre Dame and Don Denbo of Tennessee and centers John Sande of Stanford, Thomas Lyons of Georgia and Lee Dillon of Dayton also were cited for excellence in the classroom as well as on the playing field.

The 12 will be saluted at the Foundation's 13th annual Football Hall of Fame Awards dinner Dec. 8 in New York. Each will receive a $500 graduate fellowship from funds derived from Colonel Earl "Red" Blaik's syndicated football columns. Denbo, the only pre med student chosen this year, will receive an additional grant from Medical Economics Inc.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus can handle the quiet, the subtle, even Taurus can himself be blunt and direct. Taurus gives a quiet impression; but it is a "powerful quiet," such as expressed by Glenn Ford — such as the great fighter Joe Louis expressed; quiet power, waiting to be released.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Exercise much caution in partnership, marriage relationships. Cycle is high. But sudden changes could catch you off balance. Not wise to press legal matters.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Matters of basic security, health demand attention. Be aware of routine. Heed rules and regulations. Check fine print; read between the lines.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Dispute with friends can cause you to change direction. Examine goals. You may be expending too much energy in wrong area. Lover's quarrel could be on agenda.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Environmental changes are swift. Be ready to make basic adjustments. Home family are accented. What you thought was solid may need rebuilding — or moving to a different location.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22) Hold off, if possible, on short journeys. Best to re-evaluate needs, directions sources of irritation connected with relatives. Perfect techniques. Refuse to be rushed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Money affairs may be erratic. Provide mature and steadying influence. Avoid actions based on impulse. Fulfill obligations. Be willing to back statements with responsible action.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): General restlessness prevails. Answers you seek are delayed. Developing process is occurring. Patience is your ally. Avoid actions which irritate mate, business partner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): What was buried could be revived. Secrets are made public. Protect interests. Avoid scandal. Resist temptation to foil for money schemes. Do what must be done in quiet, practical manner.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Some desires can be fulfilled. But this will leave no room for procrastination. Act on hunch — applies especially in romantic areas. Give and you also will receive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Changes occur in occupation, career pursuits. You may feel your basic talents are being neglected. Key is to display humor and versatility. You can make a place for yourself at the top.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb 18): Signing papers without reading content can be cause of real difficulty. Avoid writing letters, making calls while angry. Organize thoughts; bring emotions under control.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Exchange ideas on property values, other possessions. A deal can be made if you are perceptive. Don't accept first offer. Be a discriminating shopper. Protect assets.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are determined at times, stubborn, but your independence usually brings results. You are your own boss — even if employed by someone else. Your style, will and way of doing things permeate to form a unique individual.

Wayne Leads Harriers To Second Place In NE's

Paulson 8th, Duart 16th

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Boston records are made to be broken and Ron Wayne did just that in capturing the New England cross country individual title here yesterday. His time of 24:11 broke the old meet record set by Art Dulong last year by nine seconds and established him as the premier collegiate distance runner in New England this season.

Wayne's victory came in the wake of a second place team performance by the UMass Redmen as they finished 15 points behind Dartmouth which was competing for the first time in this championship. Northeastern and Boston College, two teams which earlier in the season defeated the Redmen finished third and fourth.

Wayne had planned to stay behind his number one opponent, Bill Speck of Providence for the first three miles and then make his move in the last two miles. As the race took shape, Wayne's race plan also began to take shape.

For the first mile Wayne and Speck were in a group with Joe Frontierro of Northeastern and Bill Mahoney of Boston College. At the two mile mark both Wayne and Speck pulled away as they passed this point in 9:19. From here in it was a two man race.

Three miles out Speck had a couple of yards on Wayne, but during the next quarter mile, Wayne made his move and burst into the lead, opening up as much as a hundred yards on Speck by the four mile marker.

Wayne was now on his way to a big victory and the title. Coming into view of the finish line he began to feel the effects of the torrid pace that he had set and glided to the wire almost 70 yards in front of Speck.

The story of the team race was the apparent hesitation of a couple of the UMass runners to go out with the leaders in the first mile and aggressiveness of the Dartmouth runners in this period.

RON WAYNE

By the mile, Dartmouth had four men in the top ten and these runners held on the rest of the race to take the team title. The Indians totaled 56 points as compared to 71 points for UMass.

The second Redman to cross the finish line was Larry Paulson who came in eighth in the time of 24:43. Coach Ken O'Brien termed Paulson's performance "great" and great it was, as he came on in the last couple of miles to pass seven men including two Dartmouth runners at the end. With a mile to go he realized that he needed to pass the Dartmouth men in front of him and he showed a lot of guts in catching the two Indians as he did.

Leo Duart was the third Redman yesterday as he completed his tour of the Franklin Park course in 16th place. He started out in his usual slow manner but worked hard over the last half of the race to earn his final position.

Tom Swain took 21st. place, but was displeased at his performance. He got off to a slow beginning and both he and Tom Jasmin, who finished as the number six UMass runner, hesitated to go with the leaders nearing the first mile. This was the first time that these two have run a varsity race over this course and this may have resulted in their hesitation.

Rick Barry ran his best race of the year yesterday. He broke into the scoring column placing 25th in the race and fifth for the Redmen. It was his aggressiveness in the first mile that enabled him to make this line showing.

Rich Tashjian ran in his first big race and finished back in the standings but in so doing he ran the fastest time that he has ever recorded over the Franklin Park course.

Today is a day of distance recovery running for the Redmen. Tomorrow it's back to practice again. Thursday, it's a dual meet with UNH. Friday it's back to practice and Monday they have the ECAA's to compete in at Van Cortland Park in New York City.

Wrong Way Frosh Third

BOSTON-With not only victory, but also a record team point performance in the making, the UMass freshmen took a wrong turn with a little under a quarter of a mile to go and went from a sure victory to third place in the freshman division of the New England cross country championship.

One had to be there yesterday to believe what happened. With only mile to go the Redmen frosh had five men in the top ten positions. Leading them were two Northeastern runners, but they were of no concern on a team basis as the rest of the Huskies were well to the rear.

Rich Sevigny, Doug O'Connell, and Joe Frontierro started to move on the two Huskies in front of them and with a quarter of a mile to go these three were on the backs of the two front runners.

Now came the turning point, the beginning of the most bizarre happening ever to occur to a UMass freshman cross country team. The five front men came to a fork and the Northeastern runners went left, the UMass runners went to the right. What happened is now history. Sevigny, O'Connell, and Frontierro found themselves all alone on the wrong path. They turned around to get back on the right track to help out Bill Lowry and Roger Nasatka who had followed the Huskies, but it was too late and Northeastern won the team title.

A stunned Coach Ken O'Brien commented, "I've never seen a team put it together like this year's frosh. They had positions three, four, five, seven, and ten, at the three mile mark and it was all gone in another tenth of a mile."

O'Brien could not have put it any better. This frosh team has stormed over everyone in sight in over the past month and only the instance of a split second when three frosh runners decided to go right instead of left kept them from winning the title that they so deserved.

YanCon Champs Return To Action As Coast Guard Hosts Redmen

by EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

With relatively no time to savor their impressive 4-0 victory over the University of New Hampshire, the Redman booters are back in action this afternoon, traveling to New London, Connecticut to battle the Coast Guard Academy. UMass, recent winner of the Yankee Congerence Championship, is presently the fifth ranked club in New England, the third in the University Division, from which teams will be selected to participate in the New England Playoffs of the N.C.A.A. national tourney. Ahead of the booters are Harvard (1), Brown (2), and close behind them are Middlebury (7), Williams (8), and UConn (10).

A victory over Coast Guard will tie the school mark for most victories in a single season, and give the Redmen a fine 7-2-2 mark for the season. As yet no word has been issued from the tournament committee as to who their four selections will be, and at least for members of the team and avid fans, this could be another one of those weeks like the one preceding the NIT invitation for the basketball team last spring. For the newly crowned champions this game takes on an added significance because the ultimate bid may rest on the final score. Here is how both teams shape up for the two-o'clock encounter:

COAST GUARD: The hosts for this key game are coached by UMass alumnus and former assistant to coach Broaca, Ray Cieplik. The undefeated Redman freshman team of 1968 with current varsity players Lindo Alves, Greg Hamilton, Bob Curtin, Augie Calheno, Gary Hart, Dick McCarron, Joe Cerniawski, and Paul Slack, was guided by Cieplik. Last year he coached the Springfield College Freshman to a very fine season. Coast Guard had a record of 5-3-1 coming into today's game, including big wins over Worcester Tech, 3-2, and Trinity College, 2-1. In addition, the hosting booters have defeated Norwich, Clark, and the N.Y. Maritime Academy, while losing to Wesleyan, Central Connecticut, and Providence, and tieing Babson College. Since last season the Cadets have improved tremendously, adding skilled playmaking to their characteristically aggressive, rough style of play.

Leading the attack for the Coast Guard are two veteran performers, forwards Pat Wiese and Bill Willis, and goalkeeper Kelly Callsion. The entire team has been scouted both by Coach Broaca and assistant David Jekanowski, and is considered one of the best clubs to come out of the academy in recent years. They are waiting in New London ready to upset UMass and will have the home field advantage, an especially big factor in New London.

MASSACHUSETTS: The booters will be looking to enhance their tournament chances, of course, so they can't afford to drop this game. They enter the contest after playing two of their best games of the year and will be eager to prove they can continue to play top-notch soccer. The Redmen have been hit by a recent rash of injuries, however, with Dick McCarron, hurt in the UNH game, expected to be available for this afternoon's contest. Senior Larry DeFelice, however, is probably out for the season with shoulder injury suffered against Springfield. But it is co-captain Augie Calheno who will be missed the most the rest of the way. The junior standout has played the entire season with a painful hernia, and only recently has been unable to continue. Calheno has played a key role in all of the booter's successes this banner year with the UNH game the first game he's missed. He has to be given a great deal of credit for playing as much, as well, and as enthusiastically as he has this season. No one has worked harder than the rugged halfback to make this season one of the most successful in UMass history. His teammates chose to give him the game ball from the conference winning victory Saturday and no one could dispute the selection.

Big Day For Booters

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Sunday was a strange day in the world of pro football. On an afternoon when O.J. Simpson was lost for the season with a knee injury and the Boston Patriots were shut out again, this time under Johnny Mazur, the biggest stories that emerged circled around a cripple and the oldest man in the game.

What Tom Dempsey of the New Orleans Saints did over the weekend has to be ranked with the unbelievable sports occurances that happen once every three or four years. If you didn't hear about it, Dempsey, a placekicker who has only half of his kicking foot, booted a record 63-yard field goal with only two seconds left to play to lift his team to a 19-17 upset win over the Detroit Lions.

To kick a field goal of that dimension is amazing in itself. After all, it bettered the existing mark by seven yards and permanently erased the name of Bert Rechechar and his 56-yarder from the books. Add to this the fact that this boot was under tremendous pressure since it decided the outcome of the game and put the Lions two full games behind the division leading Minnesota Vikings.

But more unbelievable than any of that was the fact that all of this was done by a man who is a cripple in a game dominated by superhuman athletes. One could go into a long spiel on how Dempsey should be an inspiration to all of us, but rather than sound like Howard Cosell, let us just say that the man deserves a great deal of admiration for his own personal achievements.

Another booter in the news Sunday was a man who has been playing football longer than this writer has been around, namely George Blanda. The 43-year old Oakland Raider, who was on the taxi squad last September, came in for the second straight week to save a ball game for his struggling teammates.

A week ago, Blanda was called on with three seconds left to play and his Raiders were trailing the Kansas City Chiefs, 17-14. All that was expected of him was to boot a 48-yard field goal which would give the Raiders a tie. With little ado, the aging veteran calmly put one through the uprights.

But that was only a warm-up compared to the hijinx Blanda performed Sunday. With his side behind the Cleveland Browns, 20-13, and Daryl Lamonica, the Raiders number one quarterback out with an injury, the 43-year old miracle worker was called on once again.

This time, he patiently drove his team 80 yards and hit Warren Wells with a 14-yard scoring pass and kicked the conversion himself with 1:32 remaining to knot the count at 20. But he was not through yet. After a Bill Nelson pass was intercepted by the Raiders, Blanda returned to the game and, after playing around with ball for a few plays, punched through another field goal with three seconds left, this time from 52-yards away. One wonders what Blanda will put out of his hat in the thin air of Denver next Sunday.

This reporter spent much of last summer in the British Isles and if you wonder what that has to do with placekicking, read on. It so happens that during the trip, the topic of American football came up. The soccer-oriented Britons always asked the same question. "Is it true that the football teams have one guy who only kicks the ball?" For some reason, they simply could not understand this, perhaps due to their own training in soccer in which everyone just about does everything. They questioned the value a man who can only kick.

If these people knew anything about the American game, they would have seen on Sunday just how valuable a placekicker can be.

Bromery Presents Security Proposal

Senate Sets Vacation Dorm Guidelines

The Student Senate last night passed a motion concerning the use of student dormitory rooms during vacations which sets up new guidelines for selecting which dorms are to be used. The new policy establishes a system by which dorms can volunteer and be recompensed for its use.

Vice President Patricia Beharry chaired the meeting in the place of vacationing President Glenn Elters. Other business at the meeting included the swearing-in of Freshman Class officers, the answering of various other questions, and a presentation by Dr. Randolph Bromery, Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs, concerning proposals for dormitory security.

The Special Business Motion dealing with the use of dorm rooms during vacation was introduced in the light of recent opposition expressed to the current policy of the alphabetical usage of dormitories on a regular basis. The motion, as it passed, recognizes that many students must stay on campus during vacations when dormitories are closed. At the same time, it recognizes the concerns of students over the involuntary use of their rooms during these times.

It was moved that dorms shall volunteer the use of their facilities and receive any profit resulting from the fees paid by the students staying in the rooms. This revenue is to be used for the improvement of the house, as decided by the house and its area coordinator. If more than one dorm volunteers, one will be chosen by lottery and may not be used again until all houses wishing to have a chance to be used. In the case that no dorms volunteer, the old system of alphabetical usage will be reverted to.

An amendment was added to the bill which calls for the Athletic Department to be billed for students whom they require to stay on campus during vacations to participate in athletics.

One alternative to the use of student rooms which had been suggested was the use of the Campus Center to house students. The Senate was told that this is economically and practically infeasible during Intercession and Spring Vacation because there are too many students to be housed and because the Center needs the revenue from regular rental rates for the room. However, the Campus Center can be used at least this Thanksgiving and Christmas, if need be.

Addressing the Senate in response to its invitation, Dr. Bromery told them "I've tried to take a serious look at security and the problems involved in solving it." He described his "interim, flexible proposal" for dealing with dormitory security. The proposal, which is designed to make better logistical use of available manpower, calls for the placement of a security guard or student guard in each dormitory, at least on Friday and Saturday nights. This guard would be in telephone contact with the campus security station, which would radio to policemen walking beats if the dorm guard needed their assistance in handling a problem.

Dr. Bromery said that this proposal is only temporary because there is a search currently being conducted to find a security director and whoever is selected might develop a different system. He said that he hopes that whoever is chosen for this position will be selected more in terms of his expetise in human relations than in actual police work.

Dr. Bromery also told of educational process which he has started. In it, students have been selected to talk to their fellow students about the type and magnitude of crimes on this campus to build up concern. He also spoke of plans to publish an annotated police log.

Asked when his proposal will come into effect, Dr. Bromery said he hopes to have it operating by Thanksgiving.

In response to another question concerning how students are to be involved in deciding security priorities, Dr. Bromery concluded his presentation by saying that his proposal is the direct result of a call for help by students. A lot of the specific rules for security coverage will be defined by the individual dorms, also giving students the chance to decide priorities.

In regular business, Vice President Beharry swore in the newly elected officers of the Freshman Class before the Senate. During the Question Period, various questions were answered by committee chairmen. Two questions were asked concerning the rumored appropriation of funds by the University for the renovation of Whitmore and the refurnishing of the Chancellor's House. Treasurer Verrochi explained that none of the funds recently appropriated by the University go for either of these purposes but instead for the renovation of academic buildings.

The three-hour meeting of the Senate was adjourned at 10 p.m.

Undergrad Ed. Conference Probes April 10-11 Issues

Wood Opens Meeting

Wednesday morning at 10:00, the tenth floor of the Campus Center was the site of a Faculty Conference on Undergraduate Education. The conference was a follow-up of the issues discussed during the April 10-11 period.

During April, classes were called off on these days to discuss all problems having to do with the campus. Since that time, there has been a Steering Committee which meets regularly to go over similar situations. They were the sponsors of yesterday's Conferance.

Attending the conference were approximately 100 people, including two grad students and two undergraduates, who were invited by the committee to attend.

T.O. Wilkinson from the Sociology Department, was chairman of the conference. Wilkinson greeted the members of the conference and introduced the first speaker, President Wood who talked about the changing system of higher education. His main point was that the problem was not with the dissenter, but with the unaroused apathetic majority.

The second speaker, Norman Birnbaum, a Sociology professor at Amherst College, examined some of the motives and possible results of the student revolt movement.

Coffee and doughnuts followed Birnbaum's speech. The coffee hour gave everybody a chance to mingle and discuss the speeches and the afternoon's topic session.

Issue Discussions

T.O. Wilkinson, moderator of the plenary meetings during yesterday's Faculty Conference on undergraduate education, seemed to accurately depict the final question left by the numerous "topic" workshops and discussions saying, "What do we do with what we have done."

The 100 or so faculty who gathered in the Campus Center yesterday dealt with a total of 16 general areas, everything from Long Range Planning to Curriculum. The value of it all: Wilkinson, head of the Sociology department felt that just getting a group of "concerned faculty" together to talk was better than nothing.

The following are reports representing a cross section of the types of topics and discussions which took place yesterday:

LONG RANGE PLANNING:

Meeting with two of the authors of the recently released Faculty Senate Long Range planning Committee report, members of the faculty questioned the strength of certain proposals made by the Committee, particularly in the area of establishing Residential Colleges for UMass.

The small group was told by Joe Marcus, Assistant to the Chancellor for University relations and one of three authors of the report, that the committee's recommendations were made on the basis of a willingness to "accept the notion of what a public university should be in 1970." "If democracy is diversity, the University as an agent of democracy must be diverse," he said.

Master of Southwest, John Hunt questioned the committee's priorities pointing out the lack of a "strong" emphasis on the establishment of residential colleges. Marcus and Irving Howard (chairman of the committee) defended the report saying that, with the limitations of the original faculty Senate charge to the committee, all they "could plea for (in the report) was diversity.

The Committee authors emphasized to the group that their job was not to give specific recommendations, rather to present a general "management plan" for the whole University.

NEW WAYS TO LOOK AT CURRICULUM

Nine faculty met in an enthusiastic discussion concerning new ways to look at curriculum at the University.

Most present agreed with Walker Gibson of the English Dept. that what is needed is "skill at problem-solving and a sense of one's own participation in humanity." The nine attacked the rigidity of the present educational system and called for interdisciplinary programs to solve the "interdepartmental problems of society today."

The educators protested against the narrow education which is now offered by higher education; geared towards turning out students bound for graduate school. Much of the discussion focused on the necessity of developing "viable alternatives to graduate school" and to educating those who do not wish to earn a degree higher than a B.A. or B.S.

Gibson introduced an ideal situation where an undergraduate would be a divisional major and would receive a degree in either humanities, or social sciences, or sciences.

TEACHER AND COURSE EVALUATION

The objective of teacher and course evaluation is to obtain from students their reactions to courses and the faculty who teach them in order that faculty may know how to improve their methods and approach and so students can discern which courses are most suited to their needs.

Thomas Filmore, coordinator of the program hopes that in the future teacher and course evaluation will become mandatory and become a permanent part of the administration.

The evaluation sheets contain questions with four possible answer choices. With four answers it will leave no room for the student to take a middle-of-the-road attitude.

However, by the end of the meeting the attendants had agreed that teacher evaluation was a powerful tool for improvement but was only one way of evaluating courses.

CCEBS

Hodges Glenn, director of the UMass CCEBS program, addressed one of the discussion groups of Wednesday's Undergraduate Education Conference, "CCEBS—A Case Study of Admissions Criteria."

His presentation questioned the validity of present criteria: grade point average and general mental ability tests, such as SAT and ACT tests; and illustrated how other means of evaluation-past educational performance, and tests of motivation, creativity,etc. were more valid as criteria for the admission of the CCEBS student, "who is not a 'disadvantaged' student, but a person of different qualities and abilities."

HIGHER EDUCATION

For 'reasons of relevency', the members of the "Higher Education and Alienation" discussion group, of Wed.'s Undergraduate Education Conference, decided to join in discussion with the long range planning discussion group.

These resons were soon apparent as the discussion, in which members of the Faculty Senate advisory committee on Long Range Planning defended their report, dealt with the topics of priorities, undergraduate vs graduate education, and diversified educational experiences.

This, and other veins of discussion was only more reason for a feeling of alienation by the undergraduate student body.

No Action Taken

No definite action towards creating a more satisfying teaching and learning environment was decided upon at the plenary session of faculty meetings on undergraduate academics held yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center.

Several suggestions about the correlation of living and learning experiences and stronger internal organization of faculty committees were offered, however, after T.O. Wilkinson of the Sociology Department opened the floor following his own remarks concerning the importance of long range planning and utilization of feedback.

Gen'l Motors, UAW Reach Tentative Agreements

DETROIT (AP) - The United Auto Workers and General Motors reached a tentative agreement Wednesday on a new three year labor contract which could set the strike crippled auto giant moving towards full production by the end of the month.

Ratification of the national contract by 394,000 GM workers and the settlement of outstanding U.S. local contracts still stand in the way of a full resumption of car and truck output by the world's largest auto maker.

The new contract was inflationary by the standard definition of the word, but added that this was the pattern today in labor contracts.

Details of the contract were withheld until it is presented to the union's 350 member GM council which must okay the pact before it is passed on to the membership for ratification.

The council met at 1 p.m. Wednesday to look at the contract, but the meeting was adjourned until 9:30 a.m. Thursday to give union officials more time to write up an explanation of the offer.

Bargaining table sources, however said the pact included these items:

A return to an unlimited cost of living allowance - COLA - which moves wages up or down with quarterly changes in the Consumer Price Index. The union agreed to a ceiling on COLA in the 1967 Big Three contracts and made a return to the unlimited formula a top demand in this year's bargaining.

A first year wage increase ranging from 49 to 61 cents an hour depending on the worker's pay scale. The union had sought a boost starting at 61.1 cents and the company's last offer started at 38 cents. The current average hourly wage in the industry is $4.02. Automakers estimate they pay an additional $1.75 an hour in wages and fringe benefits.

Retirement for workers with 30 years service at $500 a month at age 58 in the first year of the contract, age 56 in the second year and age 55 in the third year. The union had originally sought retirement at $500 a month after 30 years, regardless of age. Under the current contract a 55 year old worker with 30 years of service could retire at a maximum of $104.11 monthly.

- Four weeks vacation for workers with 20 years of service.

The final details of the contract were put together in two long sessions, a 17 hour one that began Monday morning and a final one which began Tuesday morning and ended early Wednesday. Bargaining had been stepped up since Oct. 30.

GM had said earlier it needed a settlement by Wednesday if it was to get back in production by Dec. 1.

De Gaulle Burial Simple; Just As He Ordered It

PARIS (AP) - A soldier home from the wars, Gen. Charles de Gaulle is going to his grave today in a $63 wooden coffin.

His funeral at Colombey, simple in accordance with his own directions, will follow memorial services four hours earlier in Paris' Notre Dame Cathedral.

For that, money was no factor in ordering out special planes and trains to Paris to bring world leaders for a final tribute to the giant of a man - in stature and in scope - who is largely credited with making France what it is today.

Security officials drew on their reserves to protect such visitors as President Nixon and Soviet President Nikolai V. Podgorny.

While church bells toll all over France the dignitaries will attend a Requiem Mass at the 600 year old cathedral. The service, like the one in DeGaulle's home village of Colombey les Deux Eglises, will be bare of eulogy or the playing of "Taps". These were the restrictions - "no bands, no bugles" - that DeGaulle set down in a hand-written directive 18 years ago.

Then, later, DeGaulle is being buried beside his daughter Anne, dead 22 years, and a forgotten farm laborer.

On Wednesday only such distinguished personages as President Georges Pompidou, once DeGaulle's right hand man and then his successor, were admitted to the family home where DeGaulle died Monday in his 80th year.

With the family standing by, DeGaulle lay in the room wherehe died. The body was in a brigadier general's uniform, and the coffin was partly covered by the French tricolor.

A visitor said a single candle burned and he thought he recognized the general's old blue kepi, marked with two stars - emblematic of the lowest French general's rank.

Made of oak by the village coffin maker, the coffin had a silver-plated crucifix and aluminum handles.

DeGaulle's family had told the casket maker: "Do as you would for anybody else."

A Foreign Office list of mourners at Notre Dame included more than 80 chiefs of state, heads of government and other great officials. The final list was expected to approach the representation of 92 high level delegations that attended the funerals of John F. Kennedy and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The official list of mourners included Prince Charles of Britain, the Shah of Iran, Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, Queen Juliana of Holland, King Baudoin of Belgium and former Premier David Ben Gurion of Israel.

Hollings Hits Nixon Speeches

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Ernest F. Hollings says President Nixon never has genuinely committed himself to programs that would feed all the nation's poor despite his speeches on the hunger problem. And he wants the President to undertake a national hunger tour.

The South Carolina Democrat says Nixon has listened too often to top White House advisors who oppose spending large sums of money on feeding programs or prefer other antipoverty measures instead of taking recommendations of administration hunger fighters.

He said Nixon has declined to follow the advice of Robert A. Finch, Secretaries Clifford M. Hardin of Agriculture and Maurice H. Stans of Commerce or other food program advocates including the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health.

"The president has never acted seriously on any of the recommendations of hunger fighters within his administration or the pleading of the White House conference," says Hollings. "He has yet to be genuinely committed."

Hollings gives his views in a book, The Case Against Hunger - a Demand for a National Policy to be published Thursday.

Studies Hit Nixon Policies

WASHINGTON (AP) - Five new economic studies raised doubts Wednesday that the nation will meet the Nixon administration's goal of full employment by mid 1972.

The reports were issued by the Brookings Institution - but without specific endorsement of the findings by that privately supported research organization - in the second issue of the thrice yearly publication, Brookings Papers on Economic Activity.

The hoped for speedy recovery, the several reports suggest, may be impeded by slack consumer demand for new cars, slow business investment in inventories, a flattening of industry's outlays for new plant and equipment, and the projected modest rate of increase in the money supply.

NYC Commissioner Tells Why Police Go Bad

NEW YORK (AP) - Police go bad, the city's investigation commissioner said Wednesday, because they are expected to enforce unrealistic laws and are tempted by businessmen who want to "buy the badge."

The commissioner, Robert Ruskin, whose office receives complaints of police corruption, said he believes most policemen want to be honest.

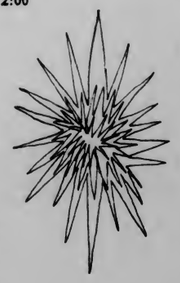
"I am convinced they start out honest," he said in an interview with New York Post, "then a motorist offers him $10 or a restaurant owner refuses to let him pay for a lunch. That's the way it starts.

"I know for a fact," he continued, "many cops take out their wallets to pay for a hot dog and a coke and the restaurant man absolutely won't take the money.

"What is the cop supposed to do - throw it down and run?"

Sex, gambling, the Sabbath and business operations were areas in which he said laws contributed to the cycle of police corruption and payoffs. This makes the giving and taking of bribes an attractive alternative to enforcing outdated rules, he stated.

Prostitution, particularly in light of rising venereal disease cases, should be brought under regulation rather than continue "operating in dark alleys, giving corrupt officials an opportunity to supplement their income."



Laws regarding the sexual practices of consenting adults, he said, now only provide opportunity for blackmail, allowing police to exact tribute from persons threatened with arrest.

"As long as the public is not affected and there is no victim," Ruskin said, "a person's sexual conduct should not be restricted by law."

"Seattle Seven" Tried On Conspiracy Charges

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) - Seven young people go on trial here Monday on federal conspiracy charges stemming from vandalism at a U.S. building in Seattle last winter. The defendants and the government already are arguing the case's significance.

The defendants, who call themselves the Seattle Seven, and their attorneys claim the trial is the nation's second major conspiracy trial, the legal battle of the Chicago Seven being the first.

"Plain rubbish," says U.S. Attorney Stan Pitkin. His office drew up the conspiracy indictments after Seattle's federal courthouse was defaced during a demonstration last Feb. 17, the day after the Chicago Seven verdicts were handed down.

"Conspiracy is quite often an included count in any criminal case," Pitkin says. "It could be conspiracy to commit bank robbery, distribute heroin or participate in a civil disorder."

Charged with conspiracy to damage the federal courthouse, which was spraved with paint and had some windows broken, are Michael Lerner, 27, Charles C. Marshall III, 25, Jeffrey Dowd, 20, Joseph Kelly, 24, Michael Abeles, 19, Roger Lippman, 22, and Susan Stern, 27. An eighth defendant, 19 year old Michael Justesen, is still sought.

Lerner also has been charged with using interstate telephone lines to incite to riot. Additional charges of crossing state lines to incite to riot have been filed against Marshall, Dowd, Kelly and Abeles.

Lerner came to Seattle from Berkeley, Calif., and spent a year as a visiting professor of philosophy at the University of Washington. His contract was not renewed. Marshall, a political science graduate of Cornell University, Kelly, Mrs. Stern and Abeles, formerly were members of Students for a Democratic Society. Lippman, a former student at Portland's Reed College, and Dowd have been associated with leftist groups in Seattle.

Marshall says Seattle has been "singled out as a target area for repression by the national administration." He says although there were about 30 demonstrations throughout the country Feb. 17, "there was only one federal level indictment coming out of these deomonstrations and that was in Seattle."

Marshall asserts Seattle was chosen because of its "isolation" and because the defendants are not as well known nationally as were the Chicago Seven.

Pitkin disagrees, saying "it's a local case."

Five Major Elections Still Remain Uncertain

WASHINGTON (AP) - Eight days after election day five major races remain undecided senator in Indiana, congressman in Kentucky and governorships in Rhode Island, Oklahoma and Maine.

The Democrats hold hairline leads in all five at this point, but the final outcome of all of them may not be nailed down for weeks. And Congress may have to decide who won the Senate and House seats.

If there are recounts in these two races and the loser challenges that decision the problem shifts to Washington. The Constitution says "each house shall be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members."

The Indiana Senate contest is between incumbent Sen. Vance Hartke and his Republican challenger Rep. Richard L. Roudebush. The Kentucky house battle is between incumbent GOP Rep William O. Cowger and Democrat Romano T. Mazzoli.

The latest unofficial tally shows Hartke leading Roudebush by 4,562 votes. And Secretary of State William N. Salin said he would not have final, official totals until Thursday because of the Veterans Day holiday.

Then the loser can decide whether he wants to demand a recount.

The stakes are high because of the close party division of the Senate. A Hartke win would hold Republican gains to two and give Democrats 55 of the 100 seats.

Both Republicans and Democrats in Indiana have charged vote fraud in scattered areas, perhaps presaging a recount demand.

In the Kentucky 3rd District congressional, Mazzoli has an unofficial lead of 210 votes over the incumbent Republican, with all the votes counted. A recanvass is expected to be completed in time for the Jefferson County Election Commission to meet Thursday and declare the winner.

Then it will be up to the loser to decide whether to go to court to seek a recount, a process that could take many weeks. Cowger last week asked for a review of registration records in 23 precincts.

The gubernatorial recount in Oklahoma, the first statewide race recount in state history, is expected to be completed Saturday. Democratic challenger David Hall clung to a 2,567 vote lead over Republican Gov. Dewey Barlett.

Then the loser can decide whether he wants to demand a recount.

In Maine, Democratic Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis widened his lead over Republican Atty. Gen. James S. Erwin to 860 votes in the unofficial count. The official tabulation begins next week.

But Erwin already has formally requested a recount which starts Nov. 23 and may take five or six weeks.

If the issue is not resolved by Jan. 6 the day the legislature convenes the Senate president to be chosen then will take over as governor until a decision is reached. Since the GOP controls the Senate he would be a Republican.

In Rhode Island, the Board of Elections has been recounting for the past week with incumbent Democratic Gov. Frank Licht holding onto a 2,142 vote lead over Republican Herbert F. DeSimone.

The Rhode Island board starts Thursday tallying 7,551 absentee ballots, a process which may take a week.

Two years ago when Licht degeated John H. Chafee, now secretary of the Navy, Chafee came out ahead 2 to 1 in the absentee ballots. If the same partisan division happens this year DeSimone could overcome Licht's lead.

Nixon Asks No Exemptions For Vietnam War Objectors

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration asked the Supreme Court Wednesday to rule out draft exemptions for men who are conscientiously opposed to the Vietnam war but not to all wars.

However sincere or religious these men may be, a political judgment is at the heart of their objection, said Solicitor Gen. Erwin N. Griswold and Justice Department lawyers in a brief submitted to the court.

Besides, the administration argues, if selective exemptions are approved people could refuse to pay their taxes on religious grounds or could dety other laws.

"Moral conviction derived from political judgment may well justify civil disobedience in the mind of the lawbreaker, but it is not a valid defense to breaking the law," the brief said.

Later this term the court will hear the appeals of two men who contended their conscience did not permit them to fight in Vietnam. One, Guy P. Gillette, of Yonders, N.Y., was sentenced to two years in prison for not reporting for induction. The other, Louis A. Negre, of Bakersfield, Calif., is an Army veteran who was refused a discharge.

According To Local Programs

Young People Helping Others With Problems of Drug Abuse

As the nation gropes for an answer to its drug abuse epidemic, many new local efforts are emphasizing the help that young people can give to other young people who are in drug trouble.

In New Haven, Conn., the project is private, a storefront called Number 9, an easygoing, informal "youth crisis intervention center," run by young people.

Organizations like Number 9 - which got its name from the Beatles song, "Revolution Number 9" - are beginning to spring up across the country, with the young people sometimes working largely alone, sometimes as part of a community's overall program.

Whether in New Haven, or in Phoenix, Ariz., San Mateo, Calif., Tampa, Fla., all the programs try to offer guidance and therapy to youths in trouble, all reflecting varying aspects of the nation's effort.

In New Haven, for example, the help comes from young people skeptical of more established routes of treatment.

"The whole concept of Number 9 is that the agencies are failing," Clark argues. "They're failing morally; they're failing in terms of their responsibility to the community, and they're great big copout centers."

But an established agency in Connecticut disputed this, countering that such informal centers are mainly for middle class white youths who are not usually on hard drugs, while the recognized agencies must aim at prolonged, intense treatment of those who have demonstrated a clear desire to quit using drugs.

A center in Phoenix, in a large white house in the down town area, also has a problem of informality vs. formality, even though it is a part of a larger community program.

The Phoenix center, called Terros House a misspelling of the Latin word for earth offers help 24 hours a day to anyone who needs it. But it also comes under a local "umbrella" organization, the Community Organization for Drug Abuse Control, suggested by the county medical society to coordinate the entire community effort.

School of Ed. To Present Educational Smorgasbord

A week-long symposium for all those interested in education will be held Monday through Friday, Nov 16-20, at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

"Something Else '70", this year's edition of the annual multi-media fair of the University School of Education, is a five-day educational smorgasbord of events, happenings, talks, a mock trial, audio-visual tapings, musical improvisations, dramas, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, colloquia and other events.

Subtitled "Alternate futures in education," the week is for everyone--students and faculty from UMass and neighboring colleges, teachers and administrators in public schools and any parent or other person interested in education. At any hour through each day at the School of Education and some other locations, three to ten events are going on.

"All are related to alternate futures in education--what can be done about what's wrong in education today," according to Robert Woodbury, assistant school of education dean. There is no charge or registration and all that is needed is a schedule. These are available at the main lobby of the School of Education or by mail from School of Education, University of Massachusetts, Amherst 01002.

All regular classes at the School of Education have been suspended for the week so that students and faculty may participate fully. Late afternoon and evening sessions have been scheduled so that working teachers and administrators may attend.

A feature is a mock trial with Harvard Law School faculty and others examining the law as a vehicle for reform in education. In the mock court action at 1 p.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 18, a hypothetical black pupil charges a hypothetical school committee with denying him equal opportunity. The issue will be further examined in "The Law as a Vehicle for Reform in Education," discussion at 8 p.m. Wednesday.

Westfield State Students Protest Prexy's Action

Tuesday morning, November 10, marked the beginning of another student strike. Eight hundred of Westfield State's 2200 students boycotted their classes in protest to the disciplinary action taken against two students and a demand to expand the college cabinet.

At a rally on Monday, 1000 students took a vote making the decision to boycott classes beginning at 8:30. The 1:00 rally was prompted by the failure of President Leonard J. Savignano to appear at a meeting Saturday planned by the student leaders to talk about their proposals. After the rally, Dr. Savignano refused to meet with student representatives because he was in conference. Late Monday, however, the President was presented with three demands, out of an original five. All points were endorsed by the Student Senate.

The first demand was that the president meet with the students immediately.

The second was that Savignano nullify all disciplinary action taken against Stephen Pappas and William Reardon.

The last demand was that the college cabinet be expanded to include three students and three faculty members with equal voting power.

The issue concerning Pappas and Reardon is that one is allowed to student teach and the other is not. Disciplinary action was taken against the two, according to reports, because they were involved in arranging a beer party on the campus last year. Out of the 500 who attended, students complained only Pappas and Reardon were singled out.

Another problem bothering the students was the fact that even those over 21 were not allowed to live off campus, muchless students 18 years and older, regardless of parental consent. They also charged that the administration should become more lax with rules regarding dormitory visiting hours for those of the opposite sex.

The strike lasted until 2:00 Tuesday afternoon, when most of the crowd ended the picketing to go to the Westfield State soccer game. There was no picketing on Wednesday out of respect for Veteran's Day. The strike resumes today at 8:30 again.

One complaint by students is the lack of communication between the students and administration. In rebuttal to this statement, Dr. Savignano said:

"The lines of communication between the appropriate student leaders and the college administration have always been open."

"Any so-called demands by students acting outside of channels established by the Student Senate cannot and will not be considered."

"The Student Life Committee at Westfield State College has been-and is continuing to-work on matters that have caused student unrest in the past. Solutions to problems cannot be reached overnight-many have far reaching implications, and must be considered in the light of these implications, not only for today, but also for tomorrow and in the days to come."

The President's closing statement said: "Young people today seek to be treated as adults-with the rights and prerogatives of adults. They seem to fail to realize that with these rights go obligations. When the students at Westfield State College begin to act like adults, then we can sit down and talk as adults together. Then, and only then, will solutions be found to these matters which concern them."

Figure skating classes are being offered beginning November 16 and lasting through December 23. The classes, to be held in Orr Rink at Amherst College, will include an instructional period plus unlimited practice time.

These classes may be used as a gym period for academic credit. Any two class periods may be chosen by arrangement between 10:00 A.M. and 2:00 P.M. weekdays, excluding Saturday and Sunday.

The lab fee is only $30.00 plus your own skates and transportation. Sign up at the General Physical Education Office located in 209 Boyden.

Admission Policy Established For Homecoming Concerts

When you purchase your tickets, detach and keep the accompanying stub with you at the concert. In the event of any unusual circumstances this stub will serve as a basis for re-admission to the Cage or for an appropriate refund if deemed necessary by the sponsor. Nothing else will be honored.

Entrance to the concerts will be through the south doors of the Cage as usual. In order to leave the concert, you must ask for a pass out ticket at the front door lobby. No one will be allowed in without a pass out ticket.

NES Employs Varying Tutoring Techniques

The Northern Educational Service tutoring program has completed a series of orientation sessions which met each Sunday since the start of the semester. Actual tutoring at the NES centers began in mid-October.

The instructional objectives of the orientation were to provide the tutors with knowledge of different tutoring methods and to insure their commitment to the program. The sessions were also geared to demonstrate that tutoring can be very different from traditional teaching, group spokesmen say.

The number of NES volunteers assigned tutees has been slowly growing since the tutoring program started, though many students who signed up have not yet received assignments.

According to a spokesman of NES, the blame for the slow expansion lies with those who administrate the program, both on campus and in Springfield. He also cites the "naivite" of students who think that the needy should jump at the chance for aid from middle-class university students.

If you want your own answers to the question of campus involvement with the problems of hate and poverty, and you are willing to spend a continuing part of the academic year getting that answer, NES invites you to participate in a one-to- one educational experience.

NES hopes that students with special skills will also join the program. A current example is provided by the activities of the Spanish Club in Springfield.

Tutoring on a one-to-one basis has been the prime-concern, of the program, but the types of involvement possible limited only by time, money and the individuals who sign up.

If you are waiting assignment now, wait no longer.

All the centers need tutors, but since you will be arriving unassigned, you may spend a session or two before you find a permanent tutee. Co-ordinators at each center will help you and other people will meet the bus every day to give information and advice.

The NES bus will be leaving at 2:45 and 6:15 PM Monday through Thursday from the Haigis Mall Lobby Entrance of Whitmore.

Are We Or Are We Not?

I like to think of this column as a dialogue with its readers; I don't think that any student should be moralizing. For this reason I find it difficult to approach national affairs. I've even gone so far as to swear off doing it in favor of writing about the micro-level of life, individuals and how they cope with what eats away at them. But there is something gnawing away at the insides of America circa 1970, and I think that it should be examined. Are we or are we not the Amerika which the Left describes: oppressive, imperialistic, racist?

In foreign affairs are we an imperial power? As I wrote on election day a good case can be made that we are. We support military dictatorships in different parts of the world which are more known for their susceptibility to our influence than for service to their respective nations; Servan-Schreiber described the growing influence of US business in European politics. On the other hand, we are one of the two superpowers on this planet, and the other has made no secret of its desire to leave us six feet under. How do we balance the raison d'etre of foreign policy - defense of this nation and its people - with respect for the integrity of every other nation on the globe?

Are we oppressive to people within our borders? This hinges partly on the definition of oppression. If there is evidence implication such people as Angela Davis and Bobby Seale in violent crime, aren't we bound to try them in a court of law? How do we explain what happened to Fred Hampton, shot in his sleep? On the one hand, if you look only at cases like his, you become convinced that justice is a farce. Yet if you consider the pleas that Angela Davis and Seale should be released - "freed" - you become convinced that that sort of justice also is a farce.

Are we a racist country? I have an opinion on this and I've offered it before: In the cities what is often called racism is fear. A neighborhood changes, a white man is left watching the disappearance of the stores and churches and friends which he'd known his entire life.

Are we a racist country? I have an opinion on this and I've offered it before: In the cities what is often called racism is fear. A neighborhood changes, a white man is left watching the disappearance of the stores and churches and friends which he'd known his entire life. With real estate and rental prices rising as they are, he feels trapped into either housing he cannot afford or life which he cannot accept. To call this kind of bitterness "racism" seems folly.

I would like to hear from readers on these questions and will be glad to answer your comments.

No Open Discussion

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

Twenty people were in my dorm the other night to discuss one life style versus another.

The sorority women kept their end of the bargain – they advertised for an open debate with all who are "pro, con, or in-between" in regard to the Greek system and came down to the dorms prepared.

I was the only non-sorority girl who showed up and took part in the discussion at my dorm.

We talked over the problems of the rush period, the evils of "cutting". They made modifications in this year's rush and want to go further in making the process less superficial.

And I've come to wonder who realizes the harshness of cutting better than the people who are directly responsible? None of us could offer a sound alternative.

Later, my neighbors told me they didn't come because they thought the Greeks were after more "converts" and, "Why should I waste my time listening to things I know I don't agree with?" Yet these same people will tell you that a university is supposed to be a forum for the free exchange of ideas.

Granted, there are more pressing issues facing us than the future of sororities at UMass, but an instance like this emphasizes how little people are willing to broaden their views.

The sorority people I talked to are feeling the antagonism towards their life style. They are questioning what it stems from. And until they hear opposing viewpoints, they won't find answers.

Every student who engages in a campus activity feels the impact of apathy. The Greek system is no exception, and it has to deal with the harmful stereotyping of decades past as well.

You'll find catty, empty shells of people in every sorority house on campus. Also on every corridor of every girls' dorm. When will non-sorority women admit it?

A month ago, I would not have believed I'd be defending sororities. There are still aspects of sorority life I can never agree with. But at least I've tried to open my mind a little, at least I've learned enough to build a defense on.

And, damn it, those twenty people deserve some defense.

Whites Uneasy With Blacks

To the Editor:

White students better start to wake up.

Don't take this article for granted without thinking about it.

Racism is a part of the Amerikan culture. It is taught to you through the values you hold and your way of interpreting and thinking. Let's face it, all white students have a fear of blacks on this all white purpose university. Its cool and really together to say "Well, I'm not prejudiced or a racist at all, nor do I believe and will practice those concepts of thought," but what you aren't realizing is that the very nature of public schools, made by whites, and the very nature of the type of education of any field on this campus and all others, teaches you and socializes you to think and act in a racist, prejudiced manner.

So far, white student readers probably don't care or just can't comprehend what's being run down, but check this out – (You) White students are very uneasy when in the presence of a black student. White students are always using their music against black sounds in some way. You're in constant awareness of blacks, but choose not to recognize them and what you are doing is further carrying out your racist forerunners' thoughts and wishes – and further splitting blacks more radically away from your white made and white purpose university. White students better check this racist system out, disspell your myths and start to stop and check out your values.

Racism in this Amerikan culture is imbedded through education. Time is too short to get nothing out of a racist educational system. "Check out your mind."

Back With Evelyn

(Ed note: This letter is from the Evely Wood Reading Dynamics Institute. The letter which appeared yesterday was supposed to be withdrawn we apologize for the inconvience)

To the Editor:

A recent letter to this page raised questions about the advertising used by Reading Dynamics. Much of Mr. Santeusanio's commentary shows a misunderstanding (or misreading) or printed material. Even he had to admit "that the Reading Dynamics course apparently does produce some measure of reading improvement in their pupils."

Our only claim is that the course will triple your reading efficiency, which is a product of speed and comprehension. This is backed with a money-back guarantee. Some 98% of our students are able to do this.

Now because Evelyn Wood techniques allow people to achieve much more impressive scores, we certainly have every right to make the public aware that the average graduate improves his reading index 4.7 times. Fantastic speeds and comprehension increases are also not unusual and these are used in advertising the same as stars are used in movies and Joe Namath is used to get fans out to a game.

Unfortunately, the reports cited in the letter have been disproved since their publication. The Stanford Taylor evaluation was of a group at the Air Force Academy the early 1960's. In that particular course the Academy insisted that their own teachers give the course. The teachers had not been trained in Wood techniques and Reading Dynamics rejected any association with the group. The Ehrlich report, which was published in the "Saturday Evening Post," proved to be as ficticous as the author. When it was discovered that Columbia University had no one by that name on its staff, the magazine was sued for damages.

Apparently Mr. Santeussanio has a long-standing axe to grind. We suggest that he not criticize without first-hand knowledge of his own from taking the course himself. That would be fair.

If public education were doing its job and teaching people to read effectively, we would soon be out of business. Our success on the college campus shows there is a crying need for improvement of reading and study skills.

Action Lab

To the Editor:

The article by Maxine Forward covering the meeting of Action Lab Monday night contained several mistakes and misconceptions which we would like to clarify. The speaker, Mr. Merton Burt, is a dupty sheriff, not a warden, also the prison involved is Hampshire County Jail, not Berkshire as reported. Mr. Burt did not say that the girls would have special difficulty, but that they would have a special asset in that they have the ability to capture the immediate attention of the tutees. Also, Mr. Burt expressly stated that the inmates would be enthusiastic at the beginning, not "uninterested and bored" as the article stated. It is up to the tutors to help to maintain and enhance this enthusiasm and motivation. We would like to express our concern over the need for fair and accurate reporting which can only come through a total overview of the meeting and some degree of understanding of the program. The sporadic attendance of the reporter became evident in the sporadic reporting.

Apology

To the Editor:

It has been pointed out to me that my column which appeared in Monday's MDC. "Heresies and Interludes", contained a thoroughly tasteless and unjustified inference toward athletes. To this, I must heartily concur, and admit my mistake. It was pointed out to me that UMass athletes have, as a group, one of the highest cums on campus. It is also true, and this was one of my unclear utterances, that some students, rather than just accept a scholarship, earn their way through school by participating in athletics and representing their school.

Although I still feel that intercollegiate sports should be discontinued, I apologize for my undocumented inference concerning athletes.

Involvement

To the Editor,

Since the beginning of the school year, the Campus Center has come under a severe verbal attack. Much of the criticism is warrented. Much is not. Much has come aboout because of misinformation. However, the important fact is that there hasn't been much visible improvement. What can each student do about the Campus Center? I see three alternatives: 1) ignore it (and pretend you don't pay $48 a year for it), 2) continue the present course, and sit around bitching, or 3) take some action, get involved, do something constructive.

The Student Union Governing Board is holding elections a week from today. Each undergraduate class will be electing new members to the Board. It's not too late to get forty signatures from your own class on a nomination paper, and run for office. The Board also has various committees that any student can apply for without the hassle of an election. Anyone can join the Program Council, and work for the kind of programs they would like to see put on in the building. You can contact your S.U.G. Board representatives with any comments, criticisms, or suggestions. This is why we all have office hours in R.S.O. All of these alternatives will be discussed in an open S.U.G. Board Forum tonight at 6:00 P.M. in 817 C.C.

Any student who thinks he has no recourse to changing and improving the building and its programs is sadly mistaken. I, for one, am sick and tired of putting in long hours of work, and beating my head against walls, and failing because of a lack of student input. So once again we are trying to achieve this student participation. I urge every member of the University community to come tonight. The building will only be what you make it.

Left-Right

To the Editor,

In entering into a discussion of political ideologies, one often hears specific ideologies classified as either leftwing or rightwing. This method of labelling, which originated in Europe, is obsolete and only serves to confuse people. I cite the following:

1) The extreme Left, Communism, and the extreme Right, Fascism, which, according to the concept are opposite poles, are infact only variant forms of collectivist-Statism.

2) The fundamental political conflict is not between variant forms of Statism (Fascism, Communism, Socialism, Nazism, Welfare Statism, Corporate Statism, Theocracy, Apartheid) but between the concept of individual rights vs. the concept of the right of the State to use arbitrary coercion to direct the activities of individuals.

3) The concept of individual rights holds that the individual is an end in himself, not a means to a collective end. Individual rights, which include the right to life, liberty, and posession of property, are natural rights which can only be violated by the use of physical force.

4) The concept of individual rights subordinates society and it's governing apparatus to the rule of moral law. Arbitrary Statism subordinates individual rights to a higher authority, embodied in such slogans as "The good of society."

5) The type of Government which sanctions individual rights is, and can only be, a Constitutionally limited state, with a bill a individual rights, such as our often abrogated U.S. Constitution. The Economonic corrolary of such a constitutional system would be Capitalism, the only system which would fully sanction the individual rights of private ownership of earned property and the right of free exchange. A system of true Capitalism does not exist, even in America.

Women's Lib And Sex

There are a couple of widespread ideas about women in Women's Liberation and sex. One is that they feel that women should not sleep with men at all. I think that this idea comes more from men's and some women's fears than from the reality of the woman's movement. The other idea is that to be sexually liberated and therefore to be a liberated woman means that women sleep with all comers. This I see as growing out of men's and some women's sexual fantasies.

As a woman and as a woman in Women's Liberation, I see neither enforced celibacy nor enforced promiscuity as liberation. In fact I see both operating in the university community and both oppresive. In order to be sexually liberated we must have control over our own bodies. That means that we have a real choice whether or not we will sleep with men. It simply isn't true that women have that choice now, that we can say no at any time. It is not true because of the huge cultural-social pressures that we are under.

Women are not free to decide in situations where we are made to feel guilty. We are made to feel guilty by "straight" society if we are single and sleep with someone or if we get caught at it (pregnant). We are made to feel guilty by the man if we do not sleep with him. How can you do this to me? he says. The culture doesn't teach him to say, What is this doing to you?

Because we are so unsure of ourselves and have been taught so well by the culture that our bodies are our most valuable asset, we are very susceptible to giving into a man's feelings and desires in an attempt to gain his approval.

Also, because we learn to see ourselves in terms of a man and our lives in terms of marriage, we are afraid to do anything that may make our man leave or even get angry. In this situation it is naive to say that women have free choice.

Having control over our bodies means being able to use birth control if we want to, and free abortion if we want them. As important as these is that our sexuality is dependent on our feelings and desires, not responding to the desires of men's sexuality.

Sorority Advantages Boosted By Meeting

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

The controversy over the role of sororities in the university community continues with no resolution to the conflict in sight, most students at UMass feel.

"We're extremely defensive in trying to prove ourselves," says Pan-Hellenic vice president Cini Fortine.

Pan-hellenic sponsored-debates Monday night at various campus locations did little to clear the air. Results of debates in Coolidge middle and Lewis house seemed to indicate that Greeks overwhelmingly outnumbered non-Greeks in attendance and subsequently the pros rather than the cons of sorority living were more often expressed.

In a discussion on the purposes of sororities on campus, the consensus by sorority members at both Lewis and Coolidge debates was that there is a greater feeling of community at sororities. There are feelings of closeness, sharing experiences and common interests at sororities which are not as strong as in dorms according to Greeks at Lewis. "There's always someone to do something," said one Greek at Coolidge.

One non-Greek at Coolidge questioned why the same feeling of community could not be achieved in dormitories. A number of different responses resulted from the Greek girls. One girl said that the problem had "a lot to do with locked doors." The security problem in dormitories caused girls to close up their rooms rather than leave their doors open to meet friends, she said.

Another Greek attributed the lack of community in dormitories to "a feeling that the machine put you in the dorm." More stability in a house than a dorm was a reason given by another girl. She noted the large turnover in dorm residents each year.

Closeness in sororities was seen as the result of "so much interaction in the house," according to another sorority member. It was noted that in a house everyone must work for its survival and is determined to make it work. In a dorm, Greeks claimed, everyone waits for it to work rather than working toward that end together.

Another question arose as to what the common goal of a sorority is. Most claimed that it was meeting new and more friends. Another girl added, however, that there may be no one common goal or sororities. In a house, sorority girls said, the feeling is not that "this is my friend," but "this is my house."

Others commented that no one has a great desire to join a house until they know the people in it.

One Greek who said that she had initially been anti-sorority, claimed she joined after going to a house and "finding that these people are really human."

The rush period was also discussed, with Greeks claiming that rushing is a two way thing in which rushees judge members just as members judge the rushees.

The emphasis lately, however has been toward the more informal rush periods according to Miss Fortine. "Rush parties," held during the formal rush period," are really fake," she said.

Greek members at debates said that sorority members are only "looking for good kids," during rush. "We don't say 'she's ugly,' she can't be in the house," added one Greek.

In Lewis House, one non-member commented that many people were turned off by the fact that a potential pledge is judged and made to feel that she is on display. The popular feeling was that if a pledge felt comfortable in a certain sorority, it was almost always mutual. Some difficulties in changing the rush structure have been met by obstinance from national chapters, said Miss Fortine.

The pledge period has changed some, with the main difference being a shorter pledge period, she said.

When the group at Coolidge was asked what the cons of a sorority are the response was "Is anybody completely satisfied with themselves?" Generally, there was a reluctance to express dissatisfactions with the system by the Greeks. One member noted bravely that the biggest con, perhaps, was the extra money involved in sorority membership.

A group of non-Greek girls in a Southwest dormitory, however, were quick to point out the disadvantages of a sorority.

In a dorm, said one girl, "I can act like I want...I don't have to put on a front for anybody."

Others echoed the feeling that sororities are rather superficial. "There's a big sisterhood thing but they would rip each other apart behind their backs," said one.

Competition with one another was seen as another fault in sororities by non-members.

Many said that they liked sorority members as individuals but not when they all got together.

Sororities were labeled as "an anachronism" by senior Johanna Rieser. "People have other forms of community," she said. "It's an elitist form of club which most people don't need in today's world."

Her thoughts were echoed by another senior, Martita Lopez. "I don't agree with their values," she said, noting that she believed high emphasis was placed on getting dates, drinking, and being sexy among sorority girls.

When asked if she thought sorority members were individuals she responded, "if they were individuals they wouldn't join one."

Other girls said they would not join a sorority simply because they are satisfied with their dormitory living. "I have plenty of friends here," one girl said.

This bad image of sororities was discussed at both the Lewis and Coolidge debates. At Lewis House, sorority members said that the "prejudices" were expressed mainly by people having little knowledge of the actual system they were "knocking."

In Coolidge, one Greek said that many people tended to judge a house by their dealings with one member of a house. If they did not like a member of a certain sorority, they tended to believe that all members of the house were like that.

A most often expressed opinion the system was that it is conducive to the formation of cliques. Greeks at Lewis said that people who are friendly with each other naturally go places together and share experiences together. A dorm, they claimed, is a clique, just as much as a sorority under this definition.

Despite the controversies, the sorority and fraternity system is here to stay, according to George Rodgers, manager of the fraternities and sororities on campus. Rodgers claims that the Greek system is as strong now as ever, sine it is "a community type of living which is very popular today."

SAM Examines New Relationships, Welcomes Women To Fraternity

Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity (SAM) has changed the traditional fraternity-sorority system somewhat by going co-ed this fall.

The addition of about fifteen female members into the formerly all male house was undertaken in "looking for a more realistic way of living," according to Ken Silverstein, in charge of SAM's pledge class. The traditional uni-sex Greek system may be obsolete, he added.

The switch to a co-ed house has been thought about by SAM brothers for about two years Silverstein said, but the final decision to go co-ed was not reached until it was thought that the climate of the University was appropriate.

The girls have been pledges for about 2 weeks now and so far SAM members seem very happy with the outcome.

Selecting the girls from among those who rushed was not a big problem. "All we want is for a girl or guy to have a sincere desire to help the house.." Silverstein said.

The danger that the more physically attractive girls might be the first selected was successfully overcome by SAM. The members realized that out of 20 girls their might by 10 they would rather date, but, said Silverstein, "we just came right out and said that physical attributes were no consideration." Dating between female and male members of the house has been discouraged but not prohibited in the SAM house, and no girls dating male SAM members joined, according to Silverstein.

There have been some minor differences now that girls have entered. One girls de-pledged because of parental resistance but that was not unexpected said Silverstein.

Various aspects of fraternity responsibilities such as financial obligations must be explained more explicitly to the female members. This, he said, is because parents often do not allow their daughters at this age as much independence as their sons.

The girls' house duties are among the least desirable right now. That situation, however, is due to the seniority system and will be allieviated with the introduction of the next pledge class, Silverstein says. "The pledges and brothers are asked to show mutual respect for one another in the house," he said.

The problem that fraternity-sorority exchanges might make some female SAM members feel left out was overcome by inviting male friends of house members to exchanges to even out the ratio.

None of the female members are living in the house and will not until sufficient space becomes available. There is a possibility that some girls may move into the house next fall, Silverstein said.

The University authorities will not step in until cohabitation takes place.

Bologna Summer Program To Offer Studies, Travels

Applications for the University's 1971 Summer School Program in Bologna, Italy, are now being accepted, according to Professor Roland Sarti, director of the program. All other things being equal, early applicants will be given special consideration and will be notified of their acceptance in the program well in advance of March 1, the deadline date for application.

The Bologna Program is the only one of the University's foreign summer school programs that is not geared specifically to a single discipline or to language study, although a course in elementary Italian will be offered for those students wishing to take it.

Other courses to be given next summer will be Renaissance Art, The Modern Italian Novel in Translation, History of Modern Italy, and Contemporary Italian Politics. Students are expected to choose two courses and thereby earn six offical credits.

The program has its headquarters in the Center of Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies. This building, which is thoroughly air-conditioned and one of the most modern in Bologna, is located in the heart of the University of Bologna compound and close to the center of the city.

All courses are taught in English, and classes are concentrated on a four day schedule between Monday and Thursday; weekends are thereby left free either for organized field trips to such major cultural centers as Rome, Venice, Florence, Mantua, and Siens, or for independent travel.

The combination of academic study and group travel is designed to provide the background for a better understanding of the subjects being studied and to introduce those students who are traveling abroad for the first time to the problems of living in a foreign country.

Exclusive of board, which the student must provide for himself, the cost of the Bologna Summer School session is $725. This amount includes air transportation to and from the United States, tuition, health and library fees, field trips in Italy, and room rent in Bologna. A non-refundable deposit of $50 is due upon notification of acceptance into the program.

This marks the program's sixth year. Its original format has remained substantially unchanged, although course offerings have varied from year to year. Students who have been enrolled in the program in past years have uniformly expressed their satisfaction in being located in Bologna rather than in more glamorous cities such as Rome, Florence, or Venice.

Bologna is a city that reveals both the traditional culture of Italy and its new economic dynamism. It is rich in monuments, world renowned for its superb cuisine, and proud of its industries. It is the site of the oldest University in Europe, one historically distinguished for its schools of law and medicine. In addition, it houses several excellent art and archeological museums as well as one of the finest theaters and opera houses in Italy. Bologna is also exceedingly well located; it is an hour by train to Ferrara, Florence, and Ravenna; two and a half hours to Venice and Milan; and five hours to Rome.

The summer school session in Italy extends from June 17 to August 9. Between the latter date and August 26, when the group returns to the United States, students are free to travel on their own. The seven and a half week stay in Bologna, said one student, made her particularly well prepared to cope with traveling about Europe after the close of the program.

Students interested in obtaining information about or in enrolling in the program should see Professor Sarti at their earliest convenience. His office is 611 Herter.

Television To Teach Reading

NEW YORK (AP) - Television, the medium some critics said would drive people away from books, is going to be used to teach school children to read.

A 30 minute reading show is under development by the Children's Television Workshop, creators of Sesame Street and will be shown at 11 a.m. on weekdays beginning next October 25.

"Our aim is not to persuade kids that reading will get them a better job or that books are their friends," said Samuel Y. Gibbon, CTW senior producer planning the show, "but to get them hooked on the show first.

"We want to construct the presentation in such a way that the child wants to read what's on the screen before it is read to him. Maybe it will be the punch line of a joke, or he reads it aloud before someone else in the room does."

YPSL To Present Kahn Speech On Workers

Tom Kahn will speak on the working class at 7:30 tonight in the Dukes Room of the Student Union.

Kahn, a Harvard graduate, is a member of the National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party and the Executive Secretary of the Socialist Party and the Executive Secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy. He has been active in the Civil rights and labor movements.

Kahn helped to organize the 1963 Civil Rights March on Washington. In 1968, he worked with the UAW to counter Wallace support in the union membership by writing pamphlets and working within union's educational facilities.

Kahn is a former member of the Citizen's Committee to Support the G.E. Workers which was organized during last years strike. Kahn's speech is sponsored by the Young People's Socialist League. All are welcome.

Ed. Meeting Open To All Undergrads

The School of Education's School Council meeting on Thursday November 12 will be open to all education undergraduates and other members of the School of Education community.

From 9:15 to 10 a.m., the meeting will be open for undergraduates to ask questions and offer opinions and suggestions to the School Council, the school's administration, and the Teacher Education Policy Committee. The meeting will be held in room 128 of the School of Education.

Yale Curator To Discuss Harlem, Black Culture

Arna Bontemps, curator of the James Weldon Johnson Memorial Collection f Negro Arts and Letters at Yale University, at an All-College Lecture at Mount Holyoke College on Thursday, November 12 at 8:00 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium, will discuss The Harlem Renaissance and Black Culture Today.

Mr. Bontemps is the author of a large number of books, plays and editions of poetry, the excellence of which has accorded him repeated recognition throughout his career. Among his best know works are God Sends Sunday, dramatized as "St. Louis Woman," Black Thunder (1936), a novel based on a slave revolt in Virginia in 1800, They Seek A City (1945), and, with W.C. Handy, Father of the Blues. In addition, Mr. Bontemps has collaborated with the eminent poet Langston Hughes on three books, among them, The Poetry of the Negro.

In the forefront of the literary movement, the Harlem Renaissance, in New York City during the 1920's, Mr. Bontemps' wide acquaintance with major writers has continued with the present generation of notable black artists. Mr. Bontemps was included in Who's Who in America as early as 1940.

Marxists To Give Labor Movement View

The Western Mass. branch of the YOUNG WORKERS LIBERATION LEAGUE will hold part one of a series of educationals entitled The Working Class tonight at 7 in rooms 811-815 of the campus center. This series is part of the continuing Marxist educationals sponsored by Y.W.L.L.

Part one will be concerned mainly with the NATIONAL RANK AND FILE CONFERENCE and the actions implemented by it will determine the role for the current and future Labor Movement within the United States.

The other parts of The Working Class educationals will deal with the Marxian analysis of classes within a capitalist society and the role of the working class as the basic revolutionary force to overthrow capitalism and establish a socialist society.

Prof. Buell Named Editor Of Marketing Handbook

Victor P. Buell, associate professor of marketing in the School of Business Administration at UMass is editor in chief of a comprehensive new book, Handbook of Modern Marketing.

The 1500-page volume, published by McGraw Hill recently, provides a complete illustrated description of every facet of marketing, offering the thinking and methods of more than 100 teachers, lawyers, industrial designers, marketing and management consultants.

Examined in detail by the various authors are the most recent advances in the field, including industrial design, financial analysis and control, legal questions, the social sciences, computers, operations research, mathematics and statistics, customer services and packaging. Special chapters are provided on marketing to the four major types of markets -- consumer, industrial, services, and government. In addition, an entire section is devoted to the new management sciences as applied to marketing.

Handbook of Modern Marketing is organized into 20 sections, with 120 chapters for easy reference, beginning with an overview of the modern concept of marketing.

Director of management programs at UMass, Buell has been involved for more than thirty years with every phase of marketing, from field salesman to head of marketing for a worldwide, billion-dollar-plus, diversified company. He was corporate vice president of American Standard, Inc., for six years and has served as national President of the American Marketing Association. A graduate of Pennsylvania State University, he is the author of Marketing Management in Action published in 1966, and numerous articles,papers and books dealing with various aspects of his field.

Three other members of the SBA faculty at UMass are contributors to the handbook. The chapter on Market Needs and Market Challenges, was written by Wendell R. Smith, Dean of the School of Business Administration, and Prof. Jack S. Wolf, chairman of the department of marketing. A section of Psychology in Consumer Marketing was contributed by Dr. M Venkatesan, associate professor of marketing at UMass.

Dr. Politella Receives Advisers Award

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of English at UMass received the Honor Roll of Advisers Award at the annual meeting of the National Council of College Publications Advisers (NCCPA) Saturday, Nov. 7, at the Leamington Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn.

Past president of the NCCPA, Dr. Politella is faculty advisor to Index. As an undergraduate here he served as editor of the Collegian as did his brother before him. He later received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Syracuse.

A former newspaperman, Dr. Politella has taught journalism at various universities and was employed as publicity relations representative for the Lockheed Aviation Company.

English Dept. To Present Frost Panel Discussion

The Department of English at UMass will present a Panel Discussion on the topic of "Robert Frost, the Poetry and the Biography" on Friday evening, November 13 at 8:00 p.m. in Herter Hall 227.

The main purpose of the discussion will be to explore some of the important problems in poetry and biography that have arisen with the publication last August of Professor Lawrance Thompson's biography of Robert Frost.

Mr. Thompson's interpretation of Frost, hailed by some critics but questioned rather seriously by others, has become the subject of a vigorous controversy in the literary and academic worlds. The members of the panel on Friday evening will include Professors Ellsworth Barnard, Frederick Ellert, Alex Page, and William O'Donnell of the University faculty. Professor Armour Craig of Amherst College, and Mr. Herbert Kenny, writer and book review editor of the Boston Globe.

The panel will attempt to evaluate the biography and assess its possible influence upon the reading and study of Frost's poetry during the years to come. The public is cordially invited to attend the panel discussion.

"Your Own Thing" To Open Tonight

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

William Shakespeare will receive a grilling from which he may never wish to recover as tonight in Bowker Auditorium the Operetta Guild presents its production of the delightfully, irreverant musical YOUR OWN THING.

Loosely adapted from TWELFTH NIGHT, the plot deals with the separation of look-a-like siblings who both come to a mythical kingdom (whose duke is John Lindsay and which strongly resembles New York). Here the girl, Viola, assumes the identity of a boy rock and roll singer and joins a group called the Apocalypse. Her brother Sebastian graviates into this same society, and here the confusion (and fun) begins as no one knows who is who.

The book makes liberal use of slides, tape, and film to give the production a multi-media effect.

Sprinkled throughout are such unexpected faces as John Wayne, Shirley Temple, and Humphrey Bogart adding encouragement or making indignant remarks on the situation.

The rock music accents the book to bring intended delight as it, with tongue-in-cheek, brings together a Shakespeare lyric with a pulsating rock beat. The drama critic of the NY Times Clive Barnes said " the work is as modern as today....the humor of the show is light-fingured and light-hearted, and its vitality and charm are terrific."

CHANGING ITS IMAGE—Sigma Alpha Mu has voted to include women in its fraternity, to become the first UMass Co-Ed Greek House. (MDC photo by David Bernstein).

Homecoming News

Traffic Sold Out

The Homecoming Committee today announced that tickets for Saturday night's concert are sold out. However, there are still some tickets left for both shows on Friday and for the play Peace Parade on Sunday afternoon. Tickets will be sold at the door as well as in the Student Union.

Also announced was the Ice Cream Smorgasbord which is to be held tonight in the Hatch. Also, the Campus Center extends an open invitation to "An Evening at the Top of the Campus" from 9 to midnight on the eleventh floor. Adding to evening festivities will be entertainment by D.J. Special prices on drinks will be offered along with hors d'oeuvres.

Sunday afternoon Peace Parade comes to the cage. The cast for this musical play consists of past and present members of the New York and Los Angeles productions of HAIR. They, individually and collectively, perform songs from HAIR in this communal production.

Finishing off this weekend will be a premiere showing of a prize-winning science fiction film THE GLADIATORS. Directed by Peter Watkins, best known for the powerful film THE WAR GAME, this film deals with a computer directed war game fought in 1993 between China and the West. The combat course contrived by the computer ranges bizarrely from machine gun ambushes to a crowd of sexy Swedish girls urging desertion. Safely viewed at a distance by the generals, the entire event is also televised around the world as a variety show sponsored by an Italian spaghetti company. Ultimately, the film develops into a strange combat between all the gladiator soldiers and the system they must serve.

Festival Seeks Student Films

University of Massachusetts student film makers are invited to enter their work in the first New England Student Film Festival to be held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 11, 12 and 13 December, 1970. Sponsored by the University Film Study Center to which this University belongs, the Festival is designed to provide an opportunity for students to show and discuss their films; screening and workshop sessions are scheduled. Entries must be submitted no later than Monday morning, November 30, 1970.

Screening sessions on Friday and Saturday evenings are open to the public, followed by workshop seminars on Sunday. The workshop sessions will be lead by Richard Leacock, Head of the M.I.T. Film Department, and other prominent documentary film makers.

Entries must have been completed since January, 1969, and must have been made by students associated with this University or UFSC member institutions. In addition, the Festival will include specially invited entries from film departments of Columbia University, New York University, San Francisco State College, Standford University, University of Southern California, University of California at Los Angeles, and two New York groups, Millenium and the Community Film Workshop.

For further information and entry forms, contact Dan Johnson, Bartlett 374, 545-0289 or Professor Richard Stromgren, Bartlett 379, 545-2131.

Collins Top Defender For Play Vs. Crusaders

New Hampshire quarterback Bob Hopkins, UMass linebacker Dennis Collins and Maine quarterback Ron Cote have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Hopkins, a 6'1 180-lb. junior, completed nine of 16 passes for 137 yards and two touchdowns and added a 22-yard run as UNH won its fifth straight with a 40-21 decision over Springfield College. It was Hopkins' second selection this Fall.

Collins, a 6' 190-lb. junior, turned in an outstanding effort as UMass stopped Holy Cross 29-13. Collins was involved in 18 tackles, helped trap the quarterback four times for 22 yards in losses and was instrumental in holding the Crusaders to 92 yards rushing.

Cote, a 5'8 170-lb. sophomore, was s substitute hero as Maine edged Vermont 28-21 with a come-from-behind win. Cote directed the Black Bears to three touchdowns and ran for 53 yards in the winning 63-yard TD march.

Other nominations: Offense flanker Keith Kraham (Connecticut), fullback Bob Marchildon (Maine), halfback Larry Bona (Vermont), fullback Dick Narcessian (Rhode Island) and split end Bob Cabrelli (UMass); Defense - tackle Jim Pisciottano (Connecticut), tackle Steve Naccara (Maine), tackle Nelson Cassavaugh (New Hampshire), safety John Pelcher (Vermont) and cornerback Bill McMullen (Rhode Island); Sophomores - halfback Brian Herosian (Connecticut), halfback Joe Allis (New Hampshire), linebacker Rich Rostowsky (Vemont), halfback Grant Denniston (Rhode Island) and linebacker Rich Cronin (UMass).

The UMass soccer team defeated the Coast Guard Academy yesterday, 5-1, to end one of the most successful seasons in recent years for the Redman booters. See page 16 for the complete details on the game.

Notices

SKI CANDIDATES-Candidates for the UMass ski team will meet in room 203 Holdsworth Hall today at 7 p.m.

FOOTBALL TICKETS-Football coupons are now in the process of being exchanged for football tickets for Saturday's upcoming game, UMass vs. New Hampshire. For those who still haven't traded in their coupons, they can do so at the athletic ticket office, room 155 Boyden. The office is open until 6 p.m.

SPORTS TALK-WMUA, the campus radio station at 91.1 FM, will have former Redman basketball and baseball star Ray Ellerbrook on its weekly Sports Talk show on Sunday (10 p.m. to 11 p.m.). Ellerbrook, one of UMass' best all-around athletes ever, will talk about his experiences with Redman athletics, including his present role as assistant freshman basketball coach to Peter Broaca. Questions for Ellerbrook will be welcomed at 5-2876 or 5-2425. Hosting the show will be Ken Horseman and Dave Melvin.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology relates to a variety of subjects, including food. The greatest authority I know on cooking combined with astrology is master chef Mike Roy. I authored a book with him, "Cooking With Astrology." It reversed procedures, being published first in paperback, then in hard-cover. Reviewers claim it is a handbook for any person who aspires to be a "starry-eyed chef."

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Full moon affects area of activity dominated by money, possesions. Fine for purchase of luxury item. But be practical about long-range commitments. Best to analyze. Be patient.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Lunar position emphasizes ability to know when to start and finish. Changes indicated in some relationships. Go with the tide. Don't attempt to own any person.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): What has been fermenting is ready to be viewed. Means new is time to display ware. Surround what you have with aura of glamor. Be aware of what occurs behind the scenes.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Good lunar aspect highlights friendships which can be meaningful. Emotions are intense. Nothing is apt to happen halfway. Don't play games with love. Mean what you say.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Review goals. You may have completed project without realizing it. Don't insist on remaining with dead issue. Look to future instead of brooding about what might have been.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Full moon position accents development of philosophy. Obtain hint from Leo message. Spread your emotional wings. Look and plan ahead. Have confidence in your ability to be original.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Concern with member of opposite sex could arouse jealousy. Key is mature approach. If you permit emotions to dominate, trouble is given open invitation. Act accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Don't attempt to begin projects. Instead, nurture and nourish what already has been planted. Marriage or business partner figures prominently. Maintain sense of humor. Don't force issues.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Full moon position accents health, basic requirements, medical checkups. Be meticulous about appointments, details. Carelessness now could be costly. Be specific — and on time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Young person announces plans. You may not be completely pleased. Key is to keep communication lines open. Find out reasons. Don't be satisfied to accept surface indications.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Practical judgments are emphasized. Be knowledgeable about leases, tenancy. Home circle becomes a prominent feature. Confession of a matter may create empty feeling. Think ahead.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Outside dispute which involves position is tentative. Prolonging argument is not constructive. See situation in light of reality. Refuse to be hocked into corner.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are versatile, at times you want to expand too quickly. Recently, you have been plagued by roadblocks. But signal to go is due — if ready real progress is on horizon.

NEW YORK (AP) - In the wild, unpredictable world of pro football, it should come as no great surprise that a man with half a foot and another 43 years old should share the honor of being the National Football League Offensive Player of the Week.

Selectors were unable Wednesday to choose between Tom Dempsey, who used a nub of a foot to kick a record 63 yard field goal for the New Orleans Saints, and George Blanda, the middle-aged backup quarterback of the Oakland Raiders who threw and kicked his team to a dramatic last minute victory.

So they settled for co-winners.

Dempsey, 23, born with half of his right foot gone and no right hand, booted the longest field goal in NFL history on the final play of Sunday's game for a 19-17 upset over the Detroit Lions.

BUENOS AIRES (AP) - The defending champion United States, with Lee Trovino and Dave Stockton, host country Argentina and winless England are favored in the 18th World Cup golf tournament which opens today.

The four day event among 43 countries hopefully will be played without interference from a 36 hour general strike in Argentina and certainly without Czechoslovakia, whose team failed to show, apparently for political reasons.

SANFRANCISCO (AP) - When Dick Nolan became head coach of the San Francisco 49ers in 1968, he told the team and the public that winning football games could become a habit.

It has taken a long time to form the habit, but this season it appears that some of Nolan's power of positive thinking approach has taken effect.

The team has a 6-1-1 record and is a full game on top of the Western Division of the National Football Conference.

Nolan finished his first year with a mediocre 7-6-1, and last season fell to 4-8-2, the San Franciscans' worst mark since the 14 game schedule was begun in 1961.

Dartmouth continues as a unanimous choice as New England's top college football power, with most of the other voting also remaining about the same as it has for the past few weeks.

Soccermen 'Storm' Over Coast Guard In Finale

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

NEW LONDON, CONN. - The UMass booters ended one of their finest seasons in many years by demolishing the Coast Guard Academy, 5-1 here yesterday. The game marked the fourth time the booters have scored five goals against an opponent this season.

For the first 18 minutes of the contest, played entirely in the rain with treacherous footing, there was no score, although the Redmen kept the ball in the Coast Guard end for long periods of time.

Inevitably the aggressive Redmen had to score. It was junior standout Lindo Alves who blew one by Cadet goalie Kelly Callison on a perfect feed from Abdu Thraya to ignite the explosion.

Three more UMass goals were on the board before half-time. Alves added another goal eight minutes later on an assist from Duane Brown and then Marc Cantor, again from Brown, booted home the third Redman goal. Thraya decided that he too would like to score and six minutes after Cantor's score, he boomed one by the beleaguered Callison to close the first half scoring with UMass out in front, 4-0.

The booters picked up right where they left off in the second half, and just over four minutes into the third period, Alves added his third goal, the first hat trick of his college career and the booters were up, 5-0.

Coast Guard did manage to score on a direct kick from the head of the penalty area, a shot which just slithered through goalie Bill Leary's hands.

SOCCER SUMMARY - There were several standouts for the Redmen. Alves, of course, but also Brown and Thraya, who each had a pair of assists. Tony Nunziante played an excellent game, continually feeding Alves with perfect passes. Rick Matusczak also played a solid game for the booters, closing out a fine college career. Marc Cantor ended up third in scoring for UMass with five goals, after an injury plagued pre-season. Dave Piccus, who has been coming off the bench all season to spark the Redmen, playedhis usual aggressive game and Gus Penon came close to scoring several times in his last varsity game. I Larry DeFelice and Dan Howle both closed out their careers last week against New Hampshire. The Redmen closed out the season in front of the smallest crowd they've performed for all year, but as usual the Redman fans out-numbered the home town group. In spite of the rain and the long ride, a spirited group of UMass fans showed up to cheer the Redmen on....Final mark for the Redmen is 7-2-2 with 32 goals for and 9 against....and of course the Yankee Conference Championship.

COMING THROUGH—Abdu Thraya prepares to cut between two UNH defenders in Saturday's win over the Wildcats. This type of footwork earned him a goal and an assist in yesterday's Redman win over the Coast Guard Academy. (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre)

Surging Wildcats Look To Redmen As Step Towards Title

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

In 1969, the UMass football team crushed the Wildcats of New Hampshire by the lopsided score of 48-7. One would wonder, then, why the 1970 Redman unit is more than a little apprehensive about the matchup between the two clubs Saturday at Alumni Field. The reason is simple. After all is said and done, it is quite possible that the Wildcats will be Yankee Conference Champs.

This season is a return to form for UNH coach Jim Root. The third year mentor is trying to reacquire the form that made his Wildcats co-champs in the Yankee Conference in 1968 and made him the American Football Coaches Association Coach of the Year. And thus far this season, he has been surprisingly successful.

For instance, UNH is the only YanCon team with a winning mark outside the conference. With a 5-2 overall record, the Wildcats have won five straight including victories over Maine, Vermont, Northeastern, Rhode Island and Springfield after dropping their first two to Delaware and Connecticut.

As it turns out, UNH can make up for that early season loss to UConn. With a win over the Redmen and a URI victory over UConn, the Wildcats will end up in a two-way tie for the conference championship with Rhode Island at 4-1.

The Wildcats

The Wildcats should give the Redman defense a workout as they boast the highest scoring team in the conference. The primary reason for this is Bob Hopkins.

The junior quarterback is currently the leading passer in the Yankee Conference with some impressive statistics. He has completed 55% of his passes for 979 yards. Although he has been intercepted 11 times, he has also tossed a league leading total of 13 touchdown passes. His passing should present the Redman secondary with a tough chore reminiscent of the battle they faced against Holy Cross' Clapton or UConn's Robustelli.

Like Clapton and Robustelli, Hopkins too has a fine receiver to direct his aerials at. He is senior wide receiver Chip Breault. Breault is only one reception away from the conference lead in that category with 29 to date and is averaging almost thirteen yards a grab. His four touchdown receptions place him second in that category.

The Wildcats balance off this exceptional passing attack with a consistent running game. The leading ground gainer is Roberson, who, incidently wasn't even listed in the varsity roster before the season. But he has come on strong and is presently sixth in the conference in rushing with 369 yards in 92 carries and an average of four yards a try.

One of the most impressive ballplayers on the 1970 Wildcats is captain Cliff MacDonald. The senior tackle was All-Conference offensive tackle as a sophomore and All-Conference defensive tackle as a junior. The UNH coaching staff rates him as one of the finest linemen in the country and he will likely go both ways against the Redmen on Saturday.

Defensively, the Wildcats have a record which is second in the conference only to UMass' outstanding unit. This too is a surprising statistic since they were hurt badly by graduation and Root was supposed to be rebuilding his defense this year. But thus far they have played exceptionally well.

With a well-balanced offense and a grudging defense, UNH has returned to Yankee Conference football prominence after a mediocre 1969 season. UMass should be prepared for a long and hard afternoon on Saturday as the Wildcats will have their sights on the Beanpot and their eyes on the scoreboard as they attempt to repeat their performance of 1968.

REDMAN RANTINGS—In the series, UMass leads 18-10-3. The last time the Wildcats won was in 1968 when they downed the Redmen 16-0. Game time is at 1 p.m.

Harriers Host UNH In Dual Wind-Up

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

The UMass cross country team wraps up its dual meet schedule for the season this afternoon with a home meet against the Wildcat from the University of New Hampshire. A freshman race will lead off the program at 3, with the varsity to follow at 3:30. Both races will be getting underway behind the Women's Physical Education Building.

The Redmen will be missing the services of seniors Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, and Leo Duart for this race. All three ran extremely hard races at the New Englands on Monday and coach Ken O'Brien wants to have them well rested for the IC4A's this coming Monday.

Sophomores Tom Swain, Tom Jasmin, and Rick Barry will supply the front running punch for UMass in this race. All three ran in the New Englands and after a couple of days of rest should be ready to give it a go this afternoon.

Arnie Morse

With the absence of Wayne, Paulson, and Duart, coach O'Brien will be looking for Rich Tashjian, Don Dunsky, Bruce Blackburn and Arnie Morse to give the Redmen depth in positions four, five, six and seven. Last Wednesday against Central Connecticut these four runners were counted on to do the same job and they did it so effectively that not a single Central runner was able to break into the first seven Redman finishers.

This race is in a very odd position on the schedule. It comes between the New Englands and the IC4A's and it means just about nothing as far as the entire season is concerned. The Redmen have already shutout the Wildcats at the Conference championship and O'Brien will just be looking for his harriers to run a good race, come out on top, and be ready to go on Monday at the IC4A's.

In the freshman race the UMass frosh should have no problem with the Wildcat freshmen. After Monday's escapade at the New Englands the Redmen should be pretty enthusiastic about this afternoon's race. This will be their final tune-up before the IC4A's and with vengeance in their eyes it should be a convincing tune-up at the expense of the Wildcats.

Meeting Prompts Spring Learning Expansion

By JAMES H. GOLDMAN
Staff Reporter

Three female undergraduates last evening, presented an off-campus independen' study proposal for the coming semester. Before 40 undergraduate and graduate student, the students described the program as an "expansion of the learning experience to include freer interchange of facts, feeling, ideas, and opinion."

A dissatisfaction with the traditional learning process prompted Cynthia Brossman, Donna Hines, and Gail Needham to develop the program. The program will include the commitment of 12-15 students to live together in an "isolated" environment to pursue and share academic and cultural experiences.

The academic structure will consist of two or three independent study projects on previous selected topics and their subsequent presentation to the group and the sponsoring professors. Six to nine credits will be earned in this fashion. Addition credits will be given by the Educational and Psychology Departments to the students, for their experience in group dynamics. Also documentation in the forms of journals and films of these experiences will provide credits.

Acceptance into the program will be determined by a committee of students and faculty. Donna Hines stated, "the willingness to commit oneself to sharing will be a primary requirement for acceptance."

Before entering the program, students will have to arrange projects with sponsoring professors. Reading lists and other aids will be provided to the students. Frequent correspondence between professors and students is expected. The professors will be encouraged to visit the program and to participate in its seminars.

The tentative location of the program is on Nantucket Island. The relative isolation from the University is termed as a means to stimulate personal growth. In the proposal, the coeds termed the "accessibility to structured resources for entertainment as an inhibiting factor to personal development."

Presently a graduate student, experienced in group dynamics, is being sought to live with the gourp and oversee possible confrontations. However, the administration of the group's activities will solely depend on the students.

The group will be self-supporting. No University funds will be available to the program. The cost of room, board and incidentals is approximately $500.

Though the program is off-campus, it will be under the auspices of the University. Credits will be applicable to graduation.

Interested students are urged to contact Cynthia Brossman, Donna Hines, or Gail Needham in the near future.

Job Filled In Law Dept.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Robert C. Mardian, chosen by President Nixon to be the government's top subversive hunter, was sworn in Thursday as head of the Justice Department's Internal Security Division.

Justice Department sources say the division, which has steadily diminished in size and importance since its high point in the mid 50's, will be beefed up to cope with what some government officials see as an increasing threat from terrorist groups.

A former general counsel of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Mardian has most recently served as executive director of the Cabinet Committee on Education.

In his new post he will be an assistant attorney general. His appointment and swearing in while Congress is in recess means he still must be confirmed by the Senate before he can hold the job permanently.

Post-Election Analysis Shows Erosion Of GOP Base

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

The Republican Party will not win in 1972 unless the economic situation in the country is changed substantially. Such was the analysis offered by David Hayhew of Yale University at the last of the Government Department sponsored Elections '70 series, held last night.

Regional differences especially in the South and Pacific Northwest indicate that there is a trend toward an increasing softness to the Republican voting base which is likely to continue unless significant changes take place. In the South especially, where there is "always some alienation of white Southeners by any President," Mayhew noted that Nixon's desegregation of schools in the Deep South contributed to the slight Republican loss in that portion of the country.

Mayhew also stated that the higher proportion of liberal Democrats elected to the House could prove important in January leadership elections. "the higher proportion of liberal Democrats could push the Majority and Whip leadership to the liberals. If this occurs the Republicans may never win control of the House again."

In commenting upon the upset of traditional labor voting patterns in New York, he pointed out that this could possibly mean a trend toward blue-collar support of Republicans but that it might not be a significant trend.

Mayhew also stated that Peace candidates and peace political activists were a significant factor in the elections, particularly the primaries because of the increase in voter turnout which they prompted.

Mayhew also stated that Democrats in Congress will not do anything to influence the Vietnam issue within the next two years unless there is a highly significant administration move in that area. "Nixon may end the draft before the 172 election but it will take a dramatic move such as total withdrawal to insure him the election."

Mayhew, a former member of the UMass faculty, has written many articles and books concerning the American political system among them his best known work "Party Loyalty Among Congressman".

In response to a question concerning the impact of television upon the results of the election, he stated that it is no longer true that "money wins elections." Proper television exposure even when it is not extensive can often influence election outcomes. He also stated that there is an increase in packaging candidates" which has led to widespread huckstering of candidates by public relations specialists. "There is no true way to insure victory and the specialists know it. They try to sell candidates campaign plans which they themselves are not sure will be successful."

Public Health Speaker Focuses On Sex Education

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

"Issues of the 70's," a professional day for home economists held in the Campus Center Tuesday, opened its day-long activities with a talk on "Contemporary Issues in Human Sexuality and Sex Education" given by Dr. William Darity, Professor in the UMass' Public Health Department. Co-sponsored by the UMass' School of Home Economics and the Western Massachusetts Home Economics Association, the day drew 300 participants, one third of whom were students.

Dr. Darity began his speech by assuming "this is an enlightened group.....I hope the dissenters (of the subject) are few and far between.....the issue should be how rather than whether or not it should be."

The lecture touched upon many facets of sex education, among them statistics on general attitudes, the role of various institutions (family, schools) and how far certain professions have progressed in their outlook on the topic.

"One aspect of sex education is to interpret the role models within the family," said Darity. He contends that it should be as easy for a father to talk to his daughter about sex and a mother to her son as the same sexes talking to each other.

The family cannot be isolated from the rest of the community since within the latter a young person is faced with conflicts, divided interests, and the influence of peer groups.

The role of the school should be to fuse together concepts in order to achieve a total approach to human sexuality, he added.

Dr. Darity views the separation of sexes during instruction to be harmful at all age levels.

Citing the progress certain professions have made in furthering sex education, the speaker named the medical profession, especially nursing, as one of the most conservative in their views.

Public Health follows closely behind medicine in its views, with social work limited in its scope, but anticipating rapid changes.

The field of theology takes a negative approach and teacher preparation on the subject is found to be too "feminine-oriented."

A board member on the Sex Information and Education Council of the US (SIECUS), Dr. Darity praised that organization's perserverance in the promotion of communiy and adult training in sex education.

He drew lengthy applause when he ended with, "The time is now for us to recognize that issues are issues.... the question is not can you, but will you?"

* * * * * *

A four-member "reactor panel" ----Dr. Christopher Mamonas, M.D., Dr. Warren Schumacher, Professor of Child Development at the University of Connecticut, Mr. Noah Edminster, Principal of Mahar Regional Junior and Senior High School, with Dr. Christine Hillman, Asst. Dean of the UMass' School of Home Economics, moderating----commented on the subject immediately after the lecture.

Dr. Schumacher stressed the need to "respect diversity." A parent, he feels, should teach his children sexual attitudes relevant to himself, at the same time accepting sexual patterns relevant to others.

Also he noted the different steps necessary in the development of sexuality. He questioned whether people are willing to accept experimentation as one of these steps.

"Emotionalism and spiritualism" were pointed out by Principal Edminster as the main aspect of sexuality that young people have little knowledge about.

* * * * * *

The participants spent the afternoon in discussion-workshops on a variety of subjects: cities of the future, consumerism in the 70's (influence of legislation, unit pricing, etc.), abortion and contraceptives, the re-evaluation of women's role in society as viewed by the Women's Liberation Movement, and the importance of the pre-school years in the total development of the individual.

Back To The Garden
Schuckmann Speaks For C.E.Q.

By ELAINE JOHNSON
Staff Reporter

Lets get back to our environment! This is what Skip Schuckmann, a member of the Coalition of Environmental Quality, which has a chapter here on campus, advocated for the country, when he spoke to a small group of students last night in the Campus Center.

"The way to start bringing the country back to it's environment is to start with your own life," he advocates. Skip says that he's just bought a twelve acre lot, on which he plans to raise ducks, geese, bees, and grow an orchard. He explained that all of these things "compliment each other" and that he will perpetuate the land as he uses it.

Skip feels that people are threatened because they constantly surround themselves with commercial comforts to escape nature.

"People must feel comfortable in their environment before they can work with it," he explained. "If most people were given one acre of land and a farmhouse of some sort to live with, they would feel that they couldn't survive. And they probably couldn't.

Skip would like to start small workshops of people who are interested in environmental living.

One of his pet ideas for a project would be to get interested people started in organic gardening. He also has aspirations to working with woodcarving or any pet project that someone may have. He is interested in any pland that a person may have that relates to getting involved with the environment.

This is the major purpose of the C.E.Q. group on campus. They support the "pet" projects of interested people and groups. Their office, which is set up in the R.S.O. Student Activity Center and headed by Quint Dawson, will give support to projects which seem plausable.

Fac-Sen To Probe Calland Dismissal

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Last night the Faculty Senate decided to appoint a board to investigate the Callands' discharge from WFCR, gave the Chairman of an Academic Affairs Committee permission to appoint whom he pleased to his own committee, and amended its own bylaws.

Fred and Diane Calland, who have been discharged under controversial circumstances from the five-college radio station, had a statement read to the Senate which asked the Senate to investigate the matter.

In the statement they said that they had acted with integrity while working for WFCR, and have nothing to hide. While they hope to be rehired, they said, they desire to at least dispel rumors which they feel have been threatening their professional reputation.

The Senate felt that this was an appropriate matter for their concern, since UMass is the major contributor to WFCR. Professors Barnard and Silver were persistent in keeping the matter before the Senate. When the discussion turned up no real alternative to an action by the Senate, the Senate endorsed the appointment of an investigation board.

Mr. Plumstead, Chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee and a non-Senator, spoke of the lack of success of the Senate's ad hoc committee for course review. For instance, in reviewing a proposal to form a Ph.D. program in the Speech Department, the committee had mainly revealed its own ignorance of the matter discussed, Mr. Plumstead noted.

Through the Senate Secretary, Micheline Dufau, Mr. Plumstead had a motion proposed to allow him to appoint to his own committee the number and type of people he felt he needed for each situation reviewed; this passed.

The Senate spent most of the rest of the meeting amending its own bylaws. The amendments were voted on rapidly, and the presiding officer, Professor Bruce Morris, joked that "Any time we get a new constitution it will be amended next week, anyway." A number of Senators having left, those remaining agreed to adjourn the meeting.

Parisians Mourn De Gaulle In Arch of Triumph March

PARIS (AP) - Charles deGaulle was buried in a village churchyard Thursday, and later hundreds of thousands of Frenchmen, in a great outpouring of grief, marched through darkness and rain to the Arch of Triumph.

The day of requiem was in three stages. First 100 world leaders gathered at Notre Dame Cathedral to hear Mass. Four hours later the funeral itself began at Colombey les Deux Eglises, 160 miles away. Then, after nightfall, came the flood of emotion of Parisians drawn as if by command into a march along the Champs Elysees ending at the nation's cherished shrine of liberty.

The broad Champs Elysees was a solid mass of humanity and a forest of umbrellas from the Rond Point to the Etoile. From the first row of flags to the last stragglers, the march took an hour.

There were estimates that the crowd reached nearly a half million, but no one found a way to measure its feelings.

This was something Gen. deGaulle had not planned when he laid down restrictions for his own funeral.

At the graveside were only his family and an escort of men whose loyalty never faulted from the time in 1940 when he appealed for resistance to the German conquest.

All around, filling the lanes of the village, were tens of thousands of Frenchmen-hungry, cold, but patient as they waited to file past the grave.

Nixon, NEA Clash On Desegregation

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration and the National Education Association took sharply divergent views Thursday as to the progress of school desegregation in the South.

One high administration official said school desegregation in the South is sufficiently complete to shift government enforcement officers from that area to the North.

But the NEA said a task force study of 70 school districts in Mississippi and Louisiana "cast serious doubt on the supposed progress made in deep South school desegregation in the past year."

"The bad news of desegregation in the two states studied tragically outweights the good," the NEA said.

What is happening in Louisiana and Mississippi "is not integration; rather, it is disintegration-the near total disintegration of black authority in every area of the system of public education," the NEA reported.

The high Nixon administration official, who withheld the use of his name but who is closely associated with civil rights enforcement, said the administration will place increasing reliance on Southern school officials to combat classroom bias.

"Just as had been predicted, most Southern school administrators in fact want to fultill the law," he told a group of news men at a background briefing.

His comments came in the face of charges by civil rights groups that President Nixon does not intend to press the issue of in school discrimination in the South.

These charges were prompted by reports that some Southern schools continue to discriminate against black pupils and teachers.

Westfield Strike Slows Down As Students Take Mid-Terms

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) - There was only scattered support for the second day of a student strike at Westfield State College Thursday morning as most students chose not to jeopardize their academic standing by missing mid-term exams.

But following the morning exams, the number of pickets in front of the administration building rose to several hundred, and strike leaders predicted that before the day ended, about half the college's 2,100 students would join the strike as they did Tuesday.

The student dispute with college President Leonard Savignane remained at an impasse. The Faculty Senate scheduled a meeting for 3:30 p.m. with dissident students who were to present their case.

At issue is what students claim is a lack of communication with the college administration, specifically Dr. Savignane, whose time as president of the predominantly women's college since 1961 has been marked repeatedly by disputes with students.

to a student sit in on his front lawn.

This week's strike was sparked by a campus beer party last term. Students say that of the 500 who took part, only two, Stephen Pappas and William Reardon, were singled out for disciplinary probation. Students charge that only Pappas has been penalized by not being allowed to practice teach. Other issues include demands for the relaxation of parietal rules and off campus living regulations, and more student representation on the college policy making cabinet.

Dr. Savignane said earlier this week, "when the students at Westfield State begin to act as adults, then we can sit down."

But a strike spokesman, senior Chico Libremenco of New Bedford, said "We've tried to go through all the regular channels, but we always meet stalling tactics."

The only breakthrough in student administration negotiations this year has been the announcement the campus newspaper would be allowed to resume publication.

Sex Discrimination Charged In Draft Appeal

BOSTON (AP)-"The classification of women as unfit for military service is without reason and unconstitutional," says a lawyer who is challenging the constitutionality of the 1967 Selective Service Act on behalf of four defendants.

Harvey Silvergate, representing four men charged with failing to report for induction, said he has filed motions to dismiss the indictments on grounds of sex discrimination.

The four cases are separate and are before different judges.

In the case of Jerome M. Garchik, 26, of Cambridge, a student at Harvard Law School, be fore Judge W. Arthur W. Garrity, the defense contends that had "women been subject to conscription at the time when the defendant's Selective Service local board issued him an order to report for induction, his position in the order of call might have been such that he would not have been ordered for induction at any time."

"Freedom Of Speech Means Freedom to Strip"

WASHINGTON (AP) - Eight persons who were fined $200 a piece for staging a naked demonstration against commercialized sex are seeking a Supreme Court ruling that it is not unlawfully lewd to be publicly nude.

Freedom of speech means freedom to strip, they contend.

The five women and three men, disrobed before about 80 people at a sex education lecture Feb. 5, 1969. They protested the presence of Brice Draber, a representative of Playboy Magazine there to discuss the "Playboy philosophy."

They shucked their garments, according to their appeal, "in order to display the depth of their opposition and to demonstrate they were not opposed to nudity, but to the commercial exploitation of the human body and sexual relationships ..."

The Grinnel 8 were convicted of violating an Iowa law against indecent exposure. They were fined the maximum $200 each.

Law Firms Granted Tax Exempt Status

WASHINGTON AP - The Internal Revenue Service granted a tax exempt status Thursday to a wide array of law firms representing the public in such fields as consumer protection and the environment.

Under guidelines spelled out by IRS Commissioner Randolph W. Threwer, such firms must be charitable in nature, have the broad public interest at heart, and refrain from political activity.

In giving public interest law firms an exempt status the IRS sought to head off a growing controversy and take the steam out of a probe set to start Monday by a Senate subcommittee.

The IRS decision ruled out tax exemptions for organizations engaging in lobbying to any substantial degree. It remained unclear whether the ruling would apply to organizations trying to represent the public before Congress-such as those sponsored by consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

Normally charitable exemptions apply to minority oriented groups, Thrower said.

The IRS touched off the controversy Oct. 9 when it announced it was withholding tax exemption rulings for such firms pending a 60 day study.

Peace Corps Turn Ten, Needs College Grads

As the Peace Corps celebrates its 10th birthday, a survey reveals that since its inception 84 volunteers from UMass have completed service overseas. In addition, there are 50 recent graduates of UMass now helping the people of 60 nations where Peace Corps is programmed.

Rumors that the Peace Corps faced extinction in 1970, due mainly to a misinterpretation of Peace Corps "New Direction" has proved false. The agency's college recruiting efforts nearly floundered when "the unfortunate misconception had Peace Corps abandoning the campus in favor of skilled workers, mid career professionals, and highly-trained technicians" according to John Pincetich, Northeast Regional Director.

"Peace Corps will continue to view the academically trained volunteer as its backbone," he said. "The success we have enjoyed over the past ten years would not have been possible without the dedication of thousands of college graduates who have served and will continue to serve.....in foreign nations."

Northeast Regional Office for Peace Corp reported that the target for skilled labor amounts to only 25% of the total.

Pincetich said that the talent search is widening because host countries are requesting specific skills. By offering more intensive training, and especially skill training, to the young college graduate Peace Corps hopes to make programs more effectual, he added.

Off campus, Peace Corps New Directions needs include hand skills, professional businessmen, experienced teachers and farmers, city planners, and architects. These skills will fill 25% of the overseas volunteer ranks - the remaining 75% must come from the campus community, according to the office.

"The earlier image of the grass-hutted, latrine-digging volunteer doing his own thing has vanished from the scene, said Pincetich. "Program structuring and intensive skill training is making for a more effective volunteer - less frustrated volunteer."

Peace Corps representatives will be on campus on November 17, 18, 19, & 20. For information students can write the Peace Corps at 408 Atlantic Ave., Boston Mass. or contact the Peace Corps liaison on campus, Mr. Robert Morrissey at the Placement Office.

TV Target of Non-Violence Action

WASHINGTON (AP) - Accusing the Federal Communications Commission and the networks of dragging their feet, a private foundation launched a court fight Thursday to bar from TV before 9 p.m. programs that depict violence.

A 146 page brief field in U.S. District Court by the Foundation to Improve Television seeks to prove that such programs "harm the mental health and well being" of young children and that such injury is irreparable.

The foundation, formed two years ago, is using as a test case an effort to halt reruns of "Wild Wild West" in late afternoons six days a week over Washington station WTOP.

It described the program as one based on the exploits of two fictional undercover agents who in each episode "encounter new adventures which feature acts of fictionalized violence and brutality."

The court action was taken on behalf of three suburban area mothers here, Mary Elizabeth Maguire, Genevieve P. Connell and Margaret M. Graham.

Defendants listed include Post Newsweek Stations Capital Area, Inc., the FCC, CBS, Television Advertising Representatives Inc., the Pillbury Co. and Royal Crown Cola Co.

William S. Abbott, a Boston attorney who is president of the foundation, told a news conference Washington was chosen to launch the court fight "because it is the national capital." He said if this case is won it will be used as a precedent for suits in other cities.

LOLLIPOP Encourages Diverse Approach To Arts

For the past month, students have participated in a new project at the Mark's Meadow Elementary School on the UMass campus.

These students are not products of UMass, but are in a sense part of the college community. They are the happy youngsters you hear on the far end of campus around 2:30 Monday through Friday, and their ages range from 5 to 10.

What are they happy about?

One reason might be the experimental art program called LOLLIPOP which has presented as art projects: games to play, shadows and lights, flags and streamers, toys and musical instruments, projectors and film, recorders and sound, singing and dancing, and pictures on the walls.

The Friday afternoon events were created by Larry Frates of the Center for the Study of Aesthetics in Education located at the School of Education.

"Art begins around us - in the discards, the parties, the rooms, the sidewalks, and the grocery store," said Frates. "And we're going to give these little people a chance to be happy, sharing, and revelling in their creations in the classroom."

The purpose of the program is to provide an expressive outlet for the children through the arts, he said. Developing a "one art" person seems to be disappearing from the educational scene; therefore, a multi-arts approach such as LOLLIPOP is probably the most practical approach to sensitizing children to their environment whether it be school, the home, or the playground, Frates added.

Operating such an event has been made easier through the establishment of a "Learning Fair" on Fridays in the afternoon where the children select the activities they want to attend at the elementary school.

All of the participants want to be there rather than have to be there. The types of experiences being offered allow for a wide range of solutions to a suggested area of investigation, also.

An example of this is the first day where the carnival was used as the theme. The children constructed a tent while a circus parade passed in review. It seemed like a celebration or as one child put it "a party for art."

The youngsters participating in Project LOLLIPOP meet after school daily at Marks Meadows Elementary School. The multi-arts approach provides an expressive outlet for the children and sensitizes them to their environment.

Children find that learning can be fun in the LOLLIPOP experimental art project initiated in the School of Education.

The program's originator said, "If learning can be fun then kids will want to learn, but until that time arrives we'll be working with children who are moody, selfish, and lonely.

"To expand on that statement he sees many of the educators in the New England area as falling into the same pattern of their students or rather the other way around. He does not exclude himself from that category completely either because he believes the children have taught him in LOLLIPOP that unless a teacher is willing to experiment through art himself then he will be imposing what he wants to learn on them.

The motto of the project is "If you don't get lost you may never be found," and LOLLIPOP is striving toward finding itself thanks to the enthusiasm of the Little people who smile.

Films

A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY TO THE FORUM. A funny and frantic musical about a slave's attempts at freedom. This production will play tonight through Monday at Flanagan Studio Theater at Smith.

ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDERSTERN ARE DEAD. Hamlet as seen through his two bewildered college chums in Tom Stoppard's award-winning absurd play being presented through Sunday at Kirby Theater at Amherst.

THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH. Thorton Wilder's Pulitzer-Prize winning satire concerning an old American family's exploits from the Ice Age through an Atlantic City Beauty Pageant showing just how far we've come.....At the Lab Theater Mount Holyoke College tonight through Sunday evenings at 8:15.

YOUR OWN THING (See review for information)

Music

HOMECOMING 1970
Rare Earth and Blues Image are billed for tonight's two cage concerts at 7 and 10. Tomorrow evening's diverse program featuring Buffy Sainte Marie, David Frye, and Traffic are both sold out. Remaining tickets for Sunday's play PEACE PARADE will be available at the Cage before the 2 p.m. performance.
Films heading

ANNA KARENINA and CAMILLE (Academy of Music)
Two films from the Thirties starring Greta Garbo. The former is a fine adaptation of Tolstoi's romantic novel and the latter is saved by Garbo.

Theater

THE BATTLE OF ALGIERS (Tuesday night, Hampshire College)
Winner of nine major film festivals awards, this film is a grim re-enactment of the bloody Algerian civil war.

CATCH -22 (Campus Cinema, Hadley)
Not quite John Wayne's view of World War II, but legitimate nonetheless as Alan Arkin drops bombs over Italy and goes not-so-quietly insane.

EASY RIDER
If you could possibly edit the number of times Dennis Hooper utters the word "man" in this film, you'd probably have a nice, ten-minute travelogue about the American Southwest.

THE GLADIATORS (Student Union, Sunday 7 and 9)
A premiere performance of a new film by Peter Watkins (THE WAR GAME) about a computerized war in the 1990's. The war replaces Ed Sullivan on the tube as entertainment and is presented by a spaghetti company, no less.

THE GRAPES OF WRATH (Mahar, tonight at 7 and 9:30)
John Ford's adaptation of Steinbeck's novel dealing with the migration of the Okies to California during the Thirties.

LITTLE FAUSS AND BIG HALSY (Showcase Cinema, W. Springfield)
Robert Redford and Michael J. Pollard have a Butch Cassidy -- Sundance Kid relationship in Hud's Southwest on Captain America bikes.

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS (Showcase Cinema, W. Springfield)
Episodes related to sex are dealt with not-so-tasteful results in this funny film with a fine cast headed by Gig Young and Anne Jackson.

MISTER FREEDOM (The Talkie, Northampton)
It's Mister Freedom off to France to sell freedom and consumer goods, and he here partakes in a battle of wits with Super-Frenchman and the Red China Dragon.

SOLDIER BLUE (Showcase Cinema, W. Springfield)
A new kind of American western. Candice Bergen stars as a foul-mouthed, 1870ish version of Woman's Lib.

THE VIRGIN AND THE GYPSY (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Franco Nero has a grand time getting off his horse and onto Joanna Shimkus in this graphic study of Earth Science adapted from a novella by D.H. Lawrence.

Z (Amherst Cinema)
Brilliantly executed study of political repression in Greece. A bit simple-minded, rather liberal, in politics but an extremely compelling film nonetheless.

Everyone's Own Thing

By DONALD GLICKSTEIN
Fine Arts Staff

It was there for two hours, two fleeting, temporal hours of existence, and then it ceased. The curtain came down and the audience filed out, masking their lack of empathy better than any actor.

It had been painful, and people had suffered through the long rehearsals, their feet leaded from that "one more time, please," their minds traveling to places far removed from the wooden planks of the stage, their eyes staring not into the empty seats of the auditorium, but into another pair of eyes that understood. The sweat, the parched voices, the other people, those people who you could never again love, the people who you bitched against and the people who you could talk with--all these had left you wondering after that final act, "Was it worth it all? Why did I do it? What is it that is in me that drives me?"

The best plays, the great plays, do not mirror reality; they are reality, they are not perfect. They show the pain and the ecstasy, the depression and the exultation, not of the unreal characters of the script, but of the actor himself who gives the audience a part of his hopes, his fears, his happinesses, and all that has happened to him.

Maybe Your Own Thing which premiered last night at Bowker Auditorium was a bit too pseudo-hip. Some of the scenes, especially the mob scenes, were non-contextual and discontinuous. But our society is itself, not smooth, and somehow, as the audience walked in to the hall amid the mob's thing-people, cymbal rolls, raggedly-ann dolls, beeps, snorts, grunts, dirty old men, and sailors, one knew that the roughness of Your Own Thing was to be complementary, rather than contrasting.

Your Own Thing is a funny play. Its classic comedy paradigm updated to our times does not detract from the play, and indeed, some of the scenes, notably the final chase scene with the wild arm-running of Olivia (Patricia Miller), the bewilderment of the two Charlies (Sandy Donatini and Stephen Driscoll), and the horny, frustrated Orson (Clark Shattuck), are among the best that I have ever seen on this campus.

The songs of the show, especially the solo numbers, are universal; they can stand without the script. At times, one wished the band had played softer, and the singers had been looser, but still, the humanness of the play overrode its faults.

Your Own Thing will continue through Sunday. Tickets, on sale today at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, and at Bowker one hour before the performance, are worth the price ($1.00).

The memories of Your Own Thing last longer than the weekend thoughts of a Homecoming concert. For in Your Own Thing, there is a little bit of everyone's own thing.

"Remember, They Laughed At Icarus Too"

What is the sense of ripping off each other? On Tuesday night, November 10, my knapsack full of books was taken off the front seat of a parked car near Webster dorm. All of these books are important to me, some of them aren't even mine. Besides being crippled academically for the moment, I just don't have the money to buy new books. Think of how meaningless the whole thing is. It's a real drag not to be able to trust each other. Would whoever took the books, please get it together and return them. No questions, I just want them back. Dick Mulvey, 623 Main St. Amherst, 253-5761.

To Whom It Does Concern
Do you believe me when I say/you're beautiful
I stand here and look at you out of the vision of my eyes and into the vision of your eyes and I see you and you're an animal and I see you and you're divine and I see you and you're a divine animal and you're beautiful the divine is not separate from the beast; it is the total creature that transcends itself
the messiah that has been invoked is already here you are that messiah waiting to be born again into awareness you are beautiful; we are all beautiful you are divine; we are all divine divinity becomes apparent on its own recognition

The Pride of DeGaulle

Like most other Western politicians, he had those great dreams and he did think of his own importance a bit too much at times. But Charles deGaulle had that unmistakable quality so visibly absent from American politicians today, he had class.

Of course, the fact that he was a legitimate national hero did help him. All he did was lead the French in that Holy War of the 1940's, establish a workable government in 1948, keep that government solvent in 1958, and lead his nation through the "post-war recovery" period and into its new existance in the 1960's.

For much of this time, deGaulle was France. He did turn his back on old allies to boost France internationally, but this is well within the moral code of international politics. What is more important is that under his leadership, his nation made remarkable economic progress and even managed to wind itself up into a national spirit, a national direction.

Perhaps the most appealing thing about this strong and noble man was his honesty. He said in 1969 that if his people voted against his plan for a new national Senate he would resign because his people would have lost confidence in his ability to lead. He lost the election and he resigned immediately.

If anything, this unusual example of public and private honesty would disqualify the General from any kind of job in the Nixon Administration today.

It is uncanny to think of a national leader telling his people that he will resign if he loses an election. President Nixon did not do this last week when he predicted a huge G.O.P. triumph and wound up with only a half-hearted rejection of his campaign rhetoric.

But there are more differences between the former President of France and Nixon. For one thing, deGaulle had a way of communicating with his people that Nixon lacks.

Regardless of whether they loved him or hated him, Frenchmen believed Charles deGaulle when he said something and they respected him. He was their leader, and the people of France knew that it was their interest for which he was working.

In America today, White House rhetoric is discounted by millions of Americans, the President is thought of as a master politician willing to sacrifice just about anything in order to win elections. If there is one thing which millions of Americans don't hold their President in high respect.

The difference between Nixon and deGaulle is the fundamental difference in their character. DeGaulle was a proud man with a deep commitment to his fellow countryman. Nixon is just as proud, but his great motivation is centered on perpetuating his own name. Compared to deGaulle, Nixon is a shallow, crass and unfeeling man.

Transferred Desires

In a speech last night before a capacity crowd of three in the number two Coolidge elevator, Dr. Nathan Barf expressed the fear that defective cigarette machines might cause psychological problems due to sexual repression.

"I am afraid that defective cigarette machines might cause psychological problems due to sexual repression," he expressed.

He went on to explain that this phenomenon was a factor in his transferred desires theory.

"This phenomenon is a factor in my transferred desires theory," he explained.

The reasoning behind this theory is based on the similarities between the act of buying a pack of cigarettes and the act of "picking up" a member of the opposite sex (usually human). The concept of "transferred desires" comes into the picture when a person buys a pack of cigarettes as a substitute for another person.

The subject wishing to purchase cigarettes as a substitute for another person.

The subject wishing to purchase cigarettes first puts money into the machine (much as he or she puts money into his/her image-building accessories, such as clothes).

Now the subject makes his selection of cigarette brands (people) and pulls the lever, or pushes the button (or delivers his line).

The first problem may arise at this point. If his favorite brand is sold out (his favorite person taken), the subject may become aggressive in one fashion or another. At this point, however, he may decide on another brand (or person), and convince himself that this is what he wanted in the first place. In this way he is satisfied, and he continues on his merry, if ignorant, way.

However, this may not always happen. Dr. Barf continued: "If the machine is broken, and the subject can get nothing, he or she must channel his or her impulses into another area. This is often done with harmful results."

Dr. Barf cited a number of cases in which these "harmful results" were shown. In the case of the cigarette machine, the immediate result was often to kick the machine violently. (In the case of the "pick up", the subject often "kicked" the system of "picking up", rejecting it in favor of other means of obtaining his cigarettes.)

"Long-range psychological damage may include a reversion to infantilism," continued Dr. Barf. "The subject may indulge in 'flick-giving' or 'flick-watching', or participate in panty raids," he said. One case was cited by the doctor in which the subject climbed a tree and shouted obscenities at passing schoolchildren.

When asked whether he had any solutions to the problem, Dr. Barf suggested a crack team of vending-machine repairmen to be on emergency 24-hour call. This would alleviate the problem of frustration by defective cigarette machines, in his opinion.

Dr. Barf had no suggestions for solving the problem of the unsuccessful "pick up".

To the Editor:

In Mr. Tackeff's letter of November 12, he stated a concept of individual rights which included the possession of property as a natural right which can only be violated by the use of physical force. If this is so, then his arguement backfires because he is viewing it from only one side. I argue that capitalism promotes the exploitation of the weak by the strong. I further argue that there is no natural right and because we do live in society we must work together for a general good. There is no conflict between socialism and constitutional systems. Mr. Tackeff seems to be taking a moralistic view which leads to extremism. There is no wholly good or bad, right or wrong way in politics. Let's approach it realistically. Let's take everyone and not just the rich (whether good or bad), to mind in decision making. Love and trust your brother even though he did not inherit money, or brains, or opportunity, etc.

Peace,

To the Editor:

I'm the victim of mistaken identity--the identity being that of a purple 10-speed English racing bicycle! Apparently someone had a similar bike stolen a while back. These owners have claimed my bike as theirs and have "stolen" it back. It was taken from the bike rack outside of Emerson on Tuesday, Nov. 10, and the following note was left in its place:

"We have stolen our bike back. We could have had you arrested but we aren't that type. We would like to have the parts that you removed back. Just have someone drop them off on the porch where you got it. Pax."

Please! Whoever took the bike, if you have any sense of honesty will you contact me? It was lent to me by a friend from Lowell and I have to return it. I think if you look it over closely you'll realize that you have the wrong bicycle. When you do, please call me so we can at least talk it over.

Suddenly The Anger Stops

We have gathered here today to lay down and take rest from our hold task and to consider that our children are not bad but Siok
And so the anger blanches out of necks massaged by words rolling from the tongue of the Fact-Healer:
It is a Fact that our children have not God that both "acid" and "reck" are the refuge of despair that the "revolution" is a phase
and that (holy of holies)
increasing employment will create order
The parents lie on chemically dusted grasses easing slowly into sympathy needing the Words loving the softness and the sadness of this voice which lifts their crosses.
To explain is to understand
And a Fact in time saves minds from the rage in response to uncertainty.
Lovers of passivity
they passively heal
And slowly the anger ebbs to tears rivulets for a generation of renegades tears of pity (and, yes, love) for the prodigal son who stands in the bushes long hair curling under flaming eyes
And his eyes swell with anger as he gathers a tribe,
a nation of yearners who stand erect under eresses of night-sticks who sing
a rain of vibrant chaos in the name of freedom a pain of tearing in the name of growing:
It is an article of faith that to be born is to die that to kill the mother is to free the son
and that (with muscles throbbing) revolution - like a star-is birthing.

The Ultimate Lesson

i

Swirling dust fills my eyes tormenting the human element;
but as life's reflections
echo the energy of our pain into salvation for all so too will the womb of time
encircle her children, kissing their cool cheeks
with the warm winds of existence.
As the flower unfolds its beauty,
Nature calls forth her constituants to disclose her deep secrets of infinity and immortality.
They listen and are forewarned of man's heavy footsteps which crush the ground, uproot the daisies,
ferment the wings of paradise and upset nature's virginity.
Too soon man will learn:
For time is relative
And man is quite mortal.

ii

Hand outstreched, he strode forward smashing his blood-stained fist against the realities of time-
The ever moving walls of time whose fiery tail
burns the meteor in front,
Consumes each particle of matter in a vortex of inexaustible energy.
The hand of man whose limited manipulative powers sought to outbalance Nature's own, has found its way through the shattered glass.
Nevermore.
And the hand retreats
marveling at its destruction--
But the pain tells no lie.
The shattered glass strewn about awaits reconstruction
Only to be obliterated again and again.
Man-Life-Nature-however you like it.

Aftermath Of A Bust

In Case Of Arrest: Legal Procedure

Editor's Note:

This article is part of a weekly series dealing with such topics as drug research, the "drug culture", drug addiction, drugs and religion, altered states of consciousness, and the use of drugs in other cultures such as the American Indian. This series will be sponsored by Room to Move, but will encourage readers to react to the articles by mailing or bringing in questions, rebuttal, original statements, or interesting excerpts from various publications, c/o John Dunphy, Room to Move, Student Union (located in the old barber shop across from the post office). The hope is that this series will become a medium for an ongoing exchange of views on drugs and related issues.

Too many people are unaware of the legal procedures during and following an arrest. The following points, hopefully will help get a brother or sister out of jail and help to eliminate the confusion which usually follows a bust.

The most important thing to remember is do not say anything to the officers or anyone else, do not answer questions whether or not you are advised of your rights. Second, call a lawyer the first opportunity they give you. If a graduate or undergraduate student is arrested, on any charge, he or she may call the student lawyer, Mr. Howland. Since you are allowed only one phone call, use it for him at 545-0739 or 545-0341, at nights, holidays, and in emergencies, at 549-6817. You should give your name, where you are being held, and the charges only.

Room To Move

Do not discuss the case on the phone with Mr. Howland and/or anyone else. The thing about "anything you say may be held against you" happens too often. It will probably be more helpful to both Mr. Howland and the person arrested, if Mr. Howland is the first person called. He will call any friends or relatives for you. Most important is the fact that he can begin the necessary legal protection for you, until you get a lawyer to cover the case.

After arrest, the usual mug shots, finger printing, and general questions, such as age, residence, etc. follow; this information is sometimes used to help determine bail. This information will also be forwarded to Washington and kept on file there.

The morning after you are arrested, you will be arraigned at the district court. They state the charges against you, the bail, and the date of the hearing. It is sometimes advisable to stick out the night in jail. If you stay in jail, there is a chance that the bail could be lowered the next day which is important since often your fine will end up matching the amount of the bail. The lawyer would be able to advise you best in a situation like this, however.

Personal recognizance has been happening lately, this means you are let out of your own word. Three major determining factors for this usually are: 1) if you are a resident of the state, 2) if your parents are present, and 3) if you have some signs of stability in the area (if you are a student or have a steady job).

Once the arraignment is over, you can either present the money, call a bondsman, or petition for the bail to be lowered.

The nearest bondsman, Mr. William A. Hurley, is in Springfield and is listed in the yellow pages under "Bonds-Bail," 33 Elm Street, 737-1188. He charges 10% of the amount of bail for himself and puts up the bail so you are free. A "responsible" person over 21 must sign for you and show the bondsman that he has the collateral to pay the bondsman, in case you split before the case is over.

If your decision is to remain in jail to appeal for a reduced bail, this means that you go to the Superior Court the next day. The judge, D.A., etc. ask you general questions to determine if you are likely to stay around or not. Appearance here is very important. If you have a friend in jail who will be doing this thing, it is up to you to take him the straightest clothes you can find as soon as possible. He obviously can't het them if he's in jail, and clothes are part of the way they pass a character judgment on you.

Once you are out of jail, do not talk to people, except your lawyer, about the case. Anyone can be supoenaed to testify against you - they do not have much choice other than to show up in court and answer questions. This will be done particularly if the police feel they don't have a good case against you and want to strengthen it.

If you can dig these simple steps, there should be fewer hassles and more expediency in trying to free a sister or brother in the future.

SEVEN DAYS A WEEK

Something Else '70

"Something Else '70" is a five-day happening at the School of Education next week. Subtitled "Alternate Futures in Education," this week long symposium and multi-media fair offers talks, tapings, music, drama, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, and numerous other activities. All university students and faculty and anyone else who is interested are invited to attend. All classes in the School of Education are cancelled during the fair.

University students may earn modular credits by participating in "Something Else '70." Each hour of participation will offer one-half mod credit, and fifteen mod credits will equal one graduation credit from the School of Education.

The Daily Collegian will present abbreviated schedules of "Something Else '70" activities starting today with Monday's schedule. Due to space limitations, the schedule can not be printed here in its entirety. Completed schedules will be available in the School of Education and the Northeast Area, where most of the activities are being held.

Holland To Examine Psychoanalytic Lit

The English department will sponsor a public colloquium Monday, Nov. 16, at 2 p.m. in Room 163 CC, on "The Psychoanalysis of Literature."

Norman Holland, professor of English at the University of Buffalo, is featured speaker. Perhaps the most controversial psychoanalytic critic of today, he is the author of several books and articles on psychoanalytic interpretation. Two of his publications, "Psychoanalysis and Skakespeare," and "The Dynamics of Literary Response" have been acclaimed as the most coherent and ambitious attempt at Freudian aesthetics.

Another outstanding scholar in the field, Simon Lesser of the UMass English department, will be heard in a panel discussion following the talk. Lesser is known as a pioneer in the field and his book "Fiction and the Unconscious," has had widespread influence.

Other panelists will be Richard Noland, professor of English at UMass, Leonard Tanheim of the University of Hartford, editor of the journal "Hartford Studies in Literature," and Leo Marx, professor of English at Amherst College and author of "The Machine in the Garden."

A question period will end the colloquium.

Curb Your Dog!

Canine Contraception Urged

BOSTON (AP) - The Animal Rescue League of Boston says a "pet population explosion" is the reason for its award of a $5,000 grant to Colorado State University to continue research toward a dog contraceptive.

"A simple, relatively inexpensive method of animal birth control is one of the greatest needs in the humane profession today," said Dr. Carlton E. Buttrick, league president, in announcing the award Thursday.

"It is an undisputable fact that the United States is faced with a tremendous surplus of unwanted dogs and cats."

Dr. Buttrick said the Colorado study centers on a contraceptive vaccination for use on male or female dogs.

He said the problem of surplus animals is so great that many female animals cannot be placed as pets. He said a pill contraceptive developed earlier has not been effective.

"A solution to the surplus animal problem would enable humane organizations to better channel their funds and efforts," Dr. Buttrick said, "into education of children on the care of animals, the rescue and handling of animals in distress and the improvement of humane service for livestock, wildlife and other areas of concern."

PEACE PARADE

A Play . . ., A Concert . . ., A Musical Production . . ., it's A Happening! The "PEACE PARADE" is a unique experience due to its creation and development of a communal thing with the stage and audience. You will see and feel the Parade people doing on stage what they feel off stage. Who are they?... The cast consists of past and present members of the New York and Los Angeles productions of 'HAIR'. They are a group of twelve talented artists including such people as, Susan Morse, who has not only appeared on and off Broadway and in the original "Sound of Music", but is probably best known for her lead role as Sheila in the Los Angeles production of 'HAIR'. Another talent to mention is Paul Jabara who was from the original off Broadway production of 'HAIR' and traveled with it to Broadway. Paul has also appeared in "Midnight Cowboy" and "Medea" just to mention a few. Not only will you see ten other artists of similar talent, but you will also hear them express themselves through songs such as "Aquarius", "Hair", "Different Drum", "Give Peace a Chance", "Honkey Tonk Women", "Easy to be Hard", and, of course, "Sun Shine In".

"What you will see is a concert of their, and possibly our, life style, not something to be switched on the minute the curtain goes up and mechanically shelved for the next performance." They are not acting and they want you to express yourself with them. So be prepared to clap, dance and generally BLOW YOUR MIND!!

The Long-Awaited Reality.....

UMass' New Track Ready For Use

By KEN LITTMAN
Staff Reporter

The long-awaited new UMass track has been completed and will be ready for use this spring. UMass hasn't had a home track meet since 1965 when the meets were held at the old Alumni Field (where Whitmore is today).

Five years of planning and designing went into the new all-weather track. The designer, Robert Scoville, also designed the playing fields by Southwest. Excavation and drainage were begun in the fall of 1968 and were finished in the spring of 1969. The new track was installed this September by Warner Brothers, Inc. of Sunderland. It measures 440 yards around, 32 feet wide and has a seven inch-asphalt base. It is located west of the baseball stadium.

The new track is made of "Uni-turf" which is produced by a Boston-based company called American Bilt-Rite. The "Uni-turf" has been installed at the Orange Bowl in Miami and may be installed at the new Boston Patriots Stadium in Foxboro. The latest track installation was at Witchita State in Kansas.

The all-weather surface of the track is ideal for the adverse weather conditions that are characteristic of New England springs. It cuts down the loss of practice time due to poor track conditions since the track is resistent to both extreme cold and extreme heat.

"Uni-turf" also cuts down on maintenance costs because it will need few if any repairs and there will be no need to mark the track before every meet. It will also cut down on some injuries such as shin splints and heel bruises.

The new track was constructed to meet Olympic specifications and has eight four-foot running lanes as well as a steeplechase area. The shotput and jumping events will take place inside the oval and there is a dual runway which allows pole vaulters and high and triple jumpers to jump with the wind at their backs. The throwing events will take place in the field directly adjacent to the track, between the baseball field and the track.

Ruggers Aim For .500, Against Wesleyan

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

The Redman ruggers will attempt to even their record, now 3-4, as they travel to Middletown, Conn. tomorrow to play Wesleyan University.

The Redmen, playing lately with a sputtering offense but a strong defense, are due for a match in which they can offensively explode as they did when they started the season.

"It is a must win for a winning season and I think we can put it all together," says caoch Dale Toohey.

But B team, now 4-4, will also be playing. It has won four out of its last five matches and hopefully will continue with its winning ways.

SPORTS TALK-WMUA will have former Redman basketball and baseball star Ray Ellerbrook on its weekly Sports Talk show on Sunday (10 p.m. to 11 p.m.). Ellerbrook will talk about his experiences with Redman athletics, including his present role as assistant freshman basketball coach. Questions for Ellerbrook will be welcomed at 5-2876 or 5-2425. Hosting the show will be Ken Horseman and Dave Melvin.

Bypassed In '69, Four UMass Gridders Plal Vital '70 Roles

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

The UMass football eleven captivated some sparkling moments in 1969. Identified by a hefty 6-3 slate to go with a Yankee Conference crown, the respected Redmen mixed a hardnosed defense with a potent scoring punch to secure these ends.

Another factor that played a vital importance, as does with any champion for that matter, was depth. And with as such a fine pool of reserve talent that head coach Vic Fusia was equipped with a year ago, the prospects of overlooking a few performers becomes an understandable circumstance.

For seniors Bill Byron, Art Corsaletti, Dick Heavey and Mark Russell; the spoils of a splendid season weren't all so sweet. Byron was sidelined and out of commission with a severe leg injury before the season was yet underway while the latter three shared substitution chores behind a streamlined Redman ground machine which chewed up yardage at a 4.4 clip. Despite the fact that they teamed up for 212 yards and four touchdowns in just 33 carries, not one of the three earned a letter in "69".

But the tide has taken a turn this year, and as a result the determined quartet has been offered a chance and has made the most of it. Each player has emerged to become a contributing asset to the core of the club.

"We're happy to have all four of 'em," says Coach Fusia. "They have all the basic attributes of fine young men. They're disciplined, loyal, and want to be a part of the team, willing to subordinate themselves for an overall success."

The comeback trail was a long, but rewarding climb for tackle Bill Byron. Having played part of his sophomore year as a regular at linebacker, the 235-pounder sought a center berth last fall. But a bad shot on the thigh during preseason action later resulted in a calcium deposit. Thus his hopes of ever playing had been tarnished.

Fusia pointed out that there was a question mark about Byron's future in football at that time and commented: "Bill was told that it would be best if he quit football entirely. He didn't like the idea of giving up so he kept plugging.

"Because he had lost some speed, we switched him to tackle where he could still contribute even though being slowed up by the injury. He has started, and will perhaps start the remainder of the season at tackle."

A graduate of Franklin High, Byron spent three of his schoolboy years at Powers High (Decatur, Georgia). He chalked up all-state center honors, earned league recognition in basketball, and competed in track. In all he was credited with 11 letters.

When asked what major satisfaction he derives from football, Byron replied: "It's more or less an accepted part of my every day life. It's a feeling I couldn't convey, something I really enjoy.

"Being a lineman is the unsung end of football, but this doesn't bother me. I go out there knowing that I can have a real good day and still go unnoticed. On the other hand if I do poorly my presence is more evident. When you do well your teammates know it and that's really all that counts."

Although there are five men in the UMass backfield who get the call more often than Art Corsaletti, he looms as the most consistent ground-gainer on the squad, or in the Yankee Conference for that matter. According to Yan Con statistics Corsaletti ranks eighth in rushing with 330 yards and lugs the pigskin at an 8.9 pace--far and away the best. His four touchdowns put him four points behind team scoring leader Denis Gagnon.

A three-time letter winner in both football and baseball while he attended Pulaski High (New Britain, Conn.) he scored 148 points in his senior year to pave way for honorable mention All-American recognition. Before coming to UMass, he spent two seasons at Kansas Junior College.

"Art has always been an outstanding athlete," stated Fusia. "He had the misfortune of playing behind Pat Scavone when Pat was pursuing a great year, and as a result didn't see much action. By the same token of myself, I didn't get him in there when he was worthy to play.

"But this year is different, he's a big part of our whole offensive scheme."

Corsaletti has a philosophy about football which he contrasts to life: "In life when you commit a mistake, it lingers on. In football a mistake can be wiped out on the very next play. Football is like a different world altogether. It's similar to a perfect society where everyone works in unity for a common goal without any prejudice."

Last year Dick Heavey totaled 145 yards in a mere 20 carries during spot duty. This season his 4.7 credentials seem quite impressive, but the fullback regular isn't inclined to agree. When asked what motivated him to stick with football after two years on the bench, Heavey replied: "First of all I never quit anything. My first reaction to sitting on the bench is that I get more determined that when the opportunity comes to play I'll prove myself the better man at that job.

"Each football player, whether he's a starter or a third-stringer feels that he is the best. What good is a player that settles for second place."

Fusia labels Heavey "a try guy and just a gutsy football player" and adds: "he always seems to give the team a lift when he's in there because of the type of athlete he is. Pain doesn't seem to bother him and he just doesn't know when to stop."

Heavey captained both hockey and football and was an all-stater in the later sport while at Brookline High.

Mark Russel joins the list of Redmen from Nashua, New Hampshire, hometown of former UMass great Greg Landry. Russell owns the destinction of being a four sportman, and he amassed eight letters over his schoolboy span. He attained all-state stature on the gridiron while also actively participating in basketball, baseball, and track.

"I have great respect for Coach Buzz Harvey", Fusia said, referring to Russell's high school mentor, "He has sent me alot of fine athletes over the years and I would have to put Mark in the catagorie of one of the fine ones.

"He came here when we were heavy in running backs, played in the shadow of Gerry Grasso and Craig Lovell, and slugged it out with them. Mark's what we consider a quick back and has been a steady performer all year."

Russell, like Corsaletti and Heavey, has finally found himself in the starting unit this season. Last year he got his' hands on the ball eight times and scored three TD's, not bad for a substitute. This season he continues to prove

Three UMass Crews Set For Frostbite Regatta

By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

Philadelphia's Schuykill River is the site of tomorrow's Frostbite Regatta, sponsored by Saint Joseph's College. The UMass Crew Club will send three crews, an eight, a four, and a pair, each to compete in two 1500-meter races in the last tournament of the fall practice season before leaving the water until Spring.

This is the first year UMass has received an invitation to the affair.

The junior varsity eight, which placed an impressive third out of 33 in last month's Head-of-the-Charles Junior event, is entered in both the junior varsity and varsity races, called the "Silver A" and the "Gold B" respectively. Lining up the boat are:

Bow Paul Winchell
2 Mel Streim
3 Joe Piela
4 Al Flanders
5 Bill Moran
6 Jeff Allen
7 Clay Morin
Stroke Rick Jones
Cox Bob Jayes

The first seven are sophomores: Jones and Jayes are juniors.

In the "Silver A", the University of Pennsylvania's junior varsity boat, last year's undefeated national JV champions, and Columbia's JV team are UMass' two competitors.

The "Gold B" slates UMass against St. Joseph's varsity crew, defending Dad Vail varsity champions. Six of last years's St. Joseph's eight will return, trying to make up for the loss they suffered to UMass in last year's Dad Vail semi-final contest.

A four combination of

Bow Dave Richard senior
2 Tom Mone senior
3 Ted Fitzpatrick sophomore
Stroke Jack Appel junior Cox Chris Jedrey senior will compete against other Dad Vail entries as well as some Philadelphia schools.

The UMass pair of

Bow Kevin O'Brien junior Stroke Charles Leonard senior faces stiff competition from some of the best doubles of the country. Most of the two's come out of crew clubs rather than colleges. The Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia's pair, two Penn students, will race against UMass in the Senior Pairs Division. O'Brien and Leonard might row in the Cox Pair event if there are enough entries, and either Jayes or Jedrey will cox the shell.

Starting time for the Regatta's first event is 11 a.m. With all the races 1500 meters, the crews will row at a sprint speed, considerably harder and faster than in the three miles rowed at the Head.

FOOTBALL ON THE AIR—Tomorrow's football game, UMass vs. New Hampshire, will be aired by WMUA, 91.1 FM. Airtime is set for 12:45 p.m. Ken Horseman will handle all the play-by-play and Dave Melvin will add all the color. At 12:50 WMUA will present Redmen Kickoff Preview with Hal Dash.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Capricorn can be quiet and breeding, Taurus can be quiet and stubborn, Aries can be quiet and sultry, Scorpio can be quiet and explosive, Leo can be quiet and sexy, Libra can be quiet and discriminating, Gemini can seldom be quiet.

ARIES (March 21 - April 10): Collect and pay debts early. Later, forces tend to be somewhat scattered. Fine for social outing. Get together with relatives and neighbors. Entertain with relatives and neighbors. Entertain those who aided you in past.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Recent contacts bear fruit, but you should play cards close to chest. Not wise to take situations, persons for granted. Someone may be after something of value which you possess. Act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 12 - June 20): Cycle moves up; judgment improves. You are able to size up situation and utilize experience. Timing is sharp. You are where you should be. Circumstance turn in your favor.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You will find new places and faces — intrigue may be featured. Obtain hint from Taurus message. Key is to be discreet. Analyze — fine out the why of events.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Social activity is favored. Accept invitations. Permit creative efforts to flower. Stick to your own style. Be original and independent. Key is self-confidence in unusual situation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Participate in civic endeavors. You have chance to elevate prestige. Follow through on lunch. Share knowledge. Learn by teaching. Have quiet chat with professional superior.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Journey may be on agenda. Don't permit distance to discourage you. Cycle is such now that you can close any communication gap. Write, advertise and publicize.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Some may feel they know what is best for you. Key is to co-operate without being overinfluenced. Do your own thinking. Dig deep for information. Be thorough.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Do more listening than talking. Avoid unnecessary legal entanglement. Key is sense of perception. If a keen observer, you make valuable gain. Settle differences with mate, partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Gentle approach gains results. Avoid trying to force issues. Some surprise you by willingness to serve, co-operate. Express appreciation in meaningful manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Creative efforts succeed. Don't follow crowd. Dance to your own tune. Romance is emphasized. The more you give, the more you receive. Accept sudden change of plans in good humor.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Accent on property, home safety measures. There is added responsibility. Older individual offers valuable advice. Stick with experience for best results.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are faithful, dependable, wonderful in times of crisis. Recent pressures are about to be relieved. You will have greater freedom of thought, action. If single, you could be planning residential change — and marriage.

Fr. Gridmen Seek A Win

By DAN KAMAL

In what may be a small-scale model of tomorrow's varsity game, the UMass freshman football team faces the University of New Hampshire frosh this afternoon at UNH in an attempt to end a rather bleak season on a positive note.

A combination of lack of depth, injuries and crucial mistakes in every game has left UMass with an unimpressive 0-4 record to date. However, the fact that the team has statistically outplayed every opponent it has faced, excluding Boston College, cretes a lot of hope for the future.

Looking to the UNH game, coach David Kelley feels that both teams will use many of the varsity formations in the game because both schools have been concentrating on varsity scouting reports all week.

Injuries, which have played a vital roll in the Little Redmen's misfortunes, will continue to be a major factor today as Lyn Zulick (back), Bill Hale (knee) and Paul Hanson (thumb) will, at most, see limited action.

himself well. At the present Russell maintains a sturdy 3.9 rushing average and has hit paydirt once.

Russell finds something special in football, but finds its definition too sophisticated to describe: "I get plenty of satisfaction for a variety of reasons. The thrill of making a good block, playing fine game, or scoring a few touchdowns. But it's mainly the challenge, the competition. You're always striving to better yourself. You derive personal satisfaction in achieving something."

Tourney Snubs Redman Booters

Peter Broaca
UM's Shocked Coach

The N.C.A.A. Soccer Tournament Committee has announced that four teams will take part in the 1970 New England Playoffs, but UMass was not included among them. For the Redmen, it is a bitter end to an otherwise successful season which found them finish fourth in New England and first in the Yankee Conference.

Two of the teams selected came as no surprise to anybody, Harvard, number one seed, and Brown, number two seed. The other two selections were Worcester Tech and Middlebury. The omission of the booters by the committee came as a shock to the team and coach Peter Broaca since the Redmen were ranked above the third and fourth selections, in addition to playing a much tougher schedule.

Springfield College, which was the only other school to be ranked higher than the booters was not under consideration because it is already tournament bound to Elizabethtown, Pa. for the college division playoff.s

It is anybody's guess why the three-man committee overlooked the Redmen, who have to be the surprise team of the year in New England. The booters rocketed from virtual obscurity to become one of the most highly regarded units in the region. But the season is over, although it still leaves many people at UMass wondering why the Redmen won't be playing Harvard next Tuesday instead of watching from the sideline.

Metawampe's Picks

With the wintry west wind wafting through the weary one's wiry frame, he is beginning to store away some of his favorite little goodies (Tootsie Roll pops, pomegranites, and artificially flavored Buffalo meat, you can't get anything real these days) for the long hibernation period ahead. The Great One hates cold. You would too if you had to pose outside all day dressed like some Roman rascal throughout blizzard and blight. He is beginning to long for those quiet warm days back in the Okefenokee Swamp when Indians were Indians and generally drunk.

But enough of these sad stories. With only one more week to go, the Great One is beginning to feel the thrill of victory and the agony of the feet.

He is tiring, but with one last gasping effort, he will once more attempt to tickle your ears with one last titillating tale:

UMASS 24, NEW HAMPSHIRE 17
Redman are ready and have come up with mean plots, To crush hopes of Wildcats and cost them Beanpot.

PITTSBURG 34, BOSTON C. 6

Redman Gridders Set For Woken Wildcats

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

For a football team with a 3-4-1 record, UMass continues to get itself involved in games that can be labeled "big", as the Redmen get set for a visiting bunch of Wildcats from the U. of New Hampshire at Alumni Stadium tomorrow afternoon at 1.

UMass' season has been a mumble-jumble one, one that has been marked by many significant encounters. When the Redmen played Dartmouth, Buffalo, Boston University, Rhode Island, Connecticut and even Vermont, each match-up was looked as one of importance for UMass.

And now it's New Hampshire. The Wildcats are growling. They lost their first two games of the season but have now won five in a row. They hold a 3-1 mark in the Yankee Conference and have an excellent chance of tying for the league title should they win against the Redmen tomorrow.

UMass needs to win this game (1) to keep alive its hopes of a winning year and (2) to maintain its pride. Head coach Vic Fusia reiterates, "It's developed into a big game. They're fighting for a part of the championship and we're fighting for our own prestige."

A closer look at the YanCon picture reveals the importance of tomorrow's tilt for the Wildcats. Here are the present Conference standings:

UConn	3	0	1
New Hampshire	3	1	0
UMass	2	1	1
Vermont	0	5	0

There are two important league games on tap tomorrow, the final afternoon of Y.C. football. One is the UMass-UNH affair, the other has URI at UConn. Here are the "ifs" and "thens". If UConn defeats Rhody, the Huskies will take the Conference outright with a 4-0-1 final mark. The best UNH will do in this case would be a 4-1 second place finish.

However, if UConn loses, the fun begins. URI would then guarantee itself a position at the top with a 4-1 record, slightly better than Connecticut's 3-1-1, should it lose. Also in this case, a New Hampshire win over the Redmen would project it into a final tie for first with the Rhody Rams.

If UMass wins, the Wildcat bubble will bust as the Redmen will climb ahead of the Wildcats in the final summation, 3-1-1 to 3-2. With a UConn victory, the Redmen could claim second place as URI would level off with UNH at 3-2. Whew!

Fusia was asked if UNH's excellent play over the past five weeks has come as a surprise to him and he answered, "No, I knew that they had good personnel. Once they've gained momentum, they've been most difficult to stop."

It's been written before but here it is again: "It should be a great football game."

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES - One of the most interesting things to keep an eye on in this game will be the ever-changing UMass offensive line...That unit has lost two fine performers for the game in guards Dick Etna and Jim Queeney...Starting at center will be dependable Dave Levine...The left guard will be Bob Pena...After that, it's musical chairs for the offensive line...Clarence Brooks, who is returning after being injured against Holy Cross last weekend, will play at right tackle, but will swing over to the right guard spot at various times during the action and, on occasion, will give Pena a rest at OLG...Starting at right guard will be a center, Ron Marino, but when he relieves Levine at center, Brooks will take his spot...The left tackle post will have, as its starter, Bob Donlin...He will be backed up by Tom Mullen and Bill Byron...Byron will also be in there to spell Levine at center because that's Byron's normal position...At any one time during the game, the Redmen could be lining up for the snap with no less than three centers on the starting offensive line.

.....With the injuries to Queeney and Etna, Fusia comments, "This is our way of getting depth on the offensive line."'...Whew!... At Wednesday's Quarterback Club Luncheon, Dennis Collins and Bob Cabrelli were selected as the top defensive and offensive players of the week for their outstanding play against Holy Cross...For Collins, it was his third such selection, a fete that should not go unnoticed...At 6' and 190 pounds Collins plays a bigger man's position, linebacker, yet continues to shine brightly.

....The starting ends on offense will be Cabrelli and John Hulecki...The offensive backfield will read Hughes (QB), Scavone (HB), Russell (HB) and Cummings (FB)...The defense will be without the services of John O'Neil at safety...He was injured against Holy Cross and won't be ready for action for another week...Replacing him will be Jim Rendle...The rest of the defense will go like this: Wood (E), Kelliher (E), DeFlavio (T), Sroka (T), Farelly (LB), Collins (LB), Sabulis (LB), Leamy (LB), Keating (HB) and Bush (HB)... Should the Redmen emerge victorious in this one, they will enter Nov. 24's home encounter against Boston College with a 4-4-1 record, an awesome opponent for them to have to face in their quest for a .500 or better autumn...The way UMass has performed "at times" (notice the emphasis) it really deserves a better alternative than to have to meet the Eagles under such circumstances...But, before any ballyhoo is made about BC, the solid challenge of New Hampshire lurks just hours away.

Harriers Nip NH, 26-29, Minus Top 3

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

With four sophomores and one junior responding to the pressure presented them by the absense of the top three Redman runners, the UMass cross country team eeked out a 26-29 verdict over the New Hampshire Wildcats in its dual meet finale for the season yesterday. The win upped the Redman record to 7-2-1 for the season.

For the first time this season the individual winner in a dual meet involving UMass was not a Redman. With Ron Wayne not in the race, Tom Dowling took the lead from his closest UMass foes, sophomores Tom Swain, Rick Barry and Tom Jasmin, at the three-mile mark and held it the rest of the way for the victory.

Swain, Barry and Jasmin held their places to finish second, third and fourth. Following these three were a trio of Wildcats.

Now came the turning point of the entire meet. With four Wildcats already finished as compared to only three Redmen the eventual outcome of the race would be decided by the fifth man for UNH and the fourth and fifth men for UMass.

Junior Arnie Morse and sophomore Bob Sullivan responded to the pressure as both came on in the last half of the race to overhaul the fifth man for New Hampshire and assure the Redmen of victory.

Rounding out the top seven Redman finishers were B ruce Blackburn and senior Joel Fox who broke into the top seven finishers for the first time as a Redman in his last varsity race.

Coach Ken O'Brien had anticipated a close meet before the race and was pleased with the way Morse, Sullivan, Blackburn and Fox responded to the pressure in the middle positions.

He pointed out that Dowling's winning time was very good as he posted the sixth fastest time ever recorded on the five-mile UMass course.

Swain and Barry showed signs that they have recovered from the New Englands as they ran with Dowling for the first three miles of the race. Jasmin has not fully recovered from Monday's race but with a couple days of rest he'll be in top form for the IC4A'S.

In the freshman race UMass once again posted a shutout, this time by the score of 15-48. The frosh were in command all the way as they swept the first five places.

Doug O'Connell was the individual winner, touring the 3.6 mile UMass freshman course in 18:55. His time was one of the best ever recorded on the course.

Completing the frosh sweep were Bill Lowry, Ted Beaulieu, Joe Frontierro and Jay Nestor.

Damage Prompts Action On Cage

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Acting in concert with several UMass agencies, Sgt. Donald Zidik of the UMass police ordered that Curry Hicks Cage be declared "unsafe" before the scheduled 2 p.m. performance of the "Peace Parade" yesterday.

The building was the scene of near mayhem Saturday night as people banged and kicked their way into the Cage for the 10 p.m. show. A Homecoming Committee spokesman estimated that as many as 9,000 people may have gained entrance to the concert. The Cage holds approximately 4,500 for concerts.

Trouble began brewing outside the Cage during the early show as people lined up outside and kicked at the doors. Bt the time the first show got out at ten, the crowd filled the parking lot beside the Cage and overflowed into the little yard beside Munson almost over to Herter.

Ticket holders were allowed in the two doors on the left side of the Cage while literally thousands of non-holders lined up on the third door. They were scrambling up on the roof and smashing windows in an effort to gain entrance. Finally the door gave way under the onslaught and the people poured in.

The Homecoming Committee was finally forced to declare the concert a free one since it would have been impossible to throw the freeloaders out. Police did, however, make a token attempt to confiscate wine and other contraband from persons entering. Their efforts were apparently unsuccessful as clean-up crews labored for hours today to clean the Cage of thousands of wine, whiskey and beer bottles. Numerous burned-out joints dotted the floor while the crews picked them up without realizing what they were.

THE SCENE OUTSIDE THE CAGE was almost as bad as the one inside. The parking lot was littered with trash, and as this shows, someone must have some nice bruises in his sides from being crushed against the fence. The fences at all three Cage entrances on the south side were destroyed. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt.)

The decision to declare the Cage "unsafe" was reached after several members of the administration had a look at the place Sunday morning. Chancellor Tippo, Dr. Randolph Bromery, Warren McGuirk, Director of Athletics Gerry Scanlon, from the Dean of Students office, were among those who had a look at the damage.

The Cage was littered with broken bottles, piles of trash and paper, the bleachers in one section were falling apart, and as one campus policeman put it: "Generally the whole place was beat up from the night before."

The UMass student firemen, acting as security guards for the concerts, were also part of the decision-makers who wrote the order that the Cage be cleaned up before the Sunday afternoon concert could begin.

Committee spokesman Pat Flynn emphasized that at no time was the concert in danger of being ordered cancelled. The piles of trash were cleaned up and repairs made to the bleachers and doors before the 2 p.m. show.

Infirmary officials and Cooley Dickinson Hospital could not confirm rumors that anyone had been admitted for injuries received at the Cage although ten people were treated for cuts and bruises at the Infirmary.

Reached for comment on the affair last night, Dean of Students William F. Field said, "It's perfectly clear that we have to rethink the whole idea of major concerts being held in the Cage...I don't think that we'll do any more contracting until a thorough study has been made." He added that he has ordered such a study to be made.

The men who worked all Sunday afternoon to clean the mess up had a few caustic comments about students and their behavior Saturday night. As he pointed out a barrel overflowing with Boone's Farm apple wine bottles and empty Bud cans, one worker said, "It's like this after every concert. Students are really pigs."

Crabtree Waterpipe Bursts

An exploding water pipe in the first floor men's room in Crabtree Saturday night inundated the first floor and basement of that dorm.

Around ten p.m. a half-inch pipe on the wall in the man's room apparently burst and began gushing water at a furious rate.

The first floor lobby, as well as several students' rooms were flooded to about one foot in depth. The basement, including a storage room the the Kitchenette were flooded also.

The girls called the Physical Plant for a plumber, but turned the water off themselves when no plumber appeared.

After about a half hour the water seeped away and things returned to normal.

Abortion Reform Studied By Chilean Government

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP)—The government of President Salvador Allendo is looking into the possibiltiy of legalizing divorce and abortion in Chile, which is about 90 per cent Roman Catholic.

This was reported yesterday in an interview published in a Santiago newspaper with Lisandro Cruz, minister of justice.

"Chile cannot remain behind in these matters of great human and social content," Cruz said.

To get around the lack of a divorce law, Chileans now have marriages annulled.

Cruz called the present system "a farce" in which there is no guarantee of alimony for the divorced spouse.

He said he and his advisers are studying the divorce law now before the Italian Senate to get some ideas.

Cruz gave no details of plans for legalizing abortion in Chile. Although a divorce law was promised in the Popular Unity campaign platform, legalized abortion was not.

The minister of justice, appointed by Allende a Marxist, from one of the four non Marxist parties in his Popular Unity coalition, also said his ministry is studying penal reform.

He said he wants to build a modern penitentiary in Santiago to replace the present institution.

In another development, the government announced that on Dec. 1, it will begin free distribution of a half a quart of milk a day to every child in Chile.

The pledge of milk for every child up to age 15 was a major campaign promise of Allendo's coalition in its 40 point "Basic Program" for Chile.

Still another announcement Sunday said a new Ministry of the Ocean will be created.

Jacques Chonchol, minister of agriculture, said it's primary purpose will be to "defend the riches of the ocean."

Film On Children Sponsored By CEQ

An experimental film about children and the environment by Phillip Vaugn will be shown at the Campus Center Auditorium Monday at 7:00, 8:00, and 9:00. Vaugn will play acoustical guitar accompaniment while the film is showing and will lead a discussion after the showings.

The film, "Celebration, Children and Trees," has been shown on "Viewpoint," a national educational TV program. It has also been shown to the Bureau of Roads, the US Department of the Interior, and the National Wildlife Federation's Annual Meeting. It will be shown at the White House Conference on Children and Youth and possibly on the David Frost Show.

Vaughn has been recently showing the film at Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, and Hampshire College, and this will be the last showing of the film in the area.

The film is sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

14 U Of Wisconsin Students Investing $100,000 Capital

Reprinted from the New York Times.

MADISON, Wis. Nov. 7 (AP) - Fourteen University of Wisconsin business students have more than grades to worry about in a course on investment - $100,000 is at stake.

Enrolled in a graduate course, "Applied security analysis and investment management," the students have $100,000 in university money to invest as they see fit.

The donation was made recently by Baird Brittingham, administrator of the Brittingham Trust. He hopes it will promote a greater awareness and more realistic experience.

The course is conducted by Prof. Steven L. Hawk over totwo semesters, each worth two credits. Students are selected on the basis of scholastic achievement and interviews with business school professors.

"We will divide the class in two separate teams, with each having the responsibility of investing $50,000." Professor Hawk said. "Competition will add even more realism. The students will study industries and securities, then interview management representatives of businesses seriously considered for investment. They will also decide when to sell securities to gain the maximum growth and income."

The first year's income, if any, will be used to defray class expenses.

Another Fish Story?

SCITUATE—The decomposed body of a 30-ft. sea serpent washed ashore in Scituate yesterday afternoon. Police said the creature, which looks like a camel without legs, weighs between 15 and 20 tons.

This body washed ashore about three p.m. with the high tide.

Officials from the New England Aquarium looked at the serpent Sunday evening and the head zoologist of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute is expected to examine the hulking carcass this morning.

Similar creatures were reported in the waters off Gloucester and Plymouth in the 1700's. One body washed ashore in Boston in the 1850's.

Aquarium officials feared that the body would wash away again with the next high tide but so far no measures have been taken to secure it to the beach.

WMUA-Dickinson Feud Over Equipment Installation

RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

High on top of the highest hill here on campus is a dorm, named for one Emily Dickinson. High on the top floor of Dickinson House is an ironing room. One ironing room for the 7th floor; Stocked with four irons and an equal number of hideaway ironing boards and automaticly timed double input plugs.

The room itself is smaller than a lounge, useful as a makeshift kitchen and at times the best place on the floor to get away from your dorm room to study.

Little does the room know, little would it care, that its fate as an ironing room is threatened. A turn of the wheels of progress has targeted the ironing room as the next house of the new WMUA transmitter.

The fate of the ironing room, however, has become a major issue. The management of WMUA has charged the residents of Dickinson 7th floor with "irrationalism" and "not listening...no matter what we say." The residents of the Dickinson 7th floor have alleged that WMUA have used tactics of "harassment and intimidation" in an effort to take over the ironing room for the installation of a new transmitting tower on the roof of Emily Dickinson House.

The whole matter will be brought up before the Board of Trustees at the end of the week as part of the President's agenda. Pat Beharry had written a letter to President Robert Wood explaining that a Trustee decision might be appropriate. In the meantime, Chancellor Oswald Tippo has urged those on campus to prepare some kind of proposal which would resolve the present hostilities.

Pat Beharry, (Student Senate Vice-President) entered the dispute as a "concerned student interested in resolving the situation", by bringing the students on the 7th floor of Dickinson House to General Court.

Beharry was seeking an injunction keeping the students from interfering with the installation of the WMUA radio transmitting equipment, in the 7th floor ironing room, and a writ of mandamus against Dickinson House (in the person of Elizabeth Kent, Dickinson/House treasurer) which would force Dickinson House to honor "an agreement. allowing WMUA" to install its equipment.

I'm tired of fooling around with people who refuse to deal" said Beharry.

At the hearing of the 54 students, Sam Goldman, of the General Business department faculty, hastily brought into the case, convinced Pat Beharry that her action was not the "proper vehicle" for bringing about a settlement between the two parties.

Richard Howland, the Student Senate hired student lawyer had attempted to mediate the affair one Sunday at Dickinson but according to Howland the situation has not lent itself to a legalistic solution. He compared the case to that of "Divorce", where the parties will never come to an agreement.

Dr. Randolph W. Bromery will meet today with the contending parties in an effort to bring about some understanding before the Trustees meeting this Friday when Pat Beharry, substituting for Glenn Elters who is on a leave of absence in Italy, will present the problem to the Trustees.

The situation, as it stands now, could perhaps best be described by one spokesman no longer connected with the case as "completely and utterly absurd."

WMUA Station Manager Ken Horseman has on several instances visited Dickinson to explain WMUA's position. Residents of Dickinson 7th floor claim Horseman's visits were designed to "change our original vote" which was against WMUA using the ironing room and roof for the transmitter.

Ken Horseman claims that WMUA had received, over the last three years, "verbal" approval for the placing of the transmitter. The residents of the 7th floor claim that even if there was such a verbal agreement, WMUA has no right to consider it binding on the new residents of Dickinson.

The whole affair is linked to the Trustee-approved expansion of WMUA's wattage to 1000 stereo watts. The Trustees according to Horseman, "specifically" approved Dickinson House, in the Orchard Hill complex last December as the location for the new transmitter and tower.

The studies done, claims Horseman, are specifically aimed at placing the transmitter in the ironing room. Horseman emphasized that the engineering study had cost a lot of money and if any changes are made the students, who paid for the study through student taxes would lose the money.

The ironing room on the 7th floor of Dickinson on Orchard Hill is the tentative location of WMUA's new equipment to increase their wattage to 1000 watts. (Photos by Gib Fullerton.)

Doug Furia, a counselor on the 7th floor Dickinson contends that the whole matter has developed into a question of "ethics", because of "intimidating" incidents. The alleged "intimidation" includes a telephone call from a Student Senate officer to a Dickinson resident which reportedly threatened a suit against the dormitory.

The residents also claim that Ken Horseman changed his story on several occasions saying at one meeting that there would be "no" interference from the transmitter and other times that there would be hardly any and that if there was the FCC (Federal Communications Commission) would protect them.

Horseman called the alleged acts of intimidation "unfounded". Concerning the subpoena and writ of mandamus requested by Pat BeHarry, he emphasized that Beharry was "acting as a concerned individual" in requesting the hearing before General Court. Beharry was un-available for comment at this writing.

The first major points of contention stem from concern on the part of residents over the loss of the ironing room and possible interference from the transmitter of radio and television reception. The 7th Dickinson has stated that, now, there are four major points, adding questions of safety (anchoring the antenna) and the procedures followed by WMUA during the past few weeks.

Presently, it appears that the residents of Dickinson stand unified in at least one respect; they don't like WMUA.

Neil Dorfman, Justice of the Student General Court, declined comment on the evidence which led Pat Beharry to request the "judicial action," but did admit that the writ of mandamus was somewhat "open ended." Dorfman stated that he scheduled the court hearing of the Dickinson residents on the "assumption that there was some urgency" involved. "I felt it was best to bring the case up as soon as possible."

Freedom Committee Formed By Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) - Soviet sources reported yesterday that three leading physicists have formed a committee to make "constructive criticisms" of the status of freedom in contemporary Soviet society.

A typewritten announcement made available to some foreign correspondents listed the organizers as Dr. Andrei Sakharov, the developer of the Soviet hydrogen bomb, and his colleagues Valery Chalidze and Andrei Tverdokhlebov.

Although all unofficial organizations in the Soviet Union are considered automatically illegal, the physicists appeared to be taking great pains to work within the letter of Soviet law.

The announcement emphasized that the committee would concentrate its efforts on examining the current state of "legal guarantees and individual freedoms in Soviet law."

The United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights will serve as it's guiding force, the announcement said, and all operations will be carried out within the guarantees of the Soviet constitution.

The physicists could not be reached for direct comment but the sources who distributed the document have proved reliable in the past.

The announcement said the committee would attempt to maintain "consultative collaboration with the organs of state power." This appeared to be an effort to avoid being branded an underground organization.

All Soviet citizens are invited to join, the announcement said, except members of organizations that seek to rule the state, presumably including Communists.

The group said it is ready to make contact with international nongovernmental organizations so long as they do not seek to harm the Soviet Union and providing they base their activities on United Nations principles.

Mills House Committee Elections To Be Held

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"The Black Cultural Center (Mills House) is about to come under control of Students." in the form of a "representative committee" which will be elected tonight at 10:00 p.m. in Mills House to "govern" Mills House.

According to Michael Thelwell, Chairman of the Black Studies department located in Mills House, tonight's election was prompted by a meeting of "people who work in Mills House" last Friday. The group issued a statement urging people to attend and emphasizing that those gathered tonight will constitute the foundations of a "legitimate government" to control the use and budgeting of the facilities at Mills House.

"If you want to have a hand in deciding the future of the Black Cultural Center," the statement warned, "it is imperative that you attend." The release continued and specifically requested that "each black organization" be represented.

The meeting last Friday and tonight's gathering to elect a "governance committee" are viewed by Thelwell as having roots in last year's "take-over" of Mills House. But the committee has beeb largely ineffective.

There are no definite plans for the formulation of the committee, but Thelwell said that he did have a general plan in mind which would call for a "representative committee."

100,000 Feared Dead In Pakistani Typhoon

DACCA, East Pakistan (AP) - Government officials, struggling to set up relief operations in sodden East Pakistan, said yesterday that a cyclone and tidal waves may have claimed 300,000 lives.

Estimates of the death toll from Friday's storm grew hourly as reports filtered in from flooded coastal districts bordering the Bay of Bengal and off-shore islands.

Officials attributed the high death toll to an increase in the population of the low lying area because of the rice harvest and a lack of sufficient warning before the storm hit.

Four islands in the Ganges river Delta 60 miles south of Dacca were the hardest hit. Various government sources reported there appeared to be virtually no survivors on one of the four islands that had a total population of 1.4 million according to the 1961 census.

The government reported a confirmed death count of 15,943, but local officials reported much higher tolls in single districts.

A former provincial assembly member, Syed Ashraf Hussein, said district officials indicated 65,000 persons died in Patuakhapi district to the west of the hard hit islands.

Many islands and coastal districts were still cut off by high water from the storm that packed 150 miles per hour winds and 20 foot waves.

The head of the Pakistan Red Cross appealed for help to meet "the complete devastation in the offshore islands."

President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan ordered army units to establish communications and organize evacuation and relief work.

The United Nations, the International Red Cross and even Pakistan's traditional antagonist, India, were organizing relief funds.

East Pakistan is made up mostly of the Ganges River Delta and killer cyclones smash into it each spring and fall almost without fail. The worst on record previous to Friday's storm came on May 28, 1963, when 22,000 persons perished.

Pope Blasts Godlessness, Disobedience In Church

VATICAN CITY (AP) - On strong, sharp terms, Pope Paul VI deplored Godlessness in the world and disobedience in the church yesterday.

His speech, given from his window high over St. Peter's Square, painted a gloomy picture of what he sees all around him as hostility to his ideals and hopes.

A few thousand Romans and tourists braved a drizzle on a dank day to hear perhaps the Pope's bitterest attack on secular influences and dissent within the church.

The 73 year old pontiff declared that ills inside the church "doctrinal deviations, certain moral scandals and disciplinary unrestraint" hurt the church more than "exterior difficulties."

Among the outside forces he deplored were "oppressive legalism in so many countries, anticlerical secularism in others, an atheism that is pacific, if you wish, but radical in thought and habit."

These things, he said, "attempt everywhere to suffocate christian thought and institutions. Everything must be lay, everything nonconfessional, everything lacking in honestly professed religious sentiments."

For 7 1/2 years, Pope Paul had been in the middle of the maelstrom of change ushered into the half billion member church by the ecumenical council Vatican II.

He has never, it appears to many Vatican observers, felt entirely comfortable with the many possibilities for change that the council opened up.

His own specially appointed study group on birth control voted overwhelmingly for relaxation of the church's ban on contraception. Pope Paul went against its advice and upheld the ban, provoking a storm of dissent.

Hundreds of priests and even a few bishops have deserted clerical ranks to marry.

Smut-Free Mailbox, If You Want One

Armed with new legislation, the U.S. Postal Service is gearing up to guarantee a smut free mail box to anyone who wants it.

Beginning next February, any citizen may request that the postal system take him off the mailing list of any firm that sends out sexually oriented advertising.

Postmaster General Winton M Blount said the new law, part of the postal reorganization legislation passed last summer, is "the most novel means in use in the world for controlling the flow of sexually oriented materials through the mail."

The Postal Service will maintain a computerized list of persons who do not wish to receive erotic advertising. The mailer must check his mailing list against that of the post office to assure that he will not be prosecuted under the law.

Rather than leaving the recipient the decision of whether the advertisement is erotic or offensive, the new law sets specific standards for determining whether advertising is sexually oriented.

The definition includes "any advertisement that depicts, in actual or simulated form, or explicitly describes, in a predominantly sexual context, human genitalia, any act of natural or unnatural sexual intercourse, any act of sadism or masechism, or any other erotic subject directly related to the foregoing."

Hanoi Declares Right To Down U.S. Planes

TOKYO (AP) - North Vietnam said yesterday it has a legitimate right to shoot down any U.S. plane that flies over its territory and that U.S. Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird's statement about possible retaliation has not frightened the North Vietnamese.

Laird issued a statement Friday after North Vietnam shot down an unarmed RF 4 reconnaissance plane 105 miles north of the demilitarized zone, presumably killing its two crewmen. He said the United States might retaliate if there are further attacks on unarmed U.S. reconnaissance planes by the North Vietnamese.

Reacting to Laird's remark, the North Vietnamese military daily, "Quan Doi Nhan Dan," commented. "Mr Laird's language cannot frighten the Vietnamese people in any way.

All U.S acts of violation against the Democratic Republic of Vietnam air space, territorial waters and territory are crimes of aggression, and must be duly punished. This has always been the Vietnamese people's will and iron like determination. To defend the independence and security of the country is the Vietnamese people's sacred and legitimate right to self defense."

The paper claimed U.S. planes flew 1,540 sorties over North Vietnam last month and that B52 bombers dropped "thousands of tons" of bombs on western Vinh Linh province while other planes attacked other provinces.

The newspapers comments were broadcast by Hanoi's Vietnam news agency and monitored in Tokyo.

The North Vietnamese delegation to the Paris peace talks declared Saturday it "condemns and rejects" Laird's statement as gratuitous and threatening and that U.S. reconnaissance plane was "violating DRVN air space, encroaching upon its sovereignty and security."

Viet Cong Renew Attacks

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-A rash of guerilla attacks in Vietnam sent American battlefield deaths soaring to their highest toll in five weeks, and in Cambodia new assaults were reported yesterday along the already shaky northern front.

Booby traps and land mines detonated by remore control killed nine Americans and wounded 10 in the past 24 hours, raising to 44 the number of Americans killed during the past week, more than half of them by crudely fashioned booby traps and mines at little cost in life or money to the Viet Cong.

Drinan Receives Religous Award

BOSTON (AP) - The Rev. Robert F. Drinan, a Roman Catholic priest elected to Congress, received yesterday the Eternal Light Medal from the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, which gave the same award to Richard Cardinal Cushing in 1966.

The seminary maintains schools in New York, Los Angeles and Jerusalem to train rabbis, cantors and teachers for conservative Jewish temples.

"We can never recall enough that America is the only nation ever deliberately established on a commitment to the concept that human rights have their origin in God," Drinan said in his prepared remarks.

"The founding fathers found a common language in which to express the convictions of the nation at that time concerning man as the image of God," he said.

"Today, unfortunately, political figures and leaders of opinion seldom, if ever, reassert that rights are God given, innate, and that consequently a denial of human rights is not merely an injustice to man but a sacrilege in the sight of God," Father Drinan said.

Drinan, a member of the Jesuit order, is on leave as dean of Boston College Law School.

"It may be that some of the silence about the sacredness of man and the inviolability of his divinely bestowed rights derives from a laudable fear of offending certain individuals who may have abandoned all formal belief in God or in Divine Providence," Drinan said.

He said, however, that "even these individuals" have many non theistic reasons to "abide by the proposition that religious truths and moral values are indispensable for the health of the American nation and the future of the country."

Drinan and the late Cardinal Cushing were the only two New England men ever to receive the medal, presented at a dinner.

Dr. Louis Finkelstein, chancellor of the seminary, said the medal was given to Drinan "in recognition of the significant part you have been playing over many years as an educator, as one who has given expression to the liberal spirit and as a partisan and exemplar of the eternal ethical and moral values of the scriptures."

Campaign Spending Issue Faces Nixon, Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon and the Democratic Senate he strove to change on election day are heading toward a new political collision over the vote of legislation that would limit campaign spending for radio and television.

Democratic leaders were to meet Monday to discuss a timetable for action on the vote and other issues in the lame duck session of Congress convening at noon.

And Republicans already are campaigning for the votes to sustain the President. It would take a two thirds vote in each chamber to override Nixon and one of the Democratic sponsors of the bill already has acknowledged that would be hard to muster.

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania said in urging GOP support for Nixon that the Democrats have indicated the matter will come up soon after Congress reconvenes.

But Democrats are likely to prefer some delay. While Republicans gained two seats in the Nov. 3 elections, in the lame duck session, they will be worse off than before, after Democrat Adlai E. Stevenson III of Illinois is seated.

Stevenson will take over from Sen. Ralph T Smith, a Republican as soon as his election is certified, probably sometime this week. The newly elected Republicans will not be taking office until Jan. 4, when the new Congress convenes.

So, when Stevenson is seated, Democrats will have a temporary 58 to 42 vote majority. The political dispute over broadcast spending is likely to prove the sharper after an election campaign in which Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F O'Brien said Republican outspent Democrats by a margin of at least 5 to 1, and perhaps 10 to 1.

The bill would be effective in 1972.

And O'Brien said the outlays of 1970 point to a $50 million Republican campaign to re-elect Nixon in two years.

In vetoing the bill Nixon said it might actually lead to more, rather than less, campaign spending, as candidates whose access to television would be limited shift their budgets into other advertising.

The bill would limit spending on campaign broadcasting to seven cents for each vote cast for the office involved in the previous election, or $20,000, whichever was higher.

It would cover candidates for President, vice president, Senate, House, governor and lieutenant governor.

The bill also would require broadcasting stations to make political time available at the lowest rate charged any regular advertiser, and would suspend equal time regulations.

The latter provision would open the way for televised debates between the major candidates in the 1972 Presidential election.

The final version of the bill passed the Senate, 60 to 19.

Should the Senate vote to override the veto, the issue would be sent back to the House - where Republican Leader Gerald R Ford has announced his opposition to the President's position.

Trash Separation Machine May Allow Waste Recycling

PHILADELPHIA (AP)- Scientists at the Franklin Institute are building a machine they predict will be able to separate 60 tons of household trash an hour into reusable raw material.

They think the process will help keep America from being buried in the estimated 4 billion tons of trash thrown away each year and could double the life of land fill sites.

Last spring the institute, working under a private contract from Dickson Paper Fibre Inc., built a small model. It successfully sorted shredded trash into paper, glass, hard and soft plastics and cans. Last week the Public Health Services of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, said it would put up as much as $300,000 for a full scale model.

The institute, devoted to scientific and technological research and education, said the full scale operating prototype is being built to see how it works. Institute officials hope to develop a production model.

The pilot model, which looked something like a farm hay bailer, was dismantled several months ago. It used wire screens, shakers and a paddle wheel to separate the trash. The wheel threw the trash, and according to the weight, the cans landed in one bin, plastics in another, paper in another.

Dickson, a used paper broker originally backed the idea as a way to extract paper from trash. The institute discovered with just a little modification the machine could handle all kinds of trash.

"This has got two good applications," said William McGarity, Dickson president. "It lets us reclaim some raw materials and will attack the problem of waste material. We can recycle some of household trash back into the economy."

Table scraps are not much of a problem, according to Larry Berkowitz, an institute engineer who worked on the project.

"The preponderance of household trash is packaging materials," he said. After the trash is sorted, by the machine, the table scraps can be cleaned out by hand.

McGarity estimated that 650 pounds of reusable raw materials can be salvaged from each 1,000 pounds of trash. The rest would have to be burned or buried, like now.

Football Charter Jet Crash Kills 75 In West Virginia

KENOVA, W. Va. (AP)-A brush with tree tops on a high ridge rising in front of a rainy airport runway was blamed Sunday for sending Marshall University's chartered football jetliner cartwheeling into a hillside, killing all 75 persons aboard. "If it hadn't been for those trees, he would have probably made it. It was that close," said John H. Reed, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board.

Reed and federal investigators combed the backwoods area eight miles west of Huntington for clues Sunday, while firemen finished the task of carrying chared bodies from the twisted, burnt wreckage of the plane that carried Marshall's hard luck football team, its coaching staff, boosters and others.

The disaster was the second in less than two months to cut down a college football team. But investigators found no similarity with the 31 death Whichita State crash in the Rocky Mountains east of Denver Oct. 2, which killed 14 players.

The Southern Airways twinengine DC9, dropping through a curtain of rain clouds toward the Tri-State Airport after dark Saturday, sheered off the thick tops of poplar and locust trees on the ridge, leaving a trail of metal in the bramble below.

While it was the Thundering Herd's fourth road game of the season, all other road trips were made by bus. The university chartered the plane for the trip to more distant Greenville, N.C., where Marshall lost earlier Saturday to East Carolina 17-14.

The plane plunged into the muddy hillside on the opposite side of the hollow two miles short of its intended target in this southwestern state area, cartwheeled upside down and burst into flames.

A special FBI team was still trying to identify the blackened bodies late Sunday.

At least 44 of the bodies are the Marshall University players and coaches. Other victims included some of Huntington's most prominent people-three doctors, a city councilman, a newly elected state legislator-and the town of 73,000 were left grief stricken.

Monday and Tuesday were declared days of mourning on the 8,500 student Marshall campus. There will be no classes.

There was a midnight memorial service on campus Saturday night and another memorial was scheduled for Sunday A memorial service also was being held on the campus of East Carolina. The East Carolina football players and coaches held a private memorial earlier.

The crash was a tragic end for a football team that had hoped it was on its way to better luck after hard times in recent years.

In the last three years Marshall's football team was suspended from the Mid American Conference and placed on probation by regulatory agencies for recruiting violations, had seen two coaches reassigned and another fired, and had hungered through one streak of 27 games without tasting victory.

Reed flew into Huntington early Sunday to begin a month long investigation into the cause of the crash, which he described as "one of the greatest tragedies in the annals of aviation history in our country."

U Thant Warns U.N. Of Housing Shortage

(AP)-U.N. Secretary General U Thant says 47 million new dwellings will have to be built every year between now and the year 2000 to house the world's growing population.

He makes that estimate in a report soon to come up in the General Assembly's Social Committee. He says the building industry is not geared for the job and governments and international organizations are not doing enough to see that it gets done.

Thant's 83 page report concerns "the problems and priorities confronting member states in the field of housing, building and planning." The assembly asked him for it last year and agreed to take it up as a matter of high priority in the current three month session, started Sept. 15.

The secretary general cites U.N. estimates that between the years 1970 and 2000, world population will grow from about 3.6 billion to about 6 billion. He says that means about 1.4 billion new dwellings in the next 30 years will require a new will by governments and the international community. Programs must be created, made effective, and integrated in national plans.

"Building construction remains unproductive, disorganized, underdeveloped, inefficient and primitive," he says, and it must be geared up for its big job through improved efficiency in the manufacture of building materials, improved productivity at the building site and the conversion of construction into "a single highly integrated industrial process."

Frosh Queen Voting Takes Place This Week

Five finalists have been chosen for the 1970-1971 Freshmen Queen Contest and voting by freshmen students to select a winner will take place Monday thru Thursday in the Student Union Lobby this week.

The contests are sponsored yearly by the Maroon Keys and the finalists are selected on the basis of a variety of talents and characteristics.

This year's contestants are from left to right, Joy Felske, Diane Halvey, Mary Kurtz, Elissa Segal and Marcha Vinal. Pictures of the ladies will be on display in the Student Union Lobby and announcement of the winner will take place at ceremonies preceding the UMass-Boston College football game Saturday, Nov. 21.

The Maroon Keys once again request the support of the majority of Freshmen students in choosing this year's Freshmen Queen. (MDC Photos by Gib Fullerton)

National Committee Man Speaks to YSA Group

Lee Smith, a member of the national committee of the Young Socialist Alliance, will speak on "The Current State of the Student Radical Movement" tonight at 8 PM in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The talk will deal with the different tendencies in American radical politics today, giving a brief history, a description of present political position, and potential for growth of such organizations as the Young Workers Liberation League (YWLL), the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL), Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), and the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA).

Smith will discuss the views of each of these organizations on such issues in the Movement as Women's and Third World Liberation, the anti-War movement, and the tactics for achieving a radical transformation of American society. If you have ever been confused by the alphabet soup of Left politics, tonight is the night to learn where every group stands.

Smith is a member of the national committee of the Young Socialist Alliance and is also associate editor of the International Socialist Review. He was previously news editor of WCCO in Minneapolis and the associate editor of the Minnesota Daily.

He has long been an active participate in American radical politics and so will speak from first hand experience on the different tendencies in today's Movement.

The Militant Forum is a weekly series of lectures and discussions on radical politics. It is presented as a service to the UMass community by the Young Socialist Alliance.

CC Housing Planned For Students During Thanksgiving Vacation

By CLAUDIA HAMBERG
News Editor

The Campus Center Governing Board voted last week to direct the Campus Center management to house dormitory students during the Thanksgiving recess, with the difference between the Campus Center room fee and the fee set for dormitory accommodations to be subsidized by the CCG Board.

This part of the motion, as passed, reads: "Moved to direct the Campus Center management to house dormitory students certified by the Housing Office during the Thanksgiving recess, 1970, for the fee of $18 per double room, per night. Thirteen dollars of the fee will be subsidized by the CCG Board and the remaining $5 will be billed equally divided by the two students."

The CCG Board followed by one day Student Senate action on the vacation housing issue, raised because of student opposition to University's policy of opening dorms during vacations on an alphabetical basis.

The Senate moved that dorms may volunteer use of their facilities for students not going home, and receive any profit resulting from fees paid by students staying in the rooms.

The CCG Board motion provides only for Thanksgiving, 1970, housing. It is hoped that the voluntary system will be in operation before this year's Christmas recess.

Three amendments proposed by CCG Board treasurer Robert Nims were added to the original motion presented by the space and finance committees.

One recommended that the Student Senate and the Treasurer's office reach agreement on future dorm vacation use and financing. The second expressed support for a senate bill on voluntary dorm system.

The third amendment resolved that the Athletic Department will be billed for the fees of any student required to remain because of athletic events or practice.

In discussion before passage of the motion, Associate Dean of Student, Daniel Fitzpatrick was questioned on housing during past Thanksgiving recesses. He noted that an average of thirty students were housed for the recesses of past years, but that the number to be housed this year cannot be certain until the application dedline passes. Eighty double rooms in the Campus Center are open for the holiday weekend at this time.

Draft Resistance On "Focus" Tonight

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA, will broadcast an interview with an American draft resister now living in Canada.

The interview, presented as a special feature of "Focus," was taped last September by "Focus" moderator Kenneth Mosakowski, who traveled to Canada to gain information about the "Toronto Anti-Draft Programme" one of numerous organizations which aids American military deserters and draft resisters in crossing the border and re-establishing themselves safely in Canada.

The draft resister, Darryl Robertson, formerly of Concord, New Hampshire, graduated from UMass in 1969 with a major in astronomy. In his senior year in high school, Robertson won first place in the New England Science Fair for his study of the mass of the planet Jupiter. He was elected to a national honor society, Phi Eta Sigma, in his freshman year in college, and while a cadet in the Air Force ROTC program at the University, he received the Chicago Tribune Award for superior academix achievement.

Robertson applied for conscientious objector status early in 1969, but his claim was rejected both by his local draft board and by the New Hampshire State Appeals Board. Faced with prospects of arrest and a possible five-year prison term and $10,000 fine for refusing to be inducted into the Army, he decided to leave the country and start anew in Canada.

Tonight's interview traces the events of Robertson's escape and his efforts to begin a new life as an expatriot in exile.

Directory Of Speakers Offered By Mortar Board

The UMass chapter of Mortar Board, senior women's honor society, is in the process of organizing an Internal Speakers Bureau for the University campus. The project will provide a directory of speakers willing to address any dormitory or organization and various topics available.

Any students, faculty, administrators, or staff interested in speaking on topics of their choice may be listed in the Internal Speakers Bureau directory by filling out forms provided by Mortar Board. These forms may be obtained at the Dean of Women's Office, by calling Jane Killinger at 546-5498, or by writing to Mortar Board, RSO Office.

This new service office project was begun by Mortar Board to help the many dorms, clubs, and organizations looking for speakers for lectures and informal get-togethers. Copies of the directory of speakers and topics will be distributed to all dormitories, fraternities and sororities, RSO groups, and campus organizations.

The UMass Isogon Chapter of Mortar Board includes 20 senior women and functions mainly as a service group. As another project, Mortar Board members visit high schools across the state where they present slide programs and answer questions that high school students may have about UMass.

MFA Play Something Special

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Staff Reporter

My usual trite notes that are scrawled on most play programs were absent Saturday night as I reviewed The Eccentricities of a Nightingale, the MFA thesis production of Miss Judith Willner. In their place were comments, not about the blocking or the play's cohesiveness, nor about the set design or the acting; rather, the scribblings were thoughts and phrases that the production had induced in my mind:

"....don't want someone I can control...we meet people, love and leave them... 'companionship' is something, but it's not enuf'... knee against thigh- pressure of my knee against your thigh...'that takes the curse off a little'...'the poetry of science...'before you love, you have to learn how to walk over snow'...little people fascinate her, they're so short....:'some people die empty handed'...'I'm eccentric, I'm not so eccentric that I don't have that ordinary human need for love'...and in our own way, we survive, each of us, alone..."

Eccentricities, not unlike a campfire on a cold night or early morning, or a candle, placed on a table between you and fine music, contained that intangibility that is capable of transporting the viewer far away into his own thoughts, while keeping him addicted and transfixed to the warmth of the stage. The theme was one familiar with our age, and indeed with all ages -- how an "eccentric", a person of special qualities, copes with his world. A common theme it is, but the justice done to it by the playwrite, Tennessee Williams, and the cast and the director made it an uncommon experience.

One last note. Debbie Hull, a junior, played the part of the eccentric nightingale. To keep the intensity of character that Miss Hull kept for two hours, to actually live and think the eccentric, as Miss Hull lived and thought, is an accomplishment that should be recognized far beyond the stage at the Commonwealth Room.

Resident Dance Program To Begin With Taylor

The first of two three-day residencies this season by leading American contemporary dance companies will take place at UMass this week with the appearance of the Paul Taylor Dance Company.

Tuesday evening, the company will perform Lento with music by Haydn; Big Bertha with music from a collection of The Gay Nineties Melody Museum of St. Louis and Churchyard with music by Cosmos Savage. Wednesday, the Paul Taylor Company will offer Post Meridian with music for magnetic tape by Evelyn Loherfer DeBoeck; Agathe's Tale with music by Carlos Surinach and Public Domain with music collage by John Herbert McDowell.

All works have been choreographed by Paul Taylor. Both performances are scheduled for 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Reserved tickets are priced at $1.50 for all students; $2.50 for all faculty and $3 for others. They may be obtained through the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before each concert.

The residency will conclude Thursday, Nov. 19 at 10:30 a.m. when Mr. Taylor will give a master class in the studio of the Women's Physical Education Building. Concert ticket buyers may obtain complimentary tickets to the master class from the Fine Arts Council Office. The three-day residency is jointly sponsored by the University Fine Arts Council, Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities and The National Endowment for the Arts.

Cannonball Adderly Slated This Week

The Julian "Cannonball" Adderly Quintet will be in-residence at UMass on Friday and Saturday, under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council. Two evening concerts and two seminar/workshops by this noted group on the general theme: "This history and evolution of black music" will take place during the residency.

Concerts at 8:00 P.M. in Bowker Auditorium are scheduled for Friday, November 20th and Saturday, November 21st. Reserved tickets for these events are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2.00 for UMass grad. students and other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty/staff and $3.00 for the general public and may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before each concert. A telephone reaching both box offices is 545-0202.

The first of two seminar/workshops by this outstanding black ensemble will be held in the School of Education Auditorium at 1:30 P.M. on Friday, November 20th. The final seminar/workshop will be at 2:00 P.M. in The Black Cultural Center (Mill House) at 2:00 P.M. on Saturday, November 21. The seminar/workshops will be offered free of charge.

Black Actor's Group Play Featured Part of Ed. Week

The Black Actors Group, performing in the play "FOR LOVE OF FREEDOM," has been described by Irv Letofsky, Minneapolis Tribune Staff Writer, as "just about the best thing to come out of St. Paul since Scotch Tape." Through the efforts of Kapa Sigma Pi Honor Society and the Human Relations Center, UMass students have the opportunity to see this performance twice during the School of Education's Marathon.

The group is composed of thirteen black former or present students of St. Paul's Washington High School, aged fourteen to twenty-one who have molded into an amateur performing ensemble that hopes to envolve itself into a professional touring company.

Irv Letofsky's article goes on to describe the performance in the following manner:

"The show is an hour and a half review of Afro-American history told in dance, music, and drama, written and directed by 18-year-old Carlos Anderson, who wants to study theater at the University of Minnesota.

"But that sounds too dull. Whereas there is nothing new added to the story of black oppression, it is told with such spirit and talent that the standing ovation was the only obvious conclusion of a powerful evening.

"It may sound charitable to make such judgement of young amateurs but it is fully deserved, in the simple sense of creating theatrical excitement alone. The production displays a wonderful feeling for ensemble, rarely found in our region. Some voices are strong, some music excellent, some acting very close to perfect. (I suspect that some of the tears are a result of real spiritual pain.)

"The story is told in five scenes--Africa, Slavery, Freedom, Church and Daily Life. The church scene, which is used to emphasize the black man's devotion to Christianity, nonetheless is done mainly as a comic parody of a black man's service. A splendid satire.

"The finale covers the black community divided by ideological arguments that resolve only with a unified demand for freedom.

"The group consists of Carlos, Rhonda, LaVerne and Crystal Anderson; Darryl and Gary Howard; Derek, Robyn and Shawn Mayberry; Denise Johnson, Michael Lamb, Robert Williams and Peggy Willis."

Mr. Letofsky has not been the only individual to commend the play and cast. They have received state acclaim for their performances, and have gotten personal rewards such as letters from inmates at Stillwater State Prison, where they had the opportunity to do two performances. They have also had receptions given by prominant individuals and organizations in Minnesota.

The play will be given Thursday night, November 19, at Amherst Regional High School and Friday afternoon, November 20 at the School of Education. Tickets for both performances are $2.00 for the general public and $1.50 for undergraduates and may be obtained at the Ticket Office in the Student Union, University of Massachusetts (you may write for tickets there). You will also be able to purchase some tickets at Mills House on Saturdays between the hours of ten and twelve as well as in room 125 in the School of Education and Wysocki House.

Seize The Town

The town of Amherst, to the casual observer is a quaint, liberal commnity, scenic in the old Yankee New England tradition, liberal in the college town tradition.

But the town of Amherst is not the most friendly of places for students. In fact, it has become at times, a menacing, oppressive village that really does not respect its citizens' rights, at least student rights.

For students are the principal citizens. They are the virtual complete economy, the main source of housing. If all students got up and left today, Amherst would have no economy, would be bankrupt, would be unable to maintain much of what it has built.

That's why it's hard to understand, why freaks are harassed at Log's by Town cops, why slum lords maintain garbage pits called apartments and charge inflated rents to students, why merchants, up prices to ridiculous levels.

There are hazy facts about residency requirements for voting. But, the fact is, that though students invariably register to vote in their home towns, they should do it in Amherst where they are most affected, where they no the local situations.

It can be said that Amherst is the main residence of students. They leave the campus for three months a year for what is officially termed vacation. Why can't they make their voting residence the place they live the majority of the year, Amherst, instead of someplace they are living in for only the fraction of the time.

University students could easily have a sizeable say in the town that most affects them. Hopefully a substantial student voice in town government could curtail the wholesale opression of the main source of Amherst economy her student population.

The Human Condition - II

"And this is how it's done, isn't it? This is how you love? This is what is expected of one, isn't it?".

The lonely people walk down and up the Southwest Mall at night.

One of them plays a recorder in the tunnel.

Marion is working in the almost-deserted library.

A candle in the center of a room, and the record plays the music of a man, alone, with his music.

How many are there, people, alone, with not even one something that keeps them living, not even one someone that keeps them loving?

"I woke before day to streets washed with grey, shook the dust from my eyes, from my lips the lies, sight turning to a shadowed face I had held by the grace of God–a questionable gift."

There are no men, there are no women, no blacks and no whites, no Christians and no Heathens. There are only lonely people and people in love. The human condition.

DeGaulle died last week. Before him, Richard Hofstadter, Wayland Smith, and Al Lonon. Hector Rojas passed away, too, on the cold, stone, sheltered steps of a building on lower Broadway–his blood was black from gangrene. But let us not mourn the death of men, let us celebrate their lives.

The boy sent his love carnations. He should have sent her love.

Whether it is what Schumer once berated as "puppy love", or whether it is Camus' one or two true loves of a century, it is real. For love is not an object of nomenclature, but a process, a movement, a continuing , an exploring of the limits of self and of the depths of another.

"JULIE. Why was I so terribly attracted to you? The weak to the strong, the falling to the rising? Or was it love? Is that love? Do you know what love is?

JEAN. Do I? You bet I do. Do you think I never had a girl before?"

Who cares about those who love their neighbors? How about loving their enemies?

Zhivago and Lara in the ice blue summer house in winter, Zhivago writing while Lara sleeps. "Breakfast at Tiffanys", kissing in the rain. Joe Buck and Ratzo Rizzo.

"Then the lover
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow"
(As You Like It)

So we sang with our blood and we laughed with out tears, we loved with our breaths in the youth of our years of our years.

Spotting Feds

WASHINGTON–In the past month we have seen 15 FBI agents drop out of the John Jay College of Criminal Jutice in New York because a professor made critical remarks about J. Edgar Hoover, the FBI's stalwart leader.

Following this, 11 FBI employees were ordered to drop out of the course on "Violence in America" at American University because the professor there cast aspersions on Mr. Hoover's leadership.

There will probably be more of this as time goes on, and it is conceivable that every university in the country could soon be on J. Edgar Hoover's black list.

What isn't generally known is that there is a conspiracy among university professors to criticize J. Edgar Hoover publicly.

This is why they're doing it:

It is assumed that the FBI has planted undercover agents in all the major universities in the country. These undercover agents look exactly like radical students. They have long hair, wear beards, go shoeless and use all the obscene words. In the past they have been impossible to spot on campus.

But not long ago a professor a Midwestern college made some derogatory remarks about J. Edgar Hoover. Three of the radical students immediately walked out of the class in a huff. Everyone was very surprised when they announced they were leaving the school.

It turned out they were FBI undercover agents, whose job it had been to infiltrate the radical movement.

They had been ordered to put up with any indignity to win the confidence of the radicals, except to sit there and take criticism of Mr. Hoover.

A few weeks later in California, a professor in government statistics made the point that the higher the crime rate rose in the United States, the more kudos J. Edgar Hoover received from Congress and the Administration. The professor was trying to show that bad news does not necessarily bring criticism from government. He said that as far as his statistics showed, there hasn't been a year when the FBI did not report a rise in crime in the United States, and each time it did, Mr. Hoover received congratulations from the President.

Two radical students in his class broke into tears and announced they could no longer stay in school. It was a blow to everyone, because one of the undercover agents had just been elected president of the SDS and had been in charge of an antiwar demonstration in Gov. Reagan's office.

Well, these two incidents suddenly made professors all over the country realize that the easiest way to spot an FBI undercover agent was to criticize J. Edgar Hoover.

And so professors are now waging a campaign to make remarks about the head of the FBI.

The FBI knows, of course, what is happening, but they're caught in a bind. If they keep their agents on campus to catch the people responsible for student violence, they will be exposing FBI employees to defamatory remarks about Mr. Hoover.

So far the FBI has left it up to the individual agents to decide whether to stay or leave. But they're proud that in every case so far when someone has sullied J. Edgar Hoover's name, the FBI undercover agent has indignantly dropped out of school.

Campus Comment

Just A Heavy . . .

To the Editor:

On Saturday night, a female undergraduate was carried out of the Cage on a stretcher, after having been trampled upon by a mob of students who were attempting to force their way in without tickets. Several people I know witnessed the incident and were rather shocked by it. In spite of the sorrow and sympathy which I feel for the victim, I was not really shocked to hear that the trampling had occured. Saturday night was merely an extreme expression of a general pattern of inconsiderateness and rudeness that is an accepted and cherished part of dorm life at this university.

There is very little respect for privacy inside a typical low or high rise dorm. There are many different types of people living on one corridor. Some of them share common interests and personality traits; many don't. But the one thing all students share is the corridor on which they live.

For the past three years I have been rather disgusted by the manner in which so many students ignore the rights of those people who desire to study or sleep. It is not uncommon for a stereo to be blasting from the hours of 12 to 4 A.M. nor is it any less consistant to observe many inconsiderate individuals running up and down the corridor during the early hours of the morning, talking in loud voices, and completely ignoring the fact that they might have woken up anywhere from one to thirty-five people.

But the tragedy of their behavior is much more deeply rooted than the noise level. We must look at the foundation and general attitude which underlies this rudeness. Usually when a person is blasting his stereo, he is not attempting to be offensive to others on his corridor. Most of the time the thought doesn't even enter his mind that his loudness is offensive. In order for a person to be offensive, there must exist an individual or a group to offend. This type of rudeness can be ruled out, because for the most part loud people never come close to conceptualizing the relationship of one corridor and thirty people.

The height of this inconsiderateness is evident when certain individuals begin to mock the entire concept of privacy after they have been confronted, and the concept explained to their intellect. This type of rudeness is manifested in such action as living on a "quiet corridor", only to have a number of misfits yell at the top of their lungs: "Quiet you guys, this is the quiet corridor!" Pretty funny, huh? Well relate this type of ignorance, immaturity, and fine reflection of upbringing to the girl being trampled at the Cage. That's even funnier!

. . . Homecoming!

To the Editor:
Attention

We accuse the pigs at the Saturday night concert of the following things:

1) Protecting only the economic interest of the university by selectively picking out people trying to get into the concert when they are actually living beings who are trying to participate in their culture. The number of pigs, the number of busts, and the complete harrassment and terrorism is indicative of the increase of repressive forces on this campus, and the "solution" of the failings of this academic institution.

2) As proof of the first charge was the obvious disregard for the safety of all the students there by not making any attempts to alleviate the pushing in the crowd, and then opening only one door that only allowed two people in at a time, of a line of two thousand. The result was a surge for the door, attempted busting of those that had no tickets, and as evidence of the force involved the fence was pushed over and many people were crushed against it as it went down. WHERE WERE THE PIGS THEN? It was the students that made the final regulation of the crowd, and helped to prevent injuries. As usual the students were the only ones to support their own actions, and the pigs were only there to protect the imperialists' interests.

3) It was not until the doors were literally smashed down was the concert declared free. This shows that the pigs interest is not in accord with the students safety and culture. As another example of concern with only money the pigs, concert managers, and university planners try to pack thousands of people into a crummy, small, outdated building, yet they spend millions on conventions, the Campus Center Hotel, fancy bars, fancy cork walls, football stadiums for the alumni, and a Fine Arts center that is billed as the "Gateway to UMass." What are we, a bunch of whores in a whorehouse? To be admired on the outside, but with nothing left for ourselves? Furthermore this is only done on selective weekends, i.e. Homecoming-the name and whole concept connected with it is totally irrelavent to the students and their interests.

The blue pigs are regulated and controlled by the pigs in gray to only protect their own vested interests, and to make decisions that control our lives without giving a damn for us. This is a question of student rights that we have been cheated out of. We demand the resignation and public apologies of the following: the chief of pigs and every little swine, Tippo and his henchmen, the concert managers, and every organization and person on this campus that has sold out and sold us out with them.

B.O.P.U.!

To the Editor;

STUDENTS, have you noticed a peculiar stench flowing from the Southwest portion of this campus? If so, you know that there are no washing machines left in Moore, Pierpont, and Cance House. Apparently, they all have been ripped off and the washing machine company has removed ALL of the machines from each of these three dorms. In order for an inhabitant of one of these dorms to put through a laundry, he would be forced to invade the rights of Washington Tower, the closest dorm with operable washing facilities. This invasion would cause two serious problems for the residents of Washington: 1. an increased security risk due to a large number of strange people entering the dorm, and 2. This would cause a lack of availability of their own washing facilities!

Why should 1400 students, the number of residents in these 4 dorms, have to suffer for the actions of a few vandals and also, for the PIGheadedness of the washing machine company who place the value of their property above the cleanliness of their patrons!

The Answer

To the Editor:

I would like to address myself to the various parties to the Mideast dilemma.

If you will grant:

That the biggest single contributor to the Mideast quandary was British duplicity, but there is plenty of blame for everyone else involved;

That Israel really does exist and is the home of 2.5 million Jews, among them the descendents of the 600,000 who were expelled from Arab lands;

That Palestine would also exist were it not for the imperialist invasion by 7 neighboring countries in 1948.

That recent experience shows that Jews cannot depend on their rights or even their lives being respected by neighboring states; and that the causes and consequences of this anxiety/hostility will take decades to erase;

That many Arabs fear that they would be second class citizens in the State of Israel, and seek a nationalistic self-determinism within which they hope to realize satisfaction of their just needs and desires:

Then:

Why not rise above subsidiary name-calling, hate-mongering, and blame searching; why not accept the fact that both Zionists and Arabs were fundamentally victims of conflicting promises made them by a desperate Britain?

Why not seek a solution within the limits of reality, a solution acknowledging the legitimacy of conflicting claims, but sacrificing some self-righteous demands in the interest of a just and durable compromise.

Why not two countries, as so often proposed: an Israeli and a Palestinian nation, satisfying the legitimate desires of both parties for self-determination. Why not two cousin states, an economic union, a thoroughly progressive common market in the Middle East? Why not this reasonable compromise, which could offer peace, prosperity, and self-awareness to the place where it was all first at?

RICHARD B. COLLIER

The Unfallen Sky

To The Editor:

The last time most of us were on campus, the sky was about to fall in. President Nixon had gone against the advice of Chicken Little and...well, Everybody Who Is Anybody....and attacked the North Vietnamese bases in Cambodia. We all "knew" what might result: an Asian Land War of Momentous Proportions, Chinese Volunteers, Nuclear Holocaust; even worse, adverse world opinion! Everywhere some big name on campus was warning us of the impending disaster; warning that one, two, or all of the above would soon occur.

I'm glad I didn't run off to Canada or Australia. I'll be more sceptical next time.

Perhaps we should all develop that healthy scepticism which once characterized Americans. Getting an education at college, rather than an indoctrination, requires a questioning attitude, not only about Motherhood and Apple Pie, but also about the Welfare State and Grape.

When the liberal-left element on campus asks you to question your values, you might direct a few questions in their direction. Like:

Who finances dissent in a country where the government controls the jobs?

What stimulates creativity? Is it connected with economic freedom?

Why would anyone work in a factory in the early industrial revolution in England? How many died? Now many died while Communist Russia or China industrialized?

Is it capitalism or government welfarism which is responsible for the economic and moral plight of American Blacks?

If socialism and communism mean equality, why do the Russians treat Russian Jews as second-class citizens?

I wish I had thought to ask my professors these questions earlier, but now that the sky hasn't fallen, perhaps I will. This semester I may even get up the nerve to ask why the sky hasn't fallen; that is, why Chinese volunteers aren't in Cambodia, why our casualty figures are down, why more troops are being withdrawn, why.....

Of course, questioning my profs' opinions may involve being a bit more radical than they'd like me to be. You ask too, O.K.?

New UMass NUC

To The Editor:

Last year, in response to a sense of isolation among radicals and to the growing necessity for a sense of community and mutual support, several faculty and graduate students in the area formed a local chapter of New University Conference. NUC is a national organization of radicals who work in, around, and in spite of institutions of higher education.

Thus far NUC has primarily served a support and communication function for radicals in the 5-college area. We have also begun to formulate possible outlines for a radical studies program. This year we hope to continue and expand last year's activities and to initiate some new programs. There is the possibility of our doing a radio show and the necessity for an organized response to the conservatively oriented falsely labeled Faculty Group for Academic Freedom.

NUC is not committed to any rigid program however - it is non sectarian in its politics, and open to developing to serve the various needs of radical academics. It also provides a means whereby we can affiliate with and learn from other radicals around the country. We will be holding an open meeting this Monday, November 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 817 of the New Campus Center.

We look forward to meeting you.

Tomorrow's Schedule For Something Else, '70

"Something Else '70" is a five-day happening at the School of Education this week. Subtitled "Alternate Futures in Education," this week long symposium and multi-media fair offers talks, tapings, music, drama, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, and numerous other activities. All university students and faculty and anyone else who is interested are invited to attend. All classes in the School of Education are cancelled during the fair.

University students may earn modular credits by participating in "Something Else '70". Each hour of participation will offer one-half mod credit, and fifteen mod credits will equal one graduation credit from the School of Education.

The Daily Collegian presents abbreviated schedules of "Something Else '70" activities. Due to space limitations, the schedule cannot be printed here in its entirety. Completed schedules will be available in the School of Education and the Northeast Area, where most of the activities are being held.

Women's Lib Panel Set On Wednesday

Amherst Women's Liberation is presenting a panel discussion on the repeal of the abortion law on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. in the Amherst Junior High School auditorium. Co-sponsoring this event are the Northampton Unity Alliance (the Unitarian-Universalist women's organization) and M.O.R.A.L. (Massachusetts Organization to Repeal the Abortion Law).

Speakers on the panel will be John Chittum, M.D., of Amherst; Sam Johnson, Chaplain, United Christian Fellowship; and Tim Purdy, social worker. Purdy has worked with the Division of Child Guardianship in Massachusetts and has dealt with cases of child abuse. The other three panel members are Robin Dizard and Judy Moss, Amherst residents, and Sue Carpenter, Smith College student.

They will give personal testimony to the ways in which they have been victimized by the abortion law as it now stands. Chairwoman will be Gretchen Wheelock of Amherst.

The purpose of this public discussion is to educate the public to the need for repeal of this law, sponsors say. The panel will present its arguments for repeal and solicit the views of the people in attendance.

A similar program was presented last May at UMass. Amherst Women's Liberation believes the subject should be given wider public discussion in this area to foster a better understanding of the issues at stake its leaders say. Their contention is that women should have the legal right to decide for themselves, with medical advice, as to the spacing and number of children they wish to have.

An initiative petition is being circulated in the state to have a bill to repeal the abortion law brought before the state legislature. Copies of the petition will be on hand for interested citizens to sign.

campus interviews

DECEMBER 12, 1970

WE'D LIKE TO TALK TO YOU ABOUT

. . . career opportunities that match your interests and education
. . . our long-established management training program
. . . our diverse and growing corporation
. . . our nationwide facilities
. . . our corporate philosophy of caring about people

Now's the time to sign up at your placement office for an interview with the Bethlehem Steel Loop Course recruiter. This could be the start of something big!

And just what IS the Bethlehem Steel Loop Course? It's our management development program for graduates with bachelors' or advanced degrees.

Bethlehem loopers spend four weeks at our home offices in Bethlehem, Pa. Then they report to the appropriate plants or departments for their first assignments. From there, anything is possible.

Where would YOU fit into the Loop Course? Check your degree or the one most similar to it:

MECHANICAL ENGINEERING—Engineering or mechanical maintenance departments of steel plants, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyards. Fuel and combustion departments. Supervision of production operations. Marine engineering assignments in Shipbuilding Department. Also: Sales or Research.

METALLURGICAL ENGINEERING—Metallurgical departments of steel plants and manufacturing operations. Engineering and service divisions. Technical and supervisory positions in steelmaking departments and rolling mills. Also: Research or Sales.

CHEMICAL ENGINEERS—Technical and supervisory positions in coke works, including production of by-product chemicals. Fuel and combustion departments, including responsibility for operation and maintenance of air and water pollution control equipment. Engineering and metallurgical departments. Steelmaking operations. Also: Research or Sales.

INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING—Positions in steel plants, fabricating works, shipyards, and mines. Engineering and maintenance departments. Supervision of steelmaking, rolling, manufacturing, and fabricating operations. Also: Sales.

CIVIL ENGINEERING—Fabricated Steel Construction assignments in engineering, field erection, or works management. Steel plant, mine, or shipyard assignments in engineering, construction, and maintenance. Supervision of production operations. Sales Department assignments as line salesman or sales engineer (technical service to architects and engineers).

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING—Steel plant, fabricating works, mining operations, and shipyard electrical engineering, construction, and maintenance departments. Technical and supervisory positions in large production operations involving sophisticated electrical and electronic equipment. Also: Research or Sales.

MINING ENGINEERING—Our Mining Department operates coal and iron ore mining operations and limestone quarries, many of which are among the most modern and efficient in the industry. This 10,000-man activity offers unlimited opportunities to mining engineers. Also: Research.

NAVAL ARCHITECTS AND MARINE ENGINEERS—Graduates are urged to inquire about opportunities in our Shipbuilding Department, including the Central Technical Division, our design and engineering organization. Also: Traffic.

OTHER TECHNICAL DEGREES—Every year we recruit loopers with technical degrees other than those listed above. Seniors enrolled in such curricula are encouraged to sign up for an interview.

ACCOUNTANTS—Graduates in accounting or business administration (24 hours of accounting are preferred) are recruited for training for supervisory assignments in our 3,000-man Accounting Department.

OTHER NON-TECHNICAL DEGREES—Graduates with degrees in liberal arts, business, and the humanities are invited to discuss opportunities in the Sales Department. Some non-technical graduates may be chosen to fill openings in steel plant operations and other departments.

WHEN YOU SIGN UP be sure to pick up a copy of our booklet, "Bethlehem Steel's Loop Course." We think you will like what we have to say.

Homecoming '70 . . . Ho Hum

UMass students and members of the Peace Parade company "let the sunshine in" on a rainy Sunday afternoon in the cage, closing out this Homecoming 1970 weekend.

''Hair'' Cast Bring Sunshine For Many On A Rainy Sunday

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

It could have been the day, and then again it could have been the Cage, but more likely it probably was that PEACE PARADE wasn't quite the show we have been bombarded with press releases about. It was far from the best concert ever performed in the Cage, as a matter of fact considering the Cage was condemned, perhaps the show inside should have been also.

What the concert amounted to was songs from HAIR amplified beyond belief and thrown together without any thought to cohesion. The cast performed them well, almost always with a good deal of enthusiasm. Yet somehow these people were only performing, there wasn't the feeling of a "communal happening" which we heard so much about.

Which isn't to say there weren't at times some worthwhile numbers. Newcomer Bob Cotter was exhiliarating in his two songs and really individually added enjoyment to the production as a whole. And the company brought the Cafe to life with their fine versions of "For What Its's Worth" and "Honkey-Tonk Woman. (The latter bringing to everyone's attention a maxi-skirted chick who danced with the best of groupie intentions in mind.)

Unfortunately more often than not the songs fell into a static pattern which matched the boring, concert-type stage action. What makes HAIR work so well is its fluidity and great originality. When, as in this show, this material is stretched without much regard to content, it made for a boring afternoon.

Admittedly this is a minority opinion. The fairly good crowd gave the performers more than an enthusiastic ovation as they joined the cast on the stage for a finale of a seemingly endless "Let The Sunshine In." People about me amazed me as they each were having a cartharsis left and right. Those in the production seemingly were having the same intense feeling, yet I could help but sense they all held hands and peace paraded all the way to the bank.

For what the entire "happening" amounted to was a dirty television variety hour staged with as much originality as the Lawrence Welk show. The humor, for instance, never made it out of the locker room (and I have read funnier material in toilet stalls). Especially in bad taste was Paul Jabora acting out his masturbatory fantasies, it was consistent with his performance throughout. Even his "Fairy Tale" sequence, a retelling of Wizard of Oz--Alice in Wonderland with campy asides, was material so cliched-ridden that a junior-high student satirist would avoid it.

The girls were all talented, each possessing good, strong voices. The problem remains the only way they approached a song was a quiet start with a booming finish. This quickly became boring and even ruined James Taylor's "Fire and Rain", which deserved more than an Ethel Merman treatment.

I wonder just who was responsible for this rather contrived assortment of songs, songs which make up an innovative Broadway score but hardly standup on their own. Then feebly done without any action besides continual discotheques dancing and an occasional obscene gesture, it seemed a group of shrewd backers have managed again to take advantage of that lucrative college audience. It makes me wonder just what good concerts in the cage are, but going by the crowd reaction yesterday afternoon they are here to stay and this review is the opinion of a minority-of-one.

Soul, Latin Groups Split Friday Show

Rare Earth sang and played their instruments Friday night, for a while overcoming the chronic bad vibrations in Curry Hicks Cage.

The group, which is signed with Motown, performed with a sort of wholesome-heavy enthusiasm. Their music, though entirely different from that of the Temptations, whose songs they borrow, is played with precision and spirit. This isn't surprising. Motown groups in general feature slick, complex arrangements and lots of talent.

Few of their songs are written by members of the band, another Motown characteristic (the Miracles are a major exception).

Rare Earth and its drummer Pete Riveria (above) brought their "Motown" sound to the Friday night audience.

Rare Earth is made up of drummer Pete Riveria, who also does lead vocals; guitarist-vocalist Rod Richards; organist Kenny James; bassman-vocalist John Persh and Gil Bridges who sings and plays sax, tamborine and flute. Also there's Ed Guzman who plays conga drums, well, and looks rather like something off the set of "Curse of the Werewolf."

A variety of talent like that, in a song like "Get Ready", can produce music that is certainly interesting, if not great. All in all, Rare Earth was pretty good stuff.

Blues Image also appeared in the concert. They are billed as a Latin-rock band, the Latin provided by a conga drummer who played well but didn't seem to have much effect on the rest of the group.

They got together best on their hit song "Ride, Captain, Ride", which was no doubt well received by the gum-chewing elements of the Homecoming audience. But blues songs like "Parchment Farm" just don't make it when rendered by top-40 oriented groups like this one.

Blues Imag's music is fine, as far as it goes, but that's not very.

The Latin--flavored music of Blues Image completed Friday night Cage concert bringing cheers from their youthful audience.

What's A Curry Hicks?

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Fine Arts Staff

I suppose this review should be headlined "How to Win Friends and Influence People - starring the Homecoming Committee." But in fairness to those people, and to the performers, it won't be.

Who needs Curry Hicks Cage? A school of UMass' caliber has no place for a dilapidated old fire-trap that won't hold even one-third of the student body. Anyone who got stuck, like I did because the Committee in its wisdom didn't hold reserved seats past 5:30, sitting anywhere near the back couldn't even see the stage much less understand what anyone up there said.

David Frye's supposedly funny, and at times tasteless act, came through as an almost unintelligible babble. What few snatches of his performance I was able to hear didn't impress me at all. The trouble is that I actually enjoy listening to him when he appears on TV. He needs to work on his manners before he is allowed back on a stage in front of an audience.

Traffic was probably the high point of the whole evening. And even they had their problems too. The music was good but it seemed that they were losing it every once in a while. They'd play along and I'd start to feel something building and pow! they'd lose the beat. Some of their numbers were done to perfection. John Barleycorn Must Die came through as a perfect blending of guitars and voices and they did a good job with their last set, Glad and Freedom Rider.

I wasn't disappointed when Buffy Ste. Marie sang about buffaloes. She always does. But in spite of that she put on an adequate show. Again, it wasn't entirely her fault. The acoustics in the Cage are atrocious and her strong, vibrant voice sometimes sounded harsh and cold. It's always a wonder to me how performers like her don't get sick of playing the same songs for every concert they're in. The Universal Soldier has just about worn out its welcome. Goin' Up Cripple Creek was a surprising interlude. It has an odd air about it that I've never heard before. And her encore, Until It's Time For You to Go was completely predictable.

In spite of the fact that David Frye was obnoxious, Buffy repetitious, and Traffic a little unpolished; in spite of Curry Hicks Cage; in spite of the huge crowds that surely must have been anticipated; in spite of the seemingly thousands of policemen and in spite of the weather and my seat, I thought it was a good way to kill a Saturday evening.

A Big Eagle In UMass' Future

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

That's a mighty big Eagle the UMass football team will have to face next Saturday. His record is 6-2. UMass' is 4-4-1. That Eagle is coming off of a very impressive 21-6 victory over Pittsburgh University. UMass has just defeated a Wildcat, 24-14.

A few moments after UMass' victory, its coach Vic Fusia was asked if he had started to think about Boston College, that big Eagle, or if he would put off thinking about B.C. for a few hours, to let the Wildcat win soak in.

He chuckled a little bit and then answered truthfully, "I've been thinking about Boston College ever since the middle of the summer."

He said more, "Do you realizethat B.C.is presently beating Pitt, 21-6, and that Harris has thrown only nine passes so far? You know what that means."

What this does mean to the coach is that the Eagle was running Pittsburgh to death, and this has to worry him because the strongest point of the Redman game is its defense against the rush. After all, that defense had just held the New Hampshire Wildcats to a minus seven yards on the ground.

That defense has given up 17 touchdowns all year and only eight of them have been scored on rushes. Eight have come through the air and one has been the result of a 73-yard punt return. Getting back to the eight that came via the land route, one was 11 yards long, another was six, a third was five, a fourth was three and four were from a mere one yard away.

Does the Eagle know this? And if he does, does it strike chords of fear in his heart? One can only guess at this stage of affairs. After all, the Redman-Eagle matchup is still five days in the future.

However, to get an idea of what B.C. has going for it, one should take a look at what it accomplished against a tough Pittsburgh squad.

Fred Willis gained 139 yards on 41 carries and scored three TD's. After Fusia had pointed out that Harris wasn't going to the air very much, someone had quipped, "Willis must be going nuts." He was.

Another Eagle, Gene Comella, rang up 122 yards in 25 attempts. The B.C. quarterback, Frank Harris, ended up tossing the pigskin only 12 times, completing but four of them for only 51 yards.

Yet the Eagle mashed the Panther. Like UMass, Pitt's strength on defense is the middle of its defensive wall and its linebackers. For the Redmen, that would mean tackles Bill DeFlavio and Bill Sroka, and linebackers John Farrelly, Dennis Collins, Joe Sabulis and Mark Leamy, the veritable core of the Redman defense.

B.C. had planned to mix inshortpasses with off-tackle runs and sweeps in attacking this Panther defense. It turned out to be a drizzly day in Pittsburgh, and so the Eagle stuck pretty close to the ground. The results speak for themselves, 283 total rushing yards.

A paragraph from Jerry Nason of the Boston Sunday Globe, who was covering the battle, says it all. It read, "Conceding to the massive, mobile, middle of Pitt line by only occasionally throwing a counterplay at them, BC won inside and outside the tackles and swept the flanks with telling effect."

Frosh Gridmen Lose To UNH, 21-13

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

In a game closely resembling the pattern of its games throughout the season, the UMass freshman football team dropped its fifth game in a row, without a win, 21-13, to the University of New Hampshire frosh in the season finale at New Hampshire Friday afternoon.

UNH scored first in this one as it capped a long drive with a nine-yard run by fullback John Richard. The extra-point conversion kick was no good, and the Wildcats had a 6-0 first period lead.

UMass got on the board in the second quarter after a 50-yard return of an intercepted pass by defensive-back Paul Hanson set up a one-yard plunge by fullback Ken Hoff. Kevin Dwyer kicked the extra point to give the Little Redmen the lead, 7-6, at the end of the first half.

The visiting frosh then went ahead of the third period on a three-yard run by halfback Jim Mahaney who ran well all afternoon. Dwyer's kick failed, and UMass led 13-7, after three quarters.

A fourth-quarter letdown, something which has plagued the Redmen frosh throughout the season saw UMass lose its lead and the game as the UNH frosh scored twice in the quarter.

The home team drove 60 yards early in the last period, and halfback Dennis Coady bulled in from the one. The two-point conversion attempt was successful and UNH was in the lead, 14-13.

The Wildcats added to their lead as a pass interception set up a drive which ended on a three-yard run by Richard who had a total of 121-yards rushing on the afternoon. Dave Conti kicked the extra point to give his team a 21-12 lead which is the way it ended.

Again lack of depth hurt the Redmen immensely. An example of the problem Coach David Kelley has faced all season occurred in the second period when fullback Hoff was forced to leave the game with an injury. Kelley then had to switch quarterback Tom McMahon to fullback and insert Mark Tripucka, who was nursing an injured thigh, into the quarterback position. The reason he couldn't put his other quarterback Paul Hanson in was because Hanson, besides play-defensive halfback, was filling in for the injured Phil Roland at offensive halfback. It is tough to win a football game under those conditions.

All Must Begin Anew For Marshall

HUNTINGTON, W. Va. (AP) - An end of a hard luck era born out of scandal, losing streaks, probations, coach dismissals and conference rejection had appeared on the norizon this year for Marshall University's football team.

With help from concerned citizens, the West Virginia Legislature and a "gritty bunch of boys," Marshall's beleagued football program showed signs of coming alive.

There was hope that a team which had suffered a near all-time losing streak the past two years could bounce back and become a winner.

That hope crashed here Saturday night with the chartered airliner that carried to their deaths most of the schools's football squad and coaching staff.

When the DC 9 jet smashed into a hillside and burned, killing all 75 persons aboard the final chapter was written to a nightmarish era of football competition at Marshall.

Dead are head Coach Rick Tolley, five of his assistants, Athletic Director Charles Kautz and Sports Information Director Gene Morehouse.

Dead too, are 38 football players who had suffered through some of the chapters of adversity.

Last fall, any hopes for football future at Marshall looked bleak.

The school had not won in 21 straight contests.

An investigation had documented chad documented charges of a recruiting scandal and the head basketball and football coaches were reassigned in the wake. An assistant football coach was fired. The athletic director resigned.

The Mid-American Conference suspended Marshall for the recruiting irregularities and for what it termed "woefully inadequate facilities." The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) placed the school's football program on one year's probation.

Tolley was named interim head coach three days before fall practice started.

Tolley had a limited staff, and fewer than 40 players reported when drills opened. Less than ten freshmen had been signed to grants in aid.

Marshall's winless string soon extended to 27 games, and the Thundering Herd meekly edged within one game of setting a national standard for major colleges.

Then a Renaissance began to take hold.

Behind scrambling quarterback Ted Shoebridge, Marshall rallied to win three of its four remaining games.

Tolley launched a heavy recruiting program and produced good results. During fall practice, he flatly predicted a winning season.

Saturday's loss to East Carolina left Marshall 3-6 in the year, but the record was not entirely indicative of the team's performance.

Tolley held to his commitment to rebuild Marshall's football program.

And so, the challenge facing the Redman defense is multiple. This defense knows what Harris can do throwing a football. He once hurled the ball 57 times in one contest, completing 37 for an unbelievable total of 374 yards.

The defense also is aware of what Willis can do running the ball. He has 864 yards in eight games this fall and needs only 39 more yards in his last two games to tie Mike Holovak for second place on the list of all-time Eagle rushmen.

Knowing what Harris and Willis can do as a tendem is enough knowledge for any defense in this land, but the added knowledge of what the B.C. offense can do when Harris cans the pass and goes with Willis, Comella and others along the turf is enough to make life hairy for a great defense. UMass possesses a great defense.

It's the Redman defense that has never faltered. And its a Redman offense, lacking the services of disposed stars Pierre Marchando and Nick McGarry, that sputtered a few too many times that accounts for the 4-4-1 mark.

An irony presents itself here. Taking a good hard look at the UMass football team and an equally as hard a look at the opponents it has played and one does not come to the conclusion that this is a losing grid squad. However, it will take an upset, or a tie of major size, against the Eagle to give the Redmen a winning, or a break-even, campaign. Otherwise, a very good football team will forever have to bear the label of a loser, 4-5-1.

Winter Varsity M On Tap

The UMass Varsity M Club will continue to hold weekly sports luncheons throughout the winter on Wednesdays at the Newman Center (Christmas and New Year's week excluded). The Club is presently sponsoring weekly UMass Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheons, ones that feature the Redman football team.

The winter luncheons will feature programs on the two fall sports, cross-country and soccer, and the winter sports, basketball, skiing, hockey, gymnastics and wrestling. The programs will feature brief remarks from the coaches, scouting reports, films and awards to outstanding team members. There will be the usual door prize.

There will be 13 winter luncheons in all. The price of a ticket for one luncheon will be $1.50, but season tickets can be bought for $15.00. Those season tickets are now available from any Varsity M Club member, or can be obtained by contacting Harold B. Gatslick at 545-1710.

The UMass cross country team, which finished second in New England, will compete this afternoon in the IC4A's cross country championship at Van Cortland Park in New York City. See preview on page 16.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio persons can be secretive. Many create imaginary secrets. The key to understanding Scorpio is to realize that they love intrigue. Nothing is apt to satisfy a native of this sign so much as a good detective story situation. Give Scorpio a problem to solve and the result will be happiness. The toucher the puzzle, the better, — especially if it involves law and high finance. Scorpio is concerned with the hidden, even the occult. These persons are not for everyone — but if they are for you, they will prove loyal beyond any question.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on home, property, long-range endeavors. Stress practical approach. Cancer-born individual can be of valuable aid. Don't throw away opportunity. Rely on patience, not impulse.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Good lunar aspect spotlights journeys, new contacts, fun through social activity involving neighbors and relatives. Stick to principles. Romantic involvement provides test.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Money can be obtained. But you will have to discern reasons why special person is acting in unusual manner. Follow through on hunch. Put assets to work for you. Demand quality.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Cooperate with one born under Aries. Mutual benefits are obtainable. Cycle high; rely on your own judgment. Have faith in your conclusions. Add to wardrobe. Enhance personal appearance.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Look behind scenes for answers. This does not mean you should be compelled by jealousy. It does mean that no one should be permitted to pull wool over your eyes. Message will be clear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Some of your fondest wishest can be fulfilled. Enjoy company of stimulating friends. A special member of opposite sex pays meaningful compliment. Be ready for change and a journey.

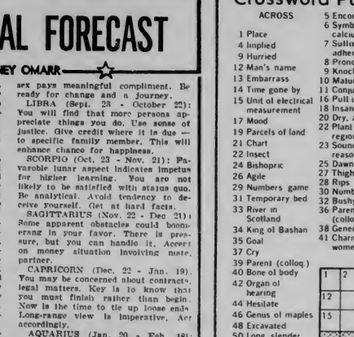
LIBRA (Sept. 23 - October 22): You will find that more persons appreciate things you do. Use sense of justice. Give credit where it is due — to specific family member. This will enhance chance for happiness.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Favorable lunar aspect indicates impetus for higher learning. You are not likely to be satisfied with status quo. Be analytical. Avoid tendency to deceive yourself. Get at hard facts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec 21): Some apparent obstacles could boomerang in your favor. There is pressure, but you can handle it. Accent on money situation involving mate, partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You may be concerned about contracts, legal matters. Key is to know that you must finish rather than begin. Now is the time to tie up loose ends. Long-range view is imperative. Act accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Check appointment calendar. Someone who depend on you may be expecting too much. First order is to take care of yourself — includes showing up for medical, dental appointments.



PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Check investment possibilities. Aim at activity which brings public attention. Do what you do with a flourish. Climb out of any emotional rut. Make others aware of feelings, intentions.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have accepted added responsibility. You are introspective, analytical. You have regard for law and medicine. But you often sacrifice yourself for abstract notions. You recently learned this can be costly. Now, utilize experience in constructive manner.

Only The Score Is Close As Redmen Tip UNH, 24-14

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

What initially appeared to be a UMass romp developed into a full scale nail-biter before the Redmen were able to pull away in the fourth quarter and down the Wildcats of New Hampshire, 24-14, before 12,200 Homecoming fans at Alumni Stadium Saturday. UMass is now 4-4-1 on the season while UNH is 5-3.

Once again, the Redman offense, which has moved into high gear since the loss to Rhode Island, amassed over 400 yards in the tilt. This was accomplished, as usual, with a strong running attack which barreled its way for 284 yards, most of which was picked up by the rejuvenated Dick Cummings. The junior fullback seems to have finally hit his stride as he picked up 116 yards in only 19 tries with 96 of those yards coming in the first half.

And also as usual, the UMass defense was superb. The Wildcat running attack was limited to minus seven yards on the ground. That's right, minus seven. The only times when UNH was able to move the ball were when its fine quarterback, Bob Hopkins, was able to hit wide receiver Chip Breault. This combination resulted in both Wildcat scores and Breault's circus catches kept the Wildcat offense moving.

The game looked over early as UMass scored two TD's in the first 17 minutes of play. The first Redman score was set up, oddly enough, by passes.

Ken Hughes, 11 for 20 for the game, connected on passes to Bob Cabrelli for 16 yards and Pat Scavone, who made a spectacular one-handed grab, for 18 yards to bring the Redmen deep into UNH territory. After Scavone was denied the touchdown on a five yard sweep, Mark Russell went off tackle for paydirt from the one at 9:27 of the opening period.

Denis Gagnon's conversion, which was the 55th of his career and broke Jerry Whelchel's previous mark of 54 set in 1965, put the Redmen on top, 7-0.

After Zullo had missed a 44-yard field goal attempt for the Wildcats, UMass took over and proceeded to march 80 yards in eight plays for its second touchdown.

The two key plays on this drive centered around Russell and Cummings. On a third and six at the UMass 35, Hughes tossed a screen pass to Russell who danced along the left sideline for 25 big yards and an important first down.

Then, with UMass down to the UNH 28, Cummings burst through a hole over right tackle and tore into the end zone behind an excellent block by Cabrelli for the Redmen's second score. Gagnon added to his record and it was 14-0.

A few moments later, UMass looked as if it was going to put the game away for good. On a drive started on their own 40, the Redmen had driven to the UNH 31 and appeared ready for another score. However, on a first and ten play, Dick Heavey was belted going into the line and the ball popped loose with Cassavaugh pouncing on it for the Wildcats.

The Hopkins-Breault combination then took over. On the fourth play after the fumble recovery, Hopkins dropped back and hit Breault crossing over the middle. With his defender having been picked off on the play, Breault calmly galloped untouched into the end zone on the scoring end of a 52-yard pass play. Zullo's conversion was missed and UNH trailed, 14-6. It remained this way for the remainder of the half.

The UMass offense, which had been so effective in the opening half, stalled a bit in the third quarter. Though a few scoring opportunities presented themselves, namely a Bush interception on the UMass 40 and a missed 22-yard Gagnon field goal due to a bad snap, the Redmen could not get on the board. The Wildcats, on the other hand, did.

New Hampshire took advantage of another UMass miscue for its second score. This time, Steve Schubert dropped a punt and the Wildcats recovered at the UMass 32.

On the next play, Hopkins threw a perfect pass for Breault in the end zone. However, UMass' John O'Neil had excellent position and it looked as if the pass would fall incomplete. But Breault made another fantastic grab, outbattling the Redman defender for the pigskin, and the Wildcats had another six points.

With the score 14-12, UNH decided to go for the two points. Once again, Hopkins dropped back to throw and the senior passer connected with Ken Roberson coming out of the backfield. Although Roberson was hit immediately, he managed to drive into the end zone for the important points. The score was all of a sudden, UMass 14, UNH 14.

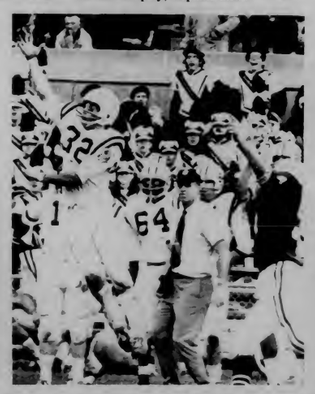
The Redmen, however, although seeing an apparent romp develop into a seat squirmer, did not panic. They kept to their game plan, sticking to the ground and trying to control the ball. This strategy paid off minutes after the fourth quarter began.

Paced by a 28-yard off tackle jaunt by Heavey, the Redmen drove to the UNH five from where Gagnon booted a 23-yard field goal to put UMass on top for good, 17-14. But with Hopkins and Breault in the game, the Redmen could not rest on this narrow margin.

UMass finally put the game away with only one minute left in the game. The touchdown, however, should be credited to an outstanding defense.

With time running out for the Wildcats, they took over at their own 20. On the first play, Hopkins screened to Roberson who picked up nine. Then the defense got tough.

Dennis Collins batted down a pass on second down and the Wildcats were faced with a crucial third and one situation.



Dennis Collins batted down a pass on second down and the Wildcats were faced with a crucial third and one situation. Hopkins gave the ball to Roberson up the middle and the halfback ran smack into Bill DeFlavio for no gain. In fact, the Wildcats lost a yard.

With nothing to lose, UNH went for it on fourth down. This time, Hopkins kept the ball himself and swept left. But Collins, John Farrelly and others were there to greet him and UMass took over on the UNH 29.

Art Corsaletti scored the final touchdown on a seep right behind a fine block by Cummings from nine yards out. Gagnon made the final score, 24-14.

REDMAN RANTINGS-As far as individual statistics for the UMass running backs are concerned, Scavone had 16 carries for 79 yards, Russell had eight for 24 yards, Heavey had seven for 45 and Corsaletti garnered six for 23 yards...Hopkins finished with 17 completions in 24 attempts for 296 yards and two touchdowns. He also had two interceptions...Breault nabbed eight passes for 170 yards and two touchdowns. On the other side of the ledger, John Hulecki had five receptions for 45 yards, Cabrelli had two for 36 yards and Russell had two for 33 yards...UMass, with the win, finished second in the YanCon with a mark of 3-1-1 behind UConn, which finished 4-0-1.

N.Y.C.'s Van Cortland Park Is Setting Today For X-Country Team

Runners Compete In IC4A's Championship

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Van Cortland Park in New York City is the setting this afternoon for the IC4A's cross country championship. This race is the biggest of its sort in the East as it brings together the top schools in the IC4A conference.

This conference is one of the toughest in the nation in both the quality of the performers and the quantity of the membership, which totals 88 schools and stretches as far into the midwest as Notre Dame and Michigan State and as far south as Duke and North Carolina.

Both the freshman and varsity units from UMass will be in this competition and both units have the personnel to finish well up in the standings of their respective divisions.

Taking a look at the freshman first, Coach Ken O'Brien feels if the frosh can put together the same type of performance in today's race as they did in the New England's they should be able to at least match last year's frosh performance of fifth place.

O'Brien is looking for good races from Doug O'Connell and Rich Sevigny, who have been his most consistent front runners this season. He also expects solid performances from Joe Frontierro and Bill Lowry and along with Roger Nasatka, who has been the most improved runner on the team, these five will be enough to give any of the top frosh units in this race a good run at the top positions.

On the varsity level the Redmen will be facing some of the stiffest competition in the nation. Villanova, which is a perennial national cross country power, is the team favorite. Its top challenges are expected to come from Penn State and two Ivy League schools, Harvard and Pennsylvania.

Where do the Redmen come in? Well, if they put everything together then they could finish in the top four or five teams. An average performance will just get them in the top ten.

To put it all together the Redmen will need the continued steady performances of the three seniors, Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson and Leo Duart, and real good performances from the three sophomores, Tom Swain, Tom Jasmin and Rick Barry.

Wayne, Paulson and Duart are veterans of IC4A competition as this will be the third appearance for each in this championship. All three are coming off of outstanding performances at the New England's and have good big meet experience behind them.

O'Brien sees the sophomores as the key to the Redman chances of finishing high up in the standings. Last year on the freshman level Swain finished eighth, Barry 21st and Jasmin a little farther back. In the New England's it was the reluctance of Swain and Jasmin to go out with the leaders at the start that kept the Redmen from challenging Dartmouth for the title.

These two and Barry will have to be up with the front running pack right from the start if UMass is to make a run for a top position.

In the individual battle, George Anerson from Cornell is the favorite on the strength of having the fastest time this year over the Van Cortland course. Tom Spengler from Harvard is the nest favorite, followed by a group of runners with Olympic competition behind them. These include Chris Mason and Marty Liquori from Villanova, Howell Michael from William and Mary, and Jerry Ritchie from Pittsburgh.

Wayne, who won the New England championship last Monday is not one of the heavy favorites, but due to his performances this season and his high competitive edge Coach O'Brien feels that he will be right in the thick of the individual battle.

Bromery Links Security Problems, Drugs

By KERRY KELLEY
Staff Reporter

At a noon-time coffee hour held yesterday, Dr. Randolph Bromery expressed the opinion that the security problems on campus were partially linked to the use of drugs on campus. He said that the use of "hard stuff" is more prevalent on campus this year than ever before.

He also commented on the crowds at Saturday night's concert where 3000 gatecrashers broke into Curry Hicks Cage, prompting a study of the feasibility of having major concerts on campus.

Bromery said that "We were lucky to get away with what happened"; and that "it could have triggered a more dangerous situation."

Part of the reason Bromery felt for the crowd gathering outside was the holding of performances within such close periods of time. He suggested that spacing the concerts a few hours apart might prove to be a more favorable method.

Another solution might be to hold three performances thereby allowing more students to pay for their admittance. Bromery added that this would help isolate any freeloaders, and would enable them to be dealt with more effectively.

A student present at the coffee hour said that he felt the problem of gatecrashers to be very serious, and that the administration should deal with it as such.

Bromery replied by explaining that it is a very difficult problem to solve, and there wasn't too many ways to go about it. One way, he said, would be to build a perimeter fence around the Cage to hold any crowds back. But, he added, the place would "look like a concentration camp".

The other alternative to this, and the most drastic in Bromery's opinion, would be to cancel concerts altogether. This is something he doesn't want to do, however. Most likely, Bromery added, no concerts will be held until the problem is solved.

Bromery felt that another reason for the unusually large crowd Saturday night was that many might have expected to be able to buy tickets at the door. One student present said that this had been advertised in some areas.

Campus security policy was another major topic of discussion at the coffee hour. Bromery said that the security policy will hopefully be able to be kept flexible with the addition of members to the force. It should be in full swing by Thanksgiving, he added.

Bromery explained that dorms with the greatest number of security breaks will have guards on them throughout the week. Other dorms will be watched on Friday and Saturday nights.

The taking on of extra men isn't a sign of "hysteria", Bromery stressed, but mainly deterrent measures. He wants all cruisers to be seen to prevent any trouble rather than to interfere when trouble has started.

Bromery wants a "highly visible security force" so that students in trouble can easily get help. There will also be a "walking beat shift" with officers on either end of campus for the same purpose.

He also hopes to be able to add manpower as needed. Bromery explained that there aren't enough guards to effectively police the campus, so that the force will have to be a preventive one.

Inter-dorm theft, Bromery added, should be solved within the dorms with student cooperation. He did say that outside help will be provided when necessary.

America's Colleges Feeling Pinch

American colleges and universities, having developed enormous appetites over the last decade as they feasted on soaring enrollments and budgets, are experiencing severe hunger pangs as they attempt to live on the skimpier fare of the1970's

For the large, strong public and private institutions, the relatively smaller portions are leading to painful, but not necessarily fatal, dieting. Some of the smaller, more vulnerable colleges that make up the bulk of private higher education may very well starve to death or be swallowed up by the public systems.

Whether this new austerity period is viewed as the beginning of the end of private higher education in this country or as a necessary period of adjustment that might lead to some beneficial educational reforms, depends largely on who is doing the viewing and what kind of institution he represents.

There is, however, fairly general agreement that his is not just a temporary budget squeeze but rather a major structural change in economy and population that higher education will have to learn to live with. "The last 10 years has been a euphoric period for growth-in enrollments, in Federal support for research, facilities and student aid, in state subventions, in academic salaries--we are now coming down to earth with a thud," Allan M. Carter, chancellor of New York University, said in a speech last spring. "The bull market is over...

"Like any other industry that has lived for years with 10 percent growth rates and suddenly has to adjust to a more normal two or three percent, we will find it difficult to adapt to this exhilarating pace."

Evidence that the bull market is, indeed, over abounds. College and university presidents have been talking about the "financial crisis" for several years but the discussion gained dramatic new impact this year when the nation's richest, best known universities began dipping into the red ink.

Harvard, with a $1 billion endowment, reported a deficit of $760,000 for the fiscal year which ended in June-its first in 15 years -and projects a deficit of $1.5 million for fiscal 1972 for the Facility of Arts and Sciences.

Yale had a $1.7 million deficit in the last academic year and expects the figure to be $2.5 million in the current year. Princeton projects a $2.4 million deficit for this year. Columbia leads the deficit league with a $11 million last year and a projected $15 million this year.

If these flagships of private higher education are in trouble it is not surprising that some smaller members of the fleet are floundering. A few small colleges in the west and midwest have closed their doors. (One, Christian College in Missouri, offered to rename the institution after anyone who gave it $5 million. There were no takers.)

Public colleges, also are suffering, but not as visibly since they are not allowed to run deficits. In Massachusetts, the pinch is felt selectively-funds for the library at UMass-Boston were cut 80 percent this year, for example.

The root causes of the financial squeeze is not that sources of funds are shrinking-some of them are growing quite substantially-but they are not increasing last enough to keep up with soaring costs in an inflationary economy.

Total spending for capital and operating expenses for all colleges and universities in the country shot up 70 percent in five years-from $15.2 billion in 1965-66 to an estimated $26.1 billion this year. Income sources-tuition, Federal and state aid, private gifts, and endowment income-are growing at a slower rate.

Total Federal income, for instance, jumped up 33 percent from 1966 to 1967 but is expected to increase only 6 percent from 1969 to 1970.

Most of those who have studied the situation have concluded that traditional income sources cannot be increased enough to keep up with costs if they continue to rise at the current rate. Tuition charges have gone up at least 50 percent in the last decade and the annual tuition increase is becoming a fixture at many private colleges.

Homecoming Statement

Ed. Note: The following is the Homecoming Committee's version of the events of Saturday night at Curry Hicks Cage.

The events of last Saturday at Curry Hicks Cage are unfortunate. The concerts were ruined by huge crowds of UMass students and off-campus people who stormed the Cage and forced their way in, forcing the Homecoming Committee to open the doors to avoid serious injury to innocent people.

An estimated 6000 people jammed into the Cage for the ten o'clock show featuring Traffic, David Frye, and Buffy Ste. Marie. The Cage will safely hold 4500 for such events.

The ensuing calamity in the Cage and the physical damage done to it resulted in University police ordering the Cage declared "unsafe" just prior to the performance on Sunday.

Joel Wilson, concert chairman, arrived at the Cage about nine Sunday. He found the Cage littered with bottles and papers and began to clean up with the help of about five people. Mr. Justin Cobb of the School of Physical Education arrived and was apparently upset over the condition of the Cage and called various members of the administration including Chancellor Tippo, Dr. Bromery and Warren McGuirk. They had a look at the mess and left.

At this point everyone just assumed that the Sunday afternoon show would go on as usual. But around 12:30 Sgt. Donald Zidik presented the student activities staff and the Homecoming people in the Cage with a memo stating that it was the opinion of the UMass police that the Cage was "unsafe".

By this time, however, the piles of bottles had been cleared from the floor and the Cage restored to order. The performers were on stage rehearsing and close to one hundred people were working to clean the Cage up.

Acting in behalf of the student activities staff, Mr. Gerald Scanlon, assistant dean of students, signed the memo given to him by Zidik and assumed all responsibility in case of fire or any other disaster. All other UMass safety agencies, including the police and the fire marshalls present at the Cage refused to assume any kind of responsibility.

The two p.m. show went on as scheduled with no incidents. Pending a thorough investigation, Scanlon said, "We're recommending that there be no more major concerts anywhere on campus."

Mills Leadership Still Up In Air

By SANDY MITCHENER
Staff Reporter

A meeting last night at Mills House to determine the makeup of a committee to oversee the running of Mills produced no results as of late last night.

The people at the meeting were basically in agreement that membership on the steering committee will be composed of representatives of the African students on campus. Attempts will be made to insure that the committee's work will not overlap that of any existing group on campus.

According to Michael Thelwell, Chairman of the Black Studies Dept., the elections were prompted by a meeting of people who work in Mills House last Friday. The group issued a statement urging people to attend and emphasized that those attending will constitute the foundations of a "legitimate government" to control the use and budgeting of the facilities at Mills House.

Statement Urges Cooperation

"If you want to have a hand in deciding the future of the Black Cultural Center," the statement warned, "it is imperative that you attend. The release continued and specifically requested that each black organization on campus be represented.

The meeting last week and last night's gathering to elect a "governance committee" are viewed by Thelwell as having roots in last year's take-over of Mills. But the committee has been largely ineffective.

There are no definite plans for the formulation of the committee, but Thelwell said that he did have a general plan in mind which would call for a "representative committee."

NUC To Coordinate 70-71 Radical Activities

By ROBERT SCHEIER
Staff Reporter

Howard Gadlin, Assistant Professor of Psychology at UMass, and a core of members from last year's New University Conference held an open meeting last night in the Campus Center to consolidate their ideas and goals for the coming year.

During the meeting, the approximately forty people attending attempted to coordinate their political outlooks, ideas, and goals into a plan of action for the coming year. A proposal that resulted from the discussion on whether to concentrate on political discussion and study or action was the proposal to institute a Radical Studies Program on campus, modeled along the Black Studies Program. Another possibility, from which this program could grow, would be a program of radical news and analysis, plus cultural offerings on WFCR.

The local NUC chapter, formed last year, is a loose confederation of people whose principal activities so far have been political study and discussion. It is currently not formally affiliated with the national organization, awaiting a greater coordination of viewpoints and a view of its goals. It is seen as filling the need for a radical organization to coordinate meaningful activities in the five-college area, and hopefully to provide the base for a local radical subculture.

The national NUC is involved in such issues as racism, the Vietnam war, day car centers, women's liberation, and the "People's Peace Treaty", originally proposed by the SDS.

Gov't Majors To Hold Conclave

By DEBBIE FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

Concerned undergraduate government majors will have a chance to air their grievances this evening. Led by the undergraduate steering committee, the meeting will center on problems in lack of communication, evaluation, and independent study options.

Communication difficulties discussed will include those between graduates, undergraduates, and faculty in addition to lack of information on courses, professors, requirements, and advisors.

Courses, professors, and requirements in relation to quality and relevance are topics to be evaluated.

The independent study option issue will zero in on possibilities in field work and more specialized majors.

The meeting, to be held tonight at 7 in room 168-172 of the Campus Center, will be open to any further complaints or comments.

Crash Investigation Continues In W. Va.

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP)—Investigators combed a muddy hillside in near freezing temperatures Monday for tiny shreds of metal that could yield clues to possible instrument failure in the jetliner crash that carried 75 persons to a fiery death.

National Transportation Safety Board experts sifted through bits of wreckage with shovels, searching for what caused the DC9 chartered jet attempting to land in rain and fog Saturday night-to crash and explode into flames just two miles from the runway.

Investigators said the initial check of cockpit voice recordings and other tapes on the flight showed no indication of either mechanical failure or pilot error.

This led them to suspect the sensitive cockpit instruments which a pilot must depend upon when landing in rainy weather at night.

Killed in the crash were 34 Marshall University football players, three students team assistants, six coaches, an athletic director, and many prominent Huntington residents traveling with the team.

In addition there was a crew of five aboard the Southern Airways twin engine jet.

The deaths plunged the Marshall campus of 8,500, and its mother city of 73,000, into a state of grief for the worst air disaster in American sports history. Classes were cancelled Monday and Tuesday. Flags in the city, and at post offices across the state were flown at half staff.

Monday, the NTSB investigators painstakingly searched for remnants of key flight instruments shredded apart in the crash. Also under way, was the task of identifying the charred bodies of the victims.

Investigators said initial checks showed there was no pilot diversion from a normal landing glide path and showed no obvious mechanical malfunction.

John H. Reed, NTSB chairman, said it was only obvious that the pilot of the charter flight had his craft too low, causing the plane to clip tree tops and a ridge just west of tri State Airport's main runway.

It was that perilous brush with the tops of the 70 foot high oak and poplar trees that sent the jet cartwheeling into the next mountainside. The plane flipped on its back and exploded in flames.

Lame Duck Congress Reconvenes

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congress reconvened Monday for a lame duck session strongly flavored by the politics of 1970-and of 1972. Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said it would be an unmitigated disaster.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield welcomed his returning majority-and accused Republican campaigners of subjecting them to offensive personal vilification, and "political slicksterism."

Mansfield and Scott agreed that congressional leaders and President Nixon should draw up a rock bottom list of legislative musts for action by the lame duck 91st Congress.

"I trust that the list will be mercifully short," Mansfield said. But he said he couldn't guess how long the session would last. "Indeed, the 91st may yet be known as the unending Congress," Mansfield said.

"I would hope the session could be treated as a cleanup and windup session," said Scott. He said that with two more Republicans due to join the Senate minority in the 92nd Congress, opening Jan. 4, President Nixon would do better to bide his time on controversial matters involving foreign policy and defense.

In the days ahead this year Scott said he expects a lot of oratory about the outcome of the Nov. 3 elections, a lot of attempts to win hasty enactment of pet projects-particularly from lawmakers who won't be around next year.

"I think it will be an unmitigated disaster, aside from the necessity of getting appropriations bills through," the Pennsylvanian said.

Among the measures awaiting action: a once vetoed measure to finance housing and assorted other government projects, and a transportation appropriation with the built in controversy of a $230 million item to continue the supersonic transport aircraft project.

Mansfield said the Senate will act before Thanksgiving on another Nixon vote, of a bill to sharply restrict campaign spending for radio and television.

The Democratic leader said he thinks Nixon is entitled to a vote this year on his family assistance program.

That welfare reform proposal is to be handled as part of a bill to increase Social Security benefits by 10 per cent.

In addition, a trade bill, with new import restrictions and export incentives, will be tacked on to that bill.

The trade measure has first to clear the House, where it is due up Wednesday as the first major legislation of the lame duck session.

A farm price support bill also awaits Senate action; Mansfield said it will come up Wednesday or Thursday.

The Senate went to work on a job safety bill after shelving, at least temporarily, a constitutional amendment to guarantee equal rights to women.

Mansfield delivered his rebuke to the Republicans-in terms stronger than he customarily chooses-at a caucus of Senate Democrats, saying that some of them "were subjected to a personal vilification of a most offensive nature.

"You defeated opponents in the face of what can best be described as a massive essay in political slicksterism."

He named no individual, but said Republican campaigners made an apparently calculated effort to undermine public confidence in the Senate, and accused them of "arrogant half truths, quarter truths and no truths..."

The criticism seemed directed at Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, and, in part, at Nixon.

Republican Scott described those comments as "political, purely. They are ritual and required. In due time, I'll make the same kind of statements."

As for 1972 politics, Scott said "there are always a certain number of Democrats running for president- and most of them are in the Senate."

One likely contender, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, said he wants a seat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee- a valuable forum for a presidential candidate.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D. Mass., said Muskie is way out front for the 1972 nomination. Kennedy said "no," he would not accept the 1972 nomination himself.

Pope Paul Reaffirms Stand on Birth Control

ROME (AP)—Pope Paul VI, using the world's chief food organization as a forum, reaffirmed Monday the Roman Catholic Church's strict ban on artificial birth control methods. He urged increased food production to feed the world's swelling population.

"There is a great temptation to use one's authority to diminish the number of guests rather than to multiply the bread that is to be shared," he told the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization's 25th anniversary meeting.

He used the words of his predecessor, John XXIII, in assailing the pill and other contraceptives as "methods and means which are unworthy of man."

His unequivocal statement spotlighted the chief issue dividing the Vatican and FAO, the largest U.N. specialized agency, which is on record as advocating artificial birth control to curb the population explosion.

High FAO officials said the pontiff restated the division between the world organization and the Vatican, but said he did not attempt to influence the FAO.

Ky Arrives At Newport

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP)-Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky of South Vietnam arrived Monday for an overnight visit to the Newport Naval Base where a key part of President Nixon's Vietnamization program is under way.

Under tight security and overcast skies, Ky's airplane arrived at the Quonset Point Naval Air Station from West Point, N.Y., where he visited the U.S. Military Academy.

Ky crossed the bay on the admiral's barge and was accompanied by Rear Adm. Joseph B. Tibbets, commander of Fleet Air Quonset, at the Quonset Naval Air Station where his four engine jet touched down at 2:25 p.m.

He was accompanied by his wife and about a dozen other South Vietnamese.

A 19 gun salute was fired as the barge pulled into the basin where the pleasure craft of high-ranking officers at Newport dock.

He was greeted by Vice Adm. Richard Colbert, president of the Naval War College and Rear Adm. Fred G. Bennett, chief of staff.

After exchanging pleasantries, Ky and Adm. Colbert trooped the line of a 50 member honor Marine guard while a 17 member band played. Then Adm. Colbert accompanied Ky to the Flag Cabin where he was to be based during his stay.

Earlier at West Point he predicted the U.S. role in his land would be over "very soon."

He told newsmen while on a one day visit to the U.S. Military Academy "I am personally very happy with the Vietnamization" program of President Nixon.

Ky said the U.S. involvement in his country is "not quite over," but added, "Your role will be over very soon." He did not elaborate.

He said his country wants the United States to help with the war until the South Vietnamese can "take over by ourselves."

While at Newport, Ky will visit the Naval Office Candidate School where some 750 of his countrymen are scheduled to complete a special training program in the basics of coastal and riverine warfare by next August. Some 250 men have completed the program.

The course was set up by American and Vietnamese last winter after President Nixon announced a speed up in Vietnamization. The Newport school was chosen because it had the necessary facilities.

Supreme Court Case Challenges Law

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Brooklyn man convicted of loan sharking won a Supreme Court hearing Monday in a major test of Congress' power to strike at organized crime.

The case accepted for review over Justice Department objections challenges the 1968 law that made extortionate credit transactions a federal crime and provided stiff jail terms.

Beyond that, the case shapes up as the first high court examination in 17 years of putting what appears, on the surface at least, to be local crimes under federal controls.

The convicted man, Alcides Perez, is arguing through his lawyer, Albert J. Krieger of New York City, that the 1968 law is unconstitutional. His reasoning is broad enough to endanger other federal anticrime laws if accepted by the justices.

Perez was sentenced to 18 months in prison for what the U.S. Circuit Court in New York City called "brutal collection methods." According to court records, Perez collected $6,500 from a Puerto Rican butcher who had turned to him for a $3,000 business loan.

The butcher testified Perez claimed he was due $6,700 more, and said he went bankrupt trying to raise the money.

The loan sharking law is Title II of the Consumer Credit Protection Act of 1968. Congress described it as an attempt to control "the vicious billion dollar a year loan sharking racket." Prison terms ranging up to 20 years and fines up to $10,000 are provided.

Congress based its authority on two provisions of the Constitution. One gave Congress power to establish uniform and effective bankruptcy laws. The second gave Congress power to regulate interstate commerce.

The Perez appeal argues the law is unconstitutional in both respects.

In other actions Monday the court:

- Upheld unanimously California regulations that bar welfare aid to otherwise qualified poor families because the father is working at least 152 hours a month.
- Agreed to review a settlement that orders the government to pay the southern Ute tribe in Colorado for more than 200,000 acres of disputed lands.
- Turned down an appeal by Pennsylvania from a ruling that a convicted robber must be freed because a lawyer wasn't on hand when a witness identified him by looking at photographs and viewing him through a one way mirror.
- Refused to review a draft evasion conviction in a case from New Orleans where members of the local draft board lived outside the area they supervised, contrary to federal law.

Seizure of Illegal Drugs Increased Threefold

WASHINGTON (AP)- Customs Bureau officials said Monday they have seized markedly larger quantities of illegal drugs in recent months because of a stepped up enforcement drive.

Officials were cautious, however, about interpreting the seizure statistics as a sign of increased activity by drug smugglers.

"I couldn't comment on that," said Deputy Customs Commissioner Edwin F. Rains. "We're always in a position of knowing what we get and we don't know what we don't get."

From July through September, Custom officials said they made nearly three times as many seizures of illegal drugs as they did during the same period a year ago.

Rains said increased manpower-about 300 new agents recruited last year-is responsible. "They're just coming into effectiveness," he said.

Commissioner Myles Ambrose said agents participated in 3,016 seizures in the July-September period, compared with 1,193 in the same months a year ago.

The total quantity of drugs captured was 37,212 pounds, nearly 2 1/2 times the 15,720 pounds confiscated in a comparable time last year.

The totals do not include seizures of dangerous drugs such as stimulants and depressants in pill and capsule form. But officials said they intercepted 1.3 million five grain units during the three months.

At Bal Harbour, Fla., meantime, Asst. Treasury Secretary Eugene T. Rossides said seizures of depressants and stimulants in the last two years have increased 212 per cent.

Rossides told the National Wholesale Druggist Association the government has "reason to believe that the majority of seized drugs were manufactured in the United States and shipped out of the country with little regard to the character of the recipient, and thereafter were diverted into illicit channels for smuggling back into the U.S.

Northeast Dorms Open

The first of the new Sylvan suite-style dorms will be opening for occupancy for the Spring Semester. It will be eight stories high with eight suites per floor; sixty-four suites in the entire dorm. Suites range in size from six to eight occupants.

Applicants are now being accepted by the Housing Office from groups of students desiring to live in this dorm in the Spring Semester. Complete groups of six, seven or eight students will be given priority over individuals and incomplete groups. Otherwise, suite-choosing will be conducted on a first come-first serve basis.

The new blades vs. Norelco.

We won.

In an independent test, some independent men shaved one side of their face with a platinum or chromium blade.

They shaved the other side with our Tripleheader 35T shaver.

When they finished shaving, we had them feel their faces.

7 out of 10 said our Tripleheader shaved them as close or closer than either the platinum or chromium blade.

Some of the men were surprised.

But, frankly, we weren't.

Because the Norelco Tripleheader is a totally different kind of electric shaver.

It has three shaving heads that float, to follow the curves of your face.

Our blades are rotary. So they shave in every direction. (Because your beard grows in every direction.)

And we make our shaving heads ultra-thin. So it's possible to get a really close shave. And practically impossible to nick or cut yourself.

The Tripleheader comes in a Cord and a Rechargeable model.

Either way, you can't lose.

Save, Get, Keep

Another case of acting through the channels and coming out on the short end can be avoided if the Board of Trustees at their Friday meeting approve the WMUA request for the placement of a transmitting device in the seventh floor ironing room of Emily Dickinson House. Approval also will save the students of the university, tens of thousands of dollars, insure a power increase for a dramatically growing campus radio station that benefits the entire community, and speak against the duplicity and childishness that has marked the Dickinson House objections.

WMUA has received approval from the dorm on at least three occassions. Yet Dickinson asserts that this was not binding, and that they don't want the transmitter on their dorm. It seems the Dickinson House residences decide weeks after they vote whether their vote is binding. In other words, they approve it when WMUA station management is on the scene presenting their case, and then reverse themselves behind the station's back.

Dickinson House has given four main areas of dispute. They contend that there will be interference in tv and radio communcation due to the transmitting placement. This has been ruled an infintestimal possibility by an independent engineering firm study that cost over 1000 dollars, and by the Federal Communications Commission. And even so, WMUA has stated that if that slim possibility of interference results they would move the tower. Yet Dickinson, won't believe anyone else but themselves.

The residences maintain that they would lose their ironing room. WMUA has offered to have the ironing facilities relocated on the floor, a proposal that was approved by the floor residences, but of course reversed later, in typical fashion.

The residences have expressed safety concerns, when they have been reassured by engineering experts, and the FCC to the contrary that there is no safety hazard. For Dickinson in mature fashion, has spread such rumors as the antenna's presence can cause sterility and that they can be damaged by radiation.

Finally, they have objected to what they term the procedures used by WMUA, in particular the subpeoning of dorm residences for a general court hearing. What the Dickinson experts fail to realize is that this is a completely above-the-board procedure acted through the proper channels. It was virtually the only step WMUA could take, other than bypassing the student court.

WMUA has offered to mediate, but Dickinson refuses. And so, while some children on Orchard Hill play power play, inflation upps the prices of equipment needed and therefore costs students money, the FCC deadline for work approaches and threatens the approved power increase and the radio station remains unable to reach Southwest, because of lack of power.

WMUA has gone through all the proper channels. They have gone step by step through a tedious process, gaining the approval of the stringent FCC, the Student Senate, engineering firms, etc, and yes even on three occasions the Dickinson House residents.

Dickinson House has refused to listen to the evidence of experts, refused to act in good faith and has created a ridiculously childish situation which is costing money everyday and thrown mud on what should have been a simple procedure.

In essence, therefore, we strongly urge the Board of Trustees to approve the WMUA position, Friday, and end all this foolishness.

A Winwood Be Better In A Convocation Center

Stevie Winwood, in the Curry Hicks Cage.

My feelings about Saturday night are mixed. The Cage is the second to the last place on earth to hold a concert. The sound is bad, the building inadequate, the seats too few and uncomfortable, the access way atrocious. It's not too hard to burn out going to the Cage.

As one person, I enjoyed myself thoroughly Saturday night. The push and pull of the crowd is one of those things which one can enjoy in the proper mood. Those who shun physical contact at all costs would not have enjoyed my experience in the crowd outside. At times the crowd would move forward about three yards, then go back about three, then forward again, then back. It was like watching the Patriots without Tom Janik. I had never more than twenty square inches on which to stand and generally about two arms, backs or shoulders touching me. I enjoyed the feeling.

If I had gotten hurt, it would have been different. Many people were hurt Saturday night, just trying to get in to see a concert. That's not good.

The concert was declared to be free before I had sat down. We sat in the aisle to the right of the stage, where we could see the performers faces. I don't think there was more room in the building. I enjoyed that part of it also, but if I had to stand in the back, where you can't see and you're dealing with Curry Hicks acoustics, I don't think I would have enjoyed it.

I liked Buffie and David Frye. As far as Traffic goes, they performed creditably; I expected them to be as good as the Old Traffic, in the pre-Blind Faith days, and they did not disappoint me. Then there's Winwood.

Eric Clapton, after the breakup of Blind Faith, spoke about Steve Winwood. Clayton thought he had disappointed him. Eric Clapton! Stevie was singing lead for Spencer Davis when he was sixteen, and is a virtuoso on both guitar and organ. I don't think the Cage has ever had a better male singer than Steve Winwood.

I hope the Cage does not have too many more opportunities to top Winwood. Anyone who's ever gone to a Concert there, anyone who was here last winter and saw the crowds lining up at four in the afternoon for basketball knows that the Cage must be replaced. People went to the NIT last year who couldn't get in to watch the basketball team play for free at home. Julius Erving is among the most exciting basketball players in the country. He should be able to play in a better place than the Cage.

We now have twenty thousand students. There'll be more next year, more the year after. The Cage holds forty two hundred people, less than a quarter of the student body. The Convocation Center is still in primary planning stages, which means we should expect it by 1986. At that time the University should hold about forty-five to two hundred thousand students. Unless maybe they build it before that.

Julius will graduate long before that. So will the rest of us. They will probably be remembering the good old days of the seventies by the time they hold a concert in the Convocation Center.

Past Cage concerts there have featured many biggees: Simon & Garfunkel, Janis Jovlin, Johnny Winter, Sly, Alvin Lee, and most recently, Steve Winwood. The Cage has been the site of many good performances. But it is simply a lousy place to hold any event, and it should be replaced as soon as possible.

I enjoyed myself. Most people don't. That's bad. Peace.

WASHINGTON (AP)-A study group sonsored by Ralph Nader said yesterday that the U.S. medical profession does not merit the Trust placed in it, primarily because patients cannot be reasonably sure of receiving competent care.

The study group, composed of a former federal health official and students in law and medicine, proposed that the federal government take over the setting of standards for medical care in hospitals and doctors' offices.

"Although the worlds' best medical care has always been practiced in the United States, the almost complete lack of internal quality control within the medical profession has also allowed a large measure of very poor medicine to be practiced," the report said.

Lack Uniform Standards

"Every citizen is at the mercy of a system devoid of uniform, enforced standards of quality and must run the risks implied in the statistics of uneven levels of care among hospitals and physicians."

The report criticized the federal government, state medical societies and licensing officials and national organizations like the American Medical Association and the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. It accused them of recognizing "a developing crisis in our health care system" but failing to take rapid action or proposing ineffective measures.

The AMA issued a statement defending its record, saying: "We are working almost continually with the Congress and the executive branch of the federal government to promote quality and cost controls."

"The report appears to be comprehensive and deserving of the objective consideration which we will give it," said the AMA. "On a hasty perusal, some of its recommendations appear to have merit while others raise questions."

Homecoming Defended

To the Editor:

For those of you who went to the 1970 Homecoming concerts we're glad we succeeded in providing you with an enjoyable weekend of talented entertainment. For those of you who got hassled, pushed, bruised, and cheated out of your seats before the late concert Saturday night-we are sorry and hope the selfish, inconsiderate people who pushed you, bruised you, and stole your seats apologize to you.

The Homecoming Committee has worked since last spring to bring the U.Mass. students and alumni the best weekend possible. We offered you a diverse entertaining, though expensive, weekend. We admit, free concerts are beautiful, but someone has to pay for concert performers. Homecoming has no budget so they charged the lowest possible prices they could, just to break even. But people complain Homecoming is "protecting only the economic interests of the university". We think perhaps some of the U.Mass. children are too used to getting everything they want without giving anything in return. Tickets priced at $3.75 to see big names was just enough money to cover costs of the groups, we had these concerts only because enough people did buy tickets. But some special students felt they deserved the concert for free, in fact, they felt it was their right to steal seats from those who had paid for them, to push the ticket holders out of their way, to push down the U.Mass. student fences, to push down the doors of the Cage, to throw rocks at police when they attempted to intervene, and then had the audacity to accuse the "pigs" of neglecting their duty. You ask where the "pigs" were when the greedy inconsiderate students pushed down the fence? You say it was the students who finally regulated the crowds and prevented further injuries. We say that you are lucky there are some students who have enough guts to stop the rude students and outsiders from hurting their fellow students. We all know what would have happened had it been police who were out there, pushing away the crowds. One had already left with a head injury from a rock. Yes, they give a damn about you-do you think guarding a college concert is fun for them when some people are so rude and destructive? The students of the U.Mass Homecoming Committee, the students who paid for the concerts, the students who were injured on Saturday night, the students who won't ever see another concert in the Cage because a selfish few have made the Cage too dangerous a place for concerts, and thrown Homecoming into debt with Cage repairments demand an apology from those students who were truly responsible for making part of Saturday night miserable for everyone else.

Concert Policy Changes

To the Editor:

After attending the second concert Saturday night, we feel that a change in policy in regard to concerts should be initiated.

Anticipating a large crowd, we thought it best to leave an hour and a half early to get some halfway decent seats. Aside from the pushing and shoving and lack of air, standing in line for an hour and a half wasn't all that bad. And we met some of the most interesting and friendly people you could hope to find on campus. But there were times when we wondered whether it was really worth it-what with the breaking down of fences, destruction of University property, and personal injuries. We feel, though, that this could be avoided in the future.

Why not have open-air concerts in Alumni Stadium? Lights could be installed, and could later serve a dual purpose by allowing night football. Seating capacity is almost double, and bathroom and parking facilities are much more accessible. Due to the size advantage, the need for two performances could be eliminated, giving us a better and longer show for our money. The many gates would keep waiting in line to a minimum, and a repetition of Saturday night's problems would be virtually impossible. If Harvard can do it, so can we.

Cage Help

To the Editor:

In reference to Saturday's debacle at the entrance to the Cage, the following comes to mind after reading the letter of charge sheet signed by Mr. Cohen and friends:

a. On today's college campuses, the alledged ideal being professed is that students don't want to be policed, rather than can police themselves.

b. At all the radical meetings we attend and in all the radical literature we read, we are urged not to obey the 'pigs', so why should they have acted?

c. I thought all students were PEACE loving so why couldn't they have waited in line like civilized people. Why did so many peaceniks deem it a necessity to storm the Cage?

d. What kind of animal is it that would try to crash the door in front of their contemporaries who paid for their tickets? I always thought we were equals in a united front against the system. Also, don't blame the school for charging an admission - it's the fault of these capitalistic rock groups who are only out to protect and improve their own economic interests.

e. Don't blame the 'pigs' for your own acts of animalism. Maybe students are the real 'pigs'. Wouldn't that be a swtich, the police calling the kids pig - Oink Oink.

See you all at Winter Carnival.

Returnable Motion

Man in Motion
By Michael Mewshaw.
247 pp. New York: Random House, Inc. $5.95.

"She got the urge for going home and I had to let her," folk-singer Tom Rush sadly but realistically chants. The urge to leave home hits us all and the reality of return seems as distant as Betelgeuse. Today, we stray from the torturous contines of our homelife existence to experience a new and challenging life. One that will hand us our "freedom" on a silver platter.

Is there a solution to this perpetual problem? Walker Hawley, the main character in Michael Mewshaw's novel, decides for himself, the answer lies in an escape. No, not a cop out, as people label some of us, simply an everyday escape. For the past twenty-six years, Hawley has lived with his unstable family in the quiet, typical town of Cottage City. His mother, living in a mental institution, his step father, Daddy Dick, and several unstable brothers and sisters create an atmosphere called home. Walker's life is troubled and predictable from first grade until college graduation. His dull and routine existence seldom allows Walker to experiment with the mysterious. Even his girl Dede remains as conquerable as the rest of the environment.

The total outlook reflected in the story could be classified as trite, (so aren't we all) but the problem facing Walker exists for us all on different levels. Mr. Mewshaw's outstanding control of the language and his clear and usually sharp sentences, enables the reader to read swiftly and think deeply.

Ezra Pound once remarked, "Poetry should be as least as well written as prose." The converse holds true for "Man in Motion." Certain passages are overdrawn and too predictable but a total appraisal would applaud Mewshaw's first, and surely not final, Creation.

The cross country journey Walker takes with his TR3 and newspaper add respondent, Lila Caine, provides all to quickly the total experience the ex-collegiate writer needs. Walker decides that California will not satisfy or stimulate, although his true father and his "ideal" mother reside in San Francisco Off to Mexico, the Venice of the Western Hemisphere, where Walker discovers nothing but dismal decay and perishable paradises. The loss of his TR3 into a irretrievable gulley is initial proof to Walker that he has done wrong. Lila no longer represents the easy and challenging ball, but Walker Hawley has not yet reached the point of return (or perhaps no return).

The principal philosophy taken by Mr. Mewshaw, is one of encouragement for all to break away, if necessary, travel and find the unattainable freedom. "It is impossible to be as free as people say we might be," Mr. Mewshaw confidently stated. "Man in Motion" grips the struggle of one individual and forces its readers to associate with the fluid penetrating from the ultimate success and failures of Walker Hawley. Other underlying philosophies build upon or subtract from Walker's struggle.

Walker Hawley, as compared to Stephen Dedalus in Joyce's "Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man," portrays the man with everything he could possibly want. Unlike Stephen, Walker does not fully understand his environment. Before escaping from home, religion, family and even country, it is essential for one to comprehend and justify their existence.

A literary belief perpetuated throughout the literary world is that "you cannot go home again." Remain an Expatriot! Mewshaw and his work perpetuate the opposite. "You can always go home again." We often forget that we frequently repeat the mistakes of our parents and seldom strip away the foundation our homes have given. Both Benjamin Braddock in "The Graduate" and Walker Hawley in "Man in Motion" discover, as we all try to, life at its best where life always has been.

Walker returns to Cottage City and Dede Clinton accepting all and forgetting nothing. He now sees the beauty in Cottage City and in the people he lives with. Life, love, religion and people become the associates of Walker Hawley. Although he is immobile after the great "motion", Hawley forms and faces a new life, as challenging and intricate as the one he was searching for.

Good literature should be judged on its ability to create a sense of realness in the reader and of course on its literary style and merit. "Man in Motion" by Michael Mewshaw fulfills this dual menu literature has created for itself.

The motion we all possess should lead us on to bigger and better things. Yet, in the back of our minds we must remember one basic premise, the return is inevitable!

Something Else '70

Wednesday Ed. Events

"Something Else '70" is a five-day happening at the School of Education this week. Subtitled "Alternate Futures in Education," this week long symposium and multi-media fair offers talks, tapings, music, drama, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, and numerous other activities. All university students and faculty and anyone else who is interested are invited to attend. All classes in the School of Education are cancelled during the fair.

University students may earn modular credits by participating in "Something Else '70". Each hour of participation will offer one-half mod credit, and fifteen mod credits will equal one graduation credit from the School of Education.

The Daily Collegian presents abbreviated schedules of "Something Else '70" activities. Due to space limitations, the schedule cannot be printed here in its entirety. Completed schedules will be available in the School of Education and the Northeast Area, where most of the activities are being held.

Meeting For Future Teachers

Over the past year, reports, articles, and news releases have been indicating that teaching positions are more difficult to secure and that there are more graduates seeking positions than ever before. As a result, the Placement Office is constantly seeking new ways to give future teachers additional visibility to increase their chances in the hiring process.

One such opportunity will be presented on Wednesday, November 18, (Something Else '70 week) from 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. in the Mark's Meadow Gymnasium (the training school attached to the School of Education). Representatives from many western Massachusetts school systems will be present to answer specific questions, provide general information about their systems, make applications available, etc.

The School of Education, through its Cooperative School Service Center, has combined efforts with the Educational Placement Office to make this opportunity available to those seeking fall positions.

It is suggested that one take advantage of the interview experience even if he does not necessarily plan to seek a position in western Massachusetts.

Draft Counselor's Corner

CO Counseling Available

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

There is a new service for people interested in, or working on, conscientious objector status. It's called Group CO Counseling. It is designed to help those who are thinking through the conscientious objector position, or are in some stage of applying for it.

Group counseling brings those who are considering applying for a CO together with others who have already done a lot of thinking about it. Each will be able to help the others by sharing the questions and answers which are in their heads. The group can also provide assistance in preparing for personal appearances by roleplaying.

Groups will meet in room 811 Campus Center on Monday and Tuesday afternoons from 1:30 to 4:30. It is run by the Draft Counseling Services and will be led by Gil Salk. Interested people are invited to attend all or part of any of the sessions.

The idea originated with Mrs. Frances Crowe, a Northampton CO counselor who has an amazing success record in assisting counselees to have their positions recognized by the SSS. She also runs groups in her home on Tuesday and Thursday mornings from 10:00 to 1:00, and at the Valley Peace Center on Wednesday evenings from 7:00 to 10:00. She may be contacted at 584-8975.

For those who wish to attend the campus group counseling, a brief description of the format may be in order.

Perhaps the two most difficult problems a conscientious objector faces in seeking recognition of his status are filling out his Form 150 Special Form for Conscientious Objectors and preparing for his personal appearances. The group Counseling process is an excellent method to assist the CO over these hurdles. As he works on his 150, he can discuss his answers with others who are considering their own responses to the same questions. The criticisms he receives will help him understand the depth and ramifications of his objections to war, and to better convey these feelings to the draft board.

In role-playing, Group participants will act as members of a draft board and question the CO applicant on his beliefs. Following this, his responses will be discussed and examined to determine whether they conveyed the information he thought they did, and to see whether the method of stating them may have antagonized the board and made them hostile to him. In this way, the CO will be more confident when the time comes for him to actually confront his board, and more able to handle any "trick" questions they might throw at him.

You're all invited to give it a try.

DVP Announces Schedule For Remainder of 70-71

The Distinguished Visitors Program Committee has announced an impressive schedule of guest speakers for the remainder of the 1970-71 school year.

December 2, the problems of the South African liberation movement will be explained by David M. Sibeko, head of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (South Africa) Mission in Europe and the Americas.

Mrs. W.E.B. Dubois, wife of the late black thinker and leader who was honored by the naming of the Black Studies Department here will appear December 3. Mrs. DuBois was active in researching, writing, and lecturing on black studies and African studies with her husband.

Jean Houston (Mrs. R.E.L. Masters) will speak on the evolution of consciousness December 9. She did extensive research on LSD when it was legal and now is involved in research of altered states of consciousness without drugs. She is the author of Varities of Psychedelic Experience.

"Go Up For Glory" will be the title of a lecture by former Celtics great Bill Russell, scheduled for December 17.

Second semester's first DVP program will present Ernesto Blanco, past Director of Research for the Cuban Revolutionary Government, Department of Non-Conventional Energy Resources of the National Development Commission. Blanco is presently an Adjunct Professor of Engineering at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and has presented numerous conferences on Latin America and international relations. His February 16 address will be on the subject of Cuban communism.

Bernadette Devlin, a 23 year old member of British Parliament, is currently appealing her conviction for organizing police resistance in Londonderry riots in 1969. This outspoken critic of parliamentary democracy will be visiting UMuss February 17.

Senator Robert Packwood of Oregon will speak on population control in his February 22 appearance.

Author of The Population Bomb Dr. Paul R. Ehrlich will describe all dimensions of the population crisis and evaluate courses of action in his March 16 presentation. Dr. Paul Ehrlich is a Professor of Biology at Stanford University and specializes in the study of population biology.

Dick Gregory, leader in the fight for Negro equality and commentator, author, and commedian, is scheduled to visit UMass March 16. Gregory is now touring the country with his message of freedom and equality.

Films On Poverty To Be Shown Tonight

Tuesday, November 17, at 8:00 in Thompson 104 the Committee on Poverty will present, free of charge, four short films dealing with political and economic oppression.

These films, to be shown tonight, are the first in a free series to be shown throughout the year by the Committee on Poverty. The next film, "Battle Of Algiers", will be presented sometime in December.

The first, "Fueras Yauquis", is a French and Spanish film recounting the suppressed facts of the American intervention in Santo Domingo and shows documentary evidence of falsified elections (28 min.)

The second, "6th Street Meat Club", shows the progress of a Black meat coop in Chicago and how it is thwarted through Federal bureaucratic red tape (10 min.).

The third, "Strike City", concerns plantation workers in Mississippi and their efforts to form a farm collective. This program, too, is unsuccessful as the Federal Poverty Program backs down on its support due to senatorial pressures (30 min.).

"The Case Against Lincoln Center", the fourth film, deals with urban oppression and links the problems of the city and corporate imperialism (11 min.).

Fay Knopp To Discuss Non-Violence Training

Fay Knopp, Program Consultant in the Peace Division of the American Friends Service Committee (Quakers), will be on campus on Wednesday, November 18, to discuss ways to introduce nonviolent curricula into the school system.

High school and college social science courses center, for the most part around wars and all forms of violence while neglecting (or mentioning in asides) the history of peaceful, non-violent social change. Mrs. Knopp's objective is to awaken and encourage interest in the teaching of the theory and practice of non-violence.

Mrs. Knopp attended Hartford Art School, UCLA, and the New School of Social Research. She is a draft counselor and prison visitor for the Central Committee of Conscientious Objectors and a founder of the Committee of Responsibility to Save Vietnamese War-Injured Children. In November of 1968 she participated in intensive discussions with the Soviet Peace Committee relating to the Soviet's intervention in Czechoslovakia.

From 10 to 12 AM, Mrs. Knopp will be in the Attic of Montague House (next to School of Ed.) to discuss, with Sidney Simon and Jerry Weinstein of the Humanistic Ed department, ways of introducing non-violence training into secondary schools.

From 12 to 1 she will be in Crabtree House Living and Learning Center to present a report on non-violence training to students

Incomplete grades for the Spring Semester 1970 must be removed by Nov. 30 by a student and his instructor. This will enable all students to preregister during the counseling period, with full knowledge of requirements, deficiencies and prerequisites which must be satisfied and prerequisites which must be satisfied.

Those incomplete grades which are not removed by Nov. 30, 1970 will automatically be converted to W, as implied by the Spring 1970 grading poglicy.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrology helps us to be what we are — it does not try to make us something we are not. Astrology is a valuable key to greater self-understanding. If, indeed, this was all it ever did, it would be doing a great. But through astrology we also are able to perceive future trends and cycles. Astrology helps us to be at the right place at the right time — and to comprehend where we are going and why.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Be independent without irritating one close to you. There are ways to get what you want — without appearing overly aggressive. Don't attempt to be your own lawyer.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Avoid trying to do too much at once. Relative may throw some sharp retorts in your direction. Maintain sense of humor. Don't compound error. Realize some now are supersensitive.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Temptation is to be extravagant. You would be wise to do some comparison shopping. Those who really care do not require elaborate setting. Realize this and act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Sudden changes may upset schedule. Move with the tide. Be aware of subtle nuances. Check details. You gain only if observant. Thorough approach to people, situations is necessary.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Apply light touch. Obtain hint from Taurus message. Social activity favored. Leave serious and detail work to others. Gain overall view.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Protect possessions, assets. Tendency is to misplace or lose valuables while in transit. Accent harmony within family circle. Express yourself in diplomatic but dramatic manner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Unorthodox approach is favored. Routine changes: plans are revised. Keep on top of special situation. Not wise now to delegate duties. Others may not share your convictions — or dedication.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Unusual happening occurs backstage. One who is generally conservative acts in eccentric manner. You will need friends behind the scenes. Get in touch with associate who is at a distance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): If you permit emotions to shove logic aside, the cost could be steep. Don't hang on to intolerable situation — or relationship. Permit no person to use you as door mat.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): If you are depending on word from the top, change your plans. Necessary for you to tie loose ends. Put together puzzle pieces. No one else is going to do it for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Not easy now to define motives, actions. Best to be receptive. Permit mate or partner to have say concerning financial matter. Don't provoke argument. Steer clear of legal entanglement.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Get expert advice before signing over possessions or valuables to any person or group. Some hanky-panky could be taking place. Protect yourself in clinches. Ask questions and obtain answers.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are completing a major cycle. You are determined, at times obstinate, usually dedicated and very attractive to opposite sex. You are better off working for yourself than for others. This is because you are capable of firming policies and getting results via direct action.

NEW YORK (AP)—Bobby Hull and Bobby Orr, who've traveled the road before, are moving towards the top of the National Hockey League scoring statistics.

Hull, a three time NHL scoring champion, has soared into a second place tie with Boston's John McKenzie at 20 points, five less than the leader, Phil Esposito of the Bruins.

Orr, who became the first defenseman in history to win the scoring crown last year when he had an amazing 120 points, moved into a fourth place tie at 19 points with teammate Ken Hodge and Vancouver's Wayne Maki.

Alex Delvecchio of Detroit and Montreal's Jean Beliveau share seventh place with 18 points and four players- Johnny Bucyk of Boston, Jean Ratelle of New York and Orland Kurtenbach and Murray Hall, both of Vancouver, share ninth place with 16 points each.

Bucyk and Montreal's Yvan Cournoyer share the goal scoring lead with 10 each. Glenn Hall and Ernie Wakely of St. Louis share the goal tending lead with a combined 1.60 goals against average.

Harriers Finish Disappointing Tenth In ICA's

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

NEW YORK, N.Y. - A tenth place for the varsity and a sixth place for the freshmen were the best efforts that the UMass cross country team could put together here yesterday in the IC4A's cross country championship.

Over the rugged 5.0 mile Van Cortland Park course both UMass units ran into not only the best running units in the east, but also some of the best in the entire nation.

On Sunday Coach Ken O'Brien felt that a real good performance was needed by the varsity to finish in the top five, and an average one would place the Redmen into the top ten.

Yesterday the latter was the case as the varsity did not put together its best effort of the season. It lost to some mighty good schools in the likes of Villanova and Pittsburgh, and they also beat some mighty good teams in the likes of Dartmouth, St. John's, and Maryland.

O'Brien was pleased with the performance of the freshmen. They didn't put it together as they did in the New Englands and for that matter they didn't put it together as well as they've done during the regular season.

But to run under par as they did and to finish as the sixth best freshman running unit in the east was very encouraging to coach O'Brien.

The coach also felt that the strangeness of the course and the mass start may have also had a telling effect on the frosh. Individually, Rich Sevigny led the way for the Redmen, placing 26th in the big field. Ted Beaulieu ran his best race of the season finishing 29th. Bill Lowry and Doug O'Connell came in 37th and 39th and Joe Frontierro finished the scoring for UMass with a 69th place finish.

The team split for the frosh was only 35 seconds, but the competition was keen and they were beaten by good teams.

Getting back to the varsity, the Redmen seemed to be lacking something which just couldn't be pinned down. Maybe it was a mental aspect. Maybe this race was just anti-climatic to the whole season. Maybe it was a letdown after the New Englands.

It could have been a dozen other things, but whatever it was it kept the Redmen from exhibiting the sharpness that they had shown New England throughout the season.

Ron Wayne was the first Redman to cross the finish line in 21st. place. The New England champ wasn't sharp yesterday. He was real tired after the New Englands last Monday and it took him longer than usual to recover from that race. This, along with the fact that he was meeting his biggest competition of the year made him more hesitant and less aggressive, two aspects that he ran without this season.

Larry Paulson turned in the best effort on the team as he finished 39th, improving on his 79th place performance of last year.

Leo Duart completed the race 67th and he was followed by sophomores Tom Swain and Tom Jasmin who finished 73rd and 90th to complete the varsity scoring.

O'Brien was pleased with the performances of Swain and Jasmin as they ran much more aggressively then they had in the New Englands. They stayed with the main group of runners for the entire race and were able to pick off runners near the end.

The tenth place finish was the second best in UMass history. The '62 team finished the best in seventh place. Over the past few years the team performances for the Redmen have been getting better. Last year's team finished 17th. With continued improvement the Redmen will be a team to reckon with in the years to come.

Bowl Bid On Horizon For BC

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Keeping abreast of the UMass-Boston College football game, now just four days away on Saturday at 1 p.m., here are a few recent notes gathered from the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald Traveler:

BOWL TALK: The Traveler unfolded a story saying that BC had good chances of getting a post-season bowl bid, hinting that the Eagles shouldn't have much trouble with their last two opponents, UMass and Holy Cross.

Here's how one of the paragraphs read: "A 6-2 record automatically became 8-2 since no one but coach Joe Yukica entertained the slightest doubt that the Eagles will polish off Massachusetts this Saturday, then wipe out Holy Cross."

General consessus around the Eagle campus seems to be that BC would be a "candidate" for a bowl, should it win those last two games. This word is based upon the fact that major football teams in the East have been defeating each other with regularity and that the best team in the East, Dartmouth, will not be bowl bound because of an Ivy League ruling prohibiting teams from such post-season affairs.

Yukica is very cool about the whole bowl ballyhoo, being quoted, "The only thing and most important thing on our minds is Massachusetts."

ASSOCIATED PRESS: Just moments after the above sentence was typed, an AP story came across the wire, concerning BC's bowl chances. It read, "BOSTON (AP) - The Boston College football team, beaten only by Penn State and Air Force and favored to win its last two games for an 8-2 season record, was reported last night under consideration for th e Peach Bowl in Atlanta and the Liberty Bowl in Memphis, Tenn."

The publicity director of the Peach Bowl, Bill Robinson, reportedly told the Boston Record American, "right now Boston College and Penn State are the two eastern teams under consideration."

Mr. Robinson passed off this coming weekend's UMass challenge to the Eagles as a breeze tilt for BC when he said, "unless a miracle happens, we know they will finish with an 8-2 record with only Massachusetts and Holy Cross remaining."

The Liberty Bowl publicity director, Jack Bugbee, didn't commit himself as much as Robinson, commenting, "I don't like to say that we are not considering Boston College. A lot will depend on the outcome of games this Saturday, especially the Penn State-Pittsburgh contest." — Very interesting.

COACH COMMENTS - Back to the Boston papers, Yukica gave New England football a big pat on the back as a result of the outstanding B.C. win over Pittsburgh U. In the Globe, he said, "I don't think they know too much about us and New England football before Saturday. They must feel we're for real now. Beating Pitt was a terrific boost for our players, but it also was a boost for New England football."

About the UMass Redmen, Yukica was quoted as follows: "They started slow, but now they appear to be in good form. They're undefeated in their last four games. Right now, UMass is the strongest team in the Yankee Conference."

Reading these tremendous pieces of praise that the Boston papers rightfully are doling out to the BC football team, and one has to come away impressed. Obviously the Eagles are a great football team.

But, this is not time to take anything away from the Redmen. It's certainly easy to look at this game right now and label it a slaughter for the Eagles. And maybe it's nonsense to hold on to any hope of a Redman victory.

From right here, the position on the game is one of non-prediction, a safe way out for sure. Hoping that UMass will make a good showing of itself against the classier BC, the feeling behind this typewriter would be one of estasy should the Redmen win, and praise even though they may bite the dust.

Crew Club Captures Three Races In Frostbite Regatta

By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

PHILADELPHIA - Not even a near-serious car accident, a long hike in the rain, little sleep on a hard floor and practically no food could stop the UMass Crew Club from capturing first place in three out of four races at the Frostbite Regatta Saturday.

The two-man, four-man, and eight-man teams each finished substantially ahead of their competition in the three winning races, with the only UMass defeat coming to the eight in their second race of the day when they finished behind St. Joseph's College by eight tenths of a second.

In a bit of confusion and disorganization, many of the teams slated to race UMass were scratched to ensure races that were primarily made up of members belonging to the same league UMass raced against other Dad Vail schools.

The straight-pair race UMass was prepared to participate in was cancelled, and a shell with a coxswain's seat had to be borrowed for Charles Leonard and Kevin O'Brien to enter the cox-pair event.

Leonard, formerly scheduled as stroke was changed to bow, and O'Brien rowed stroke to accommodate for the opposite oar rigging in the borrowed boat.

Finally, the race was held, and St. Joseph's pair seemed no match for UMass, as Leonard and O'Brien and cox Chris Jedrey whizzed by last year's Dad Vail champions, completing the 1,500 meters in five minutes, six seconds, and leaving St. Joe's twosome 17 seconds behind.

In a three-boat race, the UMass varsity four of Bow, Dave Richard, 2, Tom Mone, 3, Ted Fitzpatrick, Stroke, Jack Appel, and cox Jedrey finished in 4:45, - beating Georgetown University varsity by three seconds with St. Joseph varsity coming in third.

The junior varsity eight rowed impressively in both of their contests. In the junior event, against Dad Vail finalists such as LaSalle, Georgetown, St. Joseph's, and against the U. of Penn. ,ntweights, seven sophomores ad one junior rower, Bow, Paul Winchell, 2, Mel Streim, 3, Joe Piela, 4, Al Flanders, 5, Bill Moran, 6, Jeff Allen, 7, Clay Morin, Stroke, Rick Jones, and cox, Bob Jayes flew by the course in 4:15 eight seconds ahead of second-place LaSalle.

An hour and a quarter later, the JV's competed in the Senior, or varsity, event. Six out of last year's eight St. Joe's varsity returned to just get by UMass at the finish line by a slight margin of eight tenths of a second. The St. Joseph winning time was 4:11.2. Second-place UMass was 4:12; eight seconds later at 4:20 was the LaSalle varsity.

This race was one of the most exciting of the day, as UMass and St. Joseph's kept exchanging the lead on each pull-through of the oar. In the body of the race, the rate of stroking was about even between the two crews; in the sprint, however, UMass' strength was evident as St. Joseph was taking three more strokes per minute than the Redmen.

Coach Mike Faherty expressed his pleasure at the results and disappointment at the fact that the Regatta was disorganized and poorly run.

"This was the best showing we've ever made against schools in our league. The varsity creamed St. Joe's in the four and the two." (St. Joseph was the number one Dad Vail crew last year, while UMass finished fourth in the standings).

Faherty continued, "It was a shame we couldn't race more, and against some teams we do not face in the spring. The times showed certainly we could have been good competition against, for example, the Penn JV's, last year's undefeated national champs, who were pressed in their race and finished at 4:11. Our JV's were not pressed and finished at 4:15."

The Schuykill River had one of its worst cases of pollution on the day of the race. Flood conditions helped an oil slick from 100 miles upstream grease against the shells and oars, leaving the crew with the task of trying to clean up the mess upon their return to UMass.

The car that was transporting ten oarsmen halted north of Hartford, Conn. Friday night when a fire broke out behind the right rear tire. Quick action by two of the rowers and the heavy downpour of rain put out the flames. After the tire was removed, the axle rod and wheel broke off. While the car was towed, the rest of the team trudged a couple of miles in the puddles to the gas station. The night was spent on the floor of the TV room in an oarsman's parents' East Hartford home. Determination to reach Philadelphia and complete the hard work that had gone into preparing for the Regatta forced a reshuffling of personnel into any available cars. With not much sleep nor eating, one group left Hartford at 3 a.m., and another two groups at 5 a.m., finally arriving at Philadelphia no more than one or two hours before the first race.

"I don't think our teams were as sharp as they could have been - the balance was a little off," complained Faherty. "We didn't get a chance to warm up. The only redeeming point of the day was that we won the races rather easily."

SAVING TREES - The University today will begin to move several elm trees at the Whitmore end of the campus pond to several other locations on campus, in order to save the trees from any dangers which they might have encountered as construction begins this month at that end of the pond for the new fine arts center. THE CLOUD—BUSTER—Did you ever want your very own "orgone" powered "cloud buster"? Well... the young man watching the mass of pipes, carefully arranged and aimed at the nearest cloud doesn't seem too trusting of its powers to ward off those rainy days. The contraption, based on the principles of an obscure man named Reich, gathers all the "orgone" energy and makes good use of it.

Folksinger Slated Tonight At Campus Crusade Meeting

"College Life", an informal biweekly program sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ, will he held tonight from 8 to 9 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The program will include a folksinger, students sharing their experiences of the relevance of Jesus Christ in their lives, a guest speaker from M.I.T., and "funky" happenings like a door prize and refreshments afterwards.

Tonight the main speaker will be Dave O'Dowd, director of Campus Crusade at M.I.T. While a student at Northwestern University, O'Dowd was confronted with the personal claims of Jesus of Nazareth during a time when he was agnostic and skeptical.

He will be giving reasons why he investigated Christianity and found it to be a rational alternative to his agnosticism. His talk is entitled " The God Who is There."

Good entertainment is a feature of College Life, and tonight Gary Morris, a UMass student from Cape Cod, will be providing a 20 minute selection of his folk music.

Previous College Life Meetings have had groups like "Clear Sky", the band with which Morris is working. One month ago in Van Meter Lounge, a Christian rock group from Brattleboro, Vt. provided a program where members of the group told how they had found Jesus while being "hung up" in acid, spiritualism, and anti-Christian feelings and beliefs.

The last College Life meeting two weeks ago featured Clark Shattuck, a UMass student and Vietnam War veteran who entertained and led the crowd in some folk songs. After a number of students, including a foreign student from Taiwan, stood up spontaneously to talk about their experiences, a local Campus Crusade leader spoke about Old Testament prophecies that described the Messiah's coming, including the exact year (32 A.D.) in which the Messiah would be revealed, prophecies made around 500 B.C.

These meetings have drawn between 50 and 75 students each time.

In a day when college students are "bagging" institutional religion and ritual, growing movements like Campus Crusade indicate that students are still looking for God and many are finding Him through faith in Jesus.

"Something '70"

Academic Variety Explored By Educ.

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

While the normal grind of University academic life continues, modular credit week, "Something Seventy" at the School of Education, is proving itself to be immensely successful in its attempt to bring many "variegated" activities to the campus community.

All regular classes are suspended this week at the School of Education to allow students the freedom to attend which ever of the numerous modular sessions they want. The School of Education, as in past years, has opened the opportunity to accumulate modular credits to the entire University community.

"The purpose" of the week, according to Secretary to the Asst. Dean of Special Programs, Pat Crisson, is to give University students a chance to "investigate" for an entire week different fields of interest. "Instead of taking a normal semester course when credit is "contingent" upon "performance".

Monday, according to School of Ed estimates, approximately 3,000 people participated in the day's activities. The prospects are that the first days' record attendance figures will be beaten before "Something '70 is over.

The modular credit system works as follows: each activity attended equals one modular credit, fifteen modular credits will equal one university credit through the School of Ed, to be counted as any elective would be.

Education majors can apply modular credits to their major, while availing themselves of the modular credit program throughout the year.

Miss Crosson also pointed out that "Something '70" policies and explore other facets of education without the "pressures" of the regular learning environment.

South Vietnamese Find Enemy Ammo Warehouse

SAIGON (AP) - Lancing into an area of Cambodia long abandoned to the enemy, a South Vietnamese task force reported Tuesday it had seized one of the largest ammunition caches of the war.

Military spokesmen said the first day of the new drive opposite the central highlands netted 254 tons of 85mm shells used in artillery and Soviet made tanks.

North Vietnamese forces have used such artillery against border camps in the central high lands, but tanks have been sighted only rarely.

The operation, involving 4,500 troops of the South Vietnamese 22nd Division, is aimed at cutting off North Vietnamese infiltration into South Vietnam and destroying supply dumps, a spokesman said.

It took the troops deep into North Vietnamese held territory in Ratanakiri Province, a region the Cambodian government abandoned to the enemy when North Vietnamese opened their attack on Cambodia's army last spring.

No allied troops have operated in the area since.

In addition to discovering the cache, South Vietnamese headquarters in Saigon claimed the troops killed 18 enemy soldiers and suffered two wounded, both in a helicopter hit by enemy ground fire.

U.S. B52s and smaller jet fighter bombers pounded North Vietnamese supply routes and depots both to the north and south of the task force.

The U.S. Command said it was providing no direct support to the operation, centered east of Lomphat, a Cambodian provincial capital about 185 miles north of Saigon.

The operation was the fourth major drive into Cambodia launched by South Vietnamese troops in the past three weeks as the onset of the dry season gave them more mobility.

About 16,000 South Vietnamese now are operating in Cambodia, a spokesman said. This is far short of the peak 47,000 troops who crossed the border last spring.

Elsewhere in Cambodia, North Vietnamese troops struck the government's northern front for the eighth consecutive day, cutting off a five battalion Cambodian task force that was trying to clear Highway 7 about 45 miles north of Phnom Penh.

The Cambodian high command reported two strong enemy attacks near the capital. One was directed at Phum Trapeang Tetung, 11 miles northwest of Phnom Penh, the capital. The other hit Kompong Pring, about 14 miles southeast of the capital.

The attacks were considered the most serious in months on the west bank of the Mekong River. They were more significant than the fights across the river from the capital that occur with some frequency but do not threaten the city.

Vietnam Veterans Have Trouble Finding Jobs After Discharge

WASHINGTON (AP) - Returning Vietnam war veterans are having an increasingly tough time finding jobs despite special government help and the situation is likely to grow worse as the war winds down, the Labor Department said Monday.

Of some three million Vietnam veterans in the labor force, about 200,000 or 6.5 per cent were jobless in mid 1970 compared with a national jobless rate of 5 per cent at that time, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said in its Monthly Labor Review magazine.

The national jobless rate in the past three months since then has climbed to 5.6 per cent of the work force and if the veterans' pattern followed the same trend, their unemployment rate now would approach 7 per cent.

Joblessness among veterans has risen in the past year as more came home to compete in a slowing economy, the report said. The 6.5 per cent veterans' jobless rate in mid 1970 was up from 4.5 per cent a year earlier, it said.

"As reduction in the armed forces strength continues, others will also be looking for work, at least temporarily. With the number of veterans rising, there is growing concern regarding their employment situation."

President Nixon and his economic advisers have pointed to the slowing of the war and the nation's transition from a war time to peacetime economy as a major reason for rising joblessness. The report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics was the first showing the specific effect on returning veterans.

The report showed unemployment among Vietnam veterans aged 20 to 29 was highest among those under 25, with a jobless rate of 8.7 per cent at mid 1970. It is probably higher now.

While the number of Vietnam veterans who did find jobs between mid 1969 and mid 1970 rose 600,000, the number of returning vets climbed 700,000 during the same period, adding 100,000 to the jobless rolls.

Mills House Elects Steering Committee

By SANDY MITCHNER
Staff Reporter

A group of about fifty concerned members met late Monday evening at Mills house to elect a steering committee, which would function as a governing body in the controling, budgeting and use of the Black Cultural Center.

The meeting was called by people, who work in the Black Cultural Center, many of them undergraduate students, decided that the organization should be student administered.

The steering committee will work in close association with the Director of the Black Cultural Center, and will also hold open meetings. This will enable any community member to initiate any new suggestions or bring up any important issues. It was also requested that at least one position, on the committee, be held open for an African student representative.

The main idea behind the election of the steering committee is that students should themselves, be involved in the administrating of the Black Cultural Center.

A committee of fourteen members was elected. A proposal for impeachment of a committee member was mentioned but it's suggestion lead to such heated debate that the proposal was dropped for further consideration.

Cultural Center Statement Issued

The Black Cultural Center Steering Committee released this statement yesterday.

The headlines and story about the Black Cultural Center appearing in the MDC of Nov. 17 is misleading and potentially damaging to the efforts of the Black Community to organize itself to deal most effectively with conditions on campus.

The Collegian story suggests and your headline blares out the totally erroneous information "Mills Meeting Stalls, No Leader Chosen," which

A. completely misrepresents the purpose of the meeting, and

B. proclaims to the world that this totally fictitious purpose was not accomplished and that black folks left the meeting in disarray.

The facts, however, are as follows:

Contrary to the impression the MDC gave, the meeting was for the purpose of recreating a governing committee of students to administer the affairs of the Black Cultural Center. This was accomplished smoothly and efficiently. There is now a new committee which has been chosen for that purpose.

The impression that there was some kind of power struggle, or an attempted coup of some sort comes entirely from the fanticies of the Collegian staff.

U.S. Questions Report On Kent State Murders

WASHINGTON (AP)-A high Justice Department official said Tuesday federal authorities are trying to resolve some apparent conflicts between information received by an Ohio grand jury and the Federal Bureau of Investigation on the Kent State University shooting.

Although he did not say so directly, the official indicated part of the department's questions concern a film of the May 4 incident which was shown to the grand jury but apparently has been viewed only recently by federal officials.

The official, whose name could not be used under rules of the background briefing at which he spoke, also said it would be naive to conclude that all school desegregation problems have been solved in the South.

Earlier Tuesday, seven reporters walked out of a briefing session with Asst. Atty. Gen. Jerris Leonard when Leonard refused to make his remarks for the record. Several reporters stayed behind.

At the background briefing the official said the Justice Department is still investigating both evidentiary and legal questions surrounding the death of four students and the wounding of nine others on the Kent State campus May 4.

The students were shot when Ohio National Guardsmen fired into a crowd of demonstrators after four days of antiwar activities on the campus.

The report of a special state grand jury, which concluded that the Guardsmen acted in self defense still is being analyzed, the official said. He said a decision on calling a federal grand jury probe of the incident would be made within 30 days.

The official said the main task before federal authorities is "attempting to resolve what would appear to be conflicts in what we have and what the state grand jury had."

THREE hoax calls were made concerning Bartlett early yesterday morning around 9 a.m. Bomb calls were also received concerning the School of Business, Flint Laboratory and Herter Hall. A thorough search, after closing of the buildings revealed nothing. According to a member of University security, people will be searched upon entering Herter Hall today. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Bomb Hoax Law

Federal Law 18 USCA 837 (d) reads as follows: Whoever through use of mail, telephone, telegraph or other instrument of commerce willfully imputs or conveys or causes to be imparted or conveyed any threat or false information knowing the source to be false, concerning any attempt or alleged attempt being made, or to be made, to damage or destroy any building or other real personal property for the purpose of interfering with its use for educational, religious, charitable, residential, business or civic objective, or of intimidating any person pursuing such objectives, shall be subject to imprisonment for not more than one year or a fine of not more than $10,000 or more

Commonwealth of Massachusetts law 269-14 Felony (BOMB HOAX) states that bomb threats are punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years or both.

The University administration is now and has been working closely with the phone company to install sophisticated tracing system on phones that can trace calls for periods even after an incoming call is hung up. The administration has also begun instructing persons working in buildings to become familiar with their surroundings and notice any strange or out of place objects. In addition, by federal procedure, the FBI must be notified on every bomb hoax call.

Trees Moving In Wake of Construction

Several trees and shrubs will be moved today by UMass physical plant personnel in preparation for the impending construction of the new Fine Arts Building it was announced yesterday.

The trees and shrubs will be relocated from their present location between the pond and Haigis Mall to the area around SBA, Herter Hall, etc. Joe DiCarlo of the Physical Plant said that approximately 9 trees and 25 small shrubs would be moved. The larger trees will be moved later in the week by a firm from Boston.

DiCarlo mentioned that "8-9" large elm trees would be cut down by the Fine Arts Building contractor later when construction is about to begin.

The elms are located on the road from N. Pleasant St. to Memorial Hall. He added that some of the trees which are not stricken with the killer Dutch Elm Disease would be protected within the construction site

Kennedy Upstages Byrd

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, who is considering challenging assistant Democratic Leader Edward M. Kennedy, deferred to Kennedy in mid sentence Monday in adjourning the Senate.

Byrd, who frequently has handled the routine chore since becoming secretary of Senate Democrats, was starting to move Senate adjournment when Kennedy walked in.

He stopped, and turned around as the Massachusetts senator went ahead and moved adjournment.

As printed in Tuesday's Congressional Record, the exchange makes it look like Kennedy interrupted Byrd.

The exchange:

"Mr. Byrd of West Virginia. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate -

"Mr. Kennedy. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the previous order, and, pursuant to Senate Resolution 481, as a further mark of respect for Gen. Charles de Gaulle, former President of France, that the Senate now adjourn."

Gofman Refuses To Testify

NEW YORK (AP)-Dr. John W. Gofman, a leading critic of the Atomic Energy Commission, said Tuesday he has decided not to testify in a landmark AEC hearing on a proposed nuclear power plant because the hearing is "a kangaroo court."

Gofman, who works for the AEC supported Lawrence Radiation Laboratory in Livermore, Calif., urged instead that those opposed to nuclear power plants work to get a referendum on the ballot calling got a moratorium on construction.

Gofman appeared recently at UMass under the auspices of the Distinguished Ecologists Lecture Series.

The scientist's latest attack on the AEC came as an industry group, the Atomic Industrial Forum, met in Washington and heard forum president, Sherman R. Knapp, express concern that environmental groups would delay nuclear growth by legal "harrassment."

Controversy over nuclear power has grown with the developing environmental concern, whereas only a few years ago the concept of cheap, clean power from the atom was widely accepted.

Gofman, with his colleague, Dr. Arthur R. Tamplin, have become leaders in the anti AEC movement. They argue that the AEC, charged with promoting the use of nuclear power, should not be entrusted with regulating that use.

A major test of the issues has arisen in the proposal to build a nuclear power plant on Long Island. The hearing for the plant, under way, is the first since the passage of major federal environmental legislation.

An environmental group, the Lloyd Harbor Study Group, has made the hearing a test case, and billed Gofman as one of their major witnesses. A summary of his testimony had been given to newsmen in advance.

He said he now urges environmental groups to follow the example of Eugene, Ore. in turning to a moratorium on the ballot.

Two years ago, voters in Eugene approved a $25 million bond issue on a nuclear electric plant. Earlier this year, the voters reversed themselves and ordered a four year delay in construction, while allowing spending for safety and environmental studies.

Climbers Near Top Of "El Capitan"

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (AP)-Rock climbers Warren Harding and Dean Caldwell inched their way determinedly toward the summit of El Capitan Tuesday hungry and weary after 26 days on a vertical rock wall 3,000 feet high.

Friends at the summit were preparing a steak dinner with all the trimmings for the bearded climbers who have subsisted on candy bars and sardines for the past week.

After rejecting rescue by the National Park Service last Friday, the pair toiled with renewed spirit near the top of the unclimbed section of El Capitan known as the "Wall of Morning Light."

It is the longest and possibly the most difficult of the half dozen routes up the great rock monolith overlooking Yosemite Valley.

They crossed the final unknown passage Monday, the "Great Reef," an overhang jutting straight out for 15 feet or more.

That put them within striking distance of the top Tuesday-about 300 to 350 feet from the summit, according to best estimates.

Harding, 46, of West Sacramento, Calif., was the first man to lead a party to the summit of El Capitan by any route-climbing the nearby "Nose" route in November 1958. He has done a number of other major first ascents in Yosemite, which is about 200 miles east of San Francisco.

Caldwell, 27, of Portland, Ore., is a veteran of Yosemite climbs as well as five expeditions to Peru's icy Andean peaks jutting 20,000 feet into the Southern Hemisphere sky.

Their Yosemite venture, launched on Oct. 23, is a record breaking one, though not planned that way.

The longest previous sustained climb up Yosemite's vertical and overhanging cliff of granite was 11 days and 12 nights. Harding and Caldwell had planned on a 10 day attempt of the "Wall of the Morning Light," El Capitan's southeast face.

But bad weather and unusually difficult climbing conditions repeatedly set them back and several times they had to reration their short food supply.

A storm had stranded them halfway up the face for nearly a week, through last Wednesday. Since then, they have made some of their best time. Often their average gain has been about 100 feet a day.

Ky Moves On To Colorado

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) - South Vietnam Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky left Rhode Island for the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs Tuesday afternoon following a 24 hour visit to the Newport Naval Base.

The four engine jet carrying Ky, his wife and about a dozen other South Vietnamese took off from Quonset Point Naval Air Station at 3 p.m. The entourage had taken an eight mile boat trip from Newport to Quonset Point.

As Ky left the Naval Base, eight members of New England Committee for Nonviolent Action picketed outside Gate 1, near where Ky boarded the boat.

A spokesman, calling Ky a "cardboard Mussolini, kept in power by U.S. forces," said the group was protesting his visit and the Vietnam war in general.

There was no indication that Ky ever saw the protestors.

During the day, Ky made an official call on Vice Adm. Richard Colbert, president of the Naval War College, and visited the officer candidate school where some of his countrymen are undergoing training as part of the Vietnamization program. David Eisenhower, grandson of former President Dwight Eisenhower, is an officer candidate at Newport. A spokesman said Ky and young Eisenhower's paths did not cross during the visit.

Ky spoke with the young Vietnamese officers in their native tongue.

Newsmen were barred from the base Tuesday.

Ky's activities were carried out under tight security. Three security boats accompanied the party as it crossed Narragansett Bay to Quonset Point.

While Ky talked with the admiral, his wife and Mrs. Colbert journeyed off base to see Hunter House, a restored Colonial mansion in the city of Newport.

Seale Trial Begins

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-The trial of Black Panther party national Chairman Bobby Seale and a female Panther opened Tuesday with jury selection-but after 3 1/2 hours of intense questioning no prospective jurors had been empanelled.

The prosecution and the defense each used one of their 60 peremptory challenges. About a dozen more potential jurors were excused after filing letters or after declaring they knew men in the district attorney's office.

In all, attorneys for both sides questioned three witnesses-the two who were challenged and a student who said jury duty would jeopardize his coming graduation from the University of Connecticut in February.

One of the defense attorneys, Charles R. Garry of San Francisco, said he would agree to the student's dismissal "reluctantly" because he was "the only young person on the jury." Garry's reference was to the pool of 50 from which the court will try to pick a jury of 12 jurors and four alternates.

The prosecution used its peremptory challenge to dismiss a 62 year old quality control supervisor from New Haven who testified that he had read "casually" about the Black Panthers but "never discussed it," and had "no opinion whatsoever" about them.

The defense used its challenge on the first prospective juror after Judge Harold M. Mulvey refused to dismiss him for cause. A middleaged white factory foreman from Wallingford, he had said he would be able to consider the defendants "innocent until proven guilty" but added: "If there weren't something there, they wouldn't be on trial. But it has got to be proven."

Seale, 34, and Mrs. Huggins, 23, face capital charges in connection with the May 1969 slaying of another Panther, Alex Rackley, in a rural, swampy area 25 miles northeast of New Haven. They are among 14 Panthers originally arrested in the Rackley slaying.

Near the start of the session in Superior Court, Garry, chief counsel for the Panthers who is representing Seale, criticized the makeup of the 50 member jury panel because there was only one Negro on it. All of them "seemed at least my age or older," Garry said. "Let the record show that I'm in excess of 60 years." They are "not the poor group of my client and not the poor group of Miss Roraback's client," Garry said.

Dr. Niering To Speak On Wetlands, Marshes

Dr. William A. Niering, secretary of the Ecological Society of America, will speak on "The Role of Wetlands, Marshes and Estuaries in our Survival," tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Campus Center Autditorium, as the fourth part of the Distinguished Ecologists Lecure Series, sponsored by CEQ.

Currently the director of the Connecticut Arboretum and a professor of botany at Connecticut College in New London, Dr. Niering was appointed chairman of the Environmental Council for the state of Connecticut by Governor Dempsey. His studies in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania led to the creation of the Cranberry Bog Preserve. In 1964, Dr. Niering participated as a land ecologist in an expedition to Kapingamarangi Atoll in the South Pacific. Four years later, he was appointed conservation consultant to the Regional Plan Association in New York City. His studies of the Greater Metropoliton Area resulted in Nature in the Metropolis. Dr. Niering has also done extensive studies of the deserts of Arizona and California.

Red Tape Dominates Grad Senate

By ROBERT S. McDONNELL
Staff Reporter

Discussion and tabling of resolutions were the preoccupation of the Grad Student Senate at its bi-weekly meeting Monday night.

Before bureaucracy dominated, however, two announcements of concern to all grad students were made.

First, it was mentioned that all grad students with children may be eligible for state housing assistance, up to 70% of rental expenses. Residents of Amherst in this category should contact the Amherst Housing Council for details and applications while those living in other towns should make inquiries of their local boards.

Secondly, Mr. Michel Oren spoke on the Federal Food Subsidy program. He noted that it was not necessary to be on welfare to take advantage of this aid and that a great many individuals and families in the area may be eligible. One example given was that a single student with net income of less than $175.00 per month can receive this assistance. Those interested should contact their nearest welfare office.

On the topic of university governance, President Dan Collins stated that a formalized plan to combine the three existing governments, undergrad, grad and faculty senates, into one body, will be presented to the Board of Trustees on February 15, 1971.

The Day Care Center is coming closer to reality with a target of next semester as an opening date. Budgets and details are nearing completion. The center will be housed in Bowditch Lodge near the stadium and will be maintained by a professional staff augmented by students from both the Center for Early Childhood Education of the School of Education and the Child Care Center of the School of Home Economics.

Initial plans allow for only a limited number of children but this is expected to be enlarged with time and as additional resources become available. A screening committee will be organized soon.

The Committee to Save the Deerfield Valley has had difficulty with the Army Corps of Engineers in setting up a forum with them. They are continuing their efforts and hope for a debate is still held.

One of the few actions taken at the meeting was to authorize transfer of $200.00 to the Draft Counseling Service to allow Grad Students its use. Anyone seeking advice and help may contact Gil Salk or a member of his staff on the second floor of the Student Union.

On the topic of University Security the Senate tabled two actions. One was to recommend that parking fees be raised to pay for additional security and the second was to set up a Parking Committee. Also on the topic of parking, Bob Ulrich is chairing a committee to study the parking sticker and space allocation situation. He noted that the Campus Center is 90 to 95% empty during the week and if employees of the Campus Center were allowed to park there, as many as 300 additional spaces would become available to students.

Finally, communication from the faculty senate was received concerning academic honesty. After some sparked debate, a motion to set up a committee to study the issue of a grad student-faculty academic honesty code, was tabled for two weeks. A finalized resolution will be acted upon at the next meeting on November 30.

Maddox Tears Out Phone, Claims It Was Bugged

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - "It's intolerable," said Gov. Lester Maddox Tuesday after he ripped the telephone out of the wall. "Whatever is responsible for this ought to be imprisoned for life or deported."

The object of Maddox's wrath lay partially disassembled on his desk. "I'm not surprised that it's red," governor Maddox declared.

The telephone - a special hot line connecting the governor's office and those of the other governors to an emergency center - was under a blanket indictment charging that the telephones were bugged.

Maddox had his telephones examined, declared he was suspicious of it and then ripped it out of the wall with a mighty jerk as television cameras ground away.

"I presume it was tapped," Maddox said. "Mine was probably the first one they tapped."

However, he said later he doubted anyone would want to tap his telephone "because I don't keep any secrets."

Zell Miller, the governor's executive secretary, said he picked up the telephone after he heard the report and could hear voices on the other end, presumably from a center in Texas to which the telephones connect.

"We were told that the telephone was especially wires and that they could also listen to us from the other end if they reversed the wiring," Miller said.

Maddox refused to say who examined his telephone. He described the persons as "electronics experts." Telephone company workers were peering into the telephone's immer workings later Tuesday afternoon.

Maddox said he has never used the telephone, which Miller said he understood was for use only in extreme emergency conditions, such as in the event a governor feels it necessary to call in federal troops.

The report of the bugging indicated that a device attached to some of the phones is the system could pick up private conversations within the governors' officers, even when the telephone was not in use.

Paper Recycling To Start Here

A project aimed at reducing the amount of forest required for papermaking and saving a little bit more of the wilderness from attack will soon be implemented on campus. Beginning Tuesday, Newspaper Recycling boxes will be placed in the Student Union and Campus Center by the Committee on Recycling Excess Stuff for the collection of used newspapers. The papers, once collected will ultimately find their way back to the paper mills and into the newsprint making process in place of fresh pulp.

This is the first of several projects aimed at establishing a recycling-reuse clinic in the community to replace the use-waste concept now prevalent. Other items which could be recycled or reused include aluminum cans, glass bottles, etc.

The collection of newspapers in the Union and Campus Center constitute Phase I of the newspaper recycling project. Readers will be asked only to take an extra 10 seconds to drop the paper in the proper recepticle instead of the waste basket or nearest piece of furniture. The University will benefit from the collection process since the amount of waste generated by the discarding of the Collegian alone is estimated as more than three tons a week.

Phase II involves extension of the project to various dining commons. Establishment of this phase is dependent upon recruitment of "dorm coordinators" who would be responsible for seeing that the people in his area are complying with the basic requirements of the system.

A similar group at Hampshire College have had a paper recycling project running with good success for some time. The project, which serves as the pilot for the UMass system, has shown that a rotating set "Coordinators" relieves some of the responsibility upon the individual worker. C.O.R.E.S. is looking for additional coordinators to implement Phase II as soon as possible. Anyone interested can contact Lynn Edwards at 253-9878.

At the present time the only major problem holding up full functioning of the system is in the location of an adequate on campus storage area for the collected papers. Off-campus sites have been suggested but those located may prove inadequate for Phase II-III operations. Unofficial university help has been volunteered but no on campus site has been forthcoming. Official University aid is now being sought.

Leach To Discuss African Program

There will be presentations on "Crossroads Africa -- 1971" Wed. Nov. 18 at 8 p.m. in the Babbott Room of the Octagon at Amherst College and Thurs. Nov. 19 at 9:45 p.m. in Room 108 of the Academic Building at Hampshire College given by Jim Leach a participant in the program in 1970.

Crossroads Africa is a non-profit, non-governmental organization which sends North Americans to Africa in groups of ten for eight weeks during the summer. A work project involving manual labor is done for six weeks, with two weeks reserved for travel.

Something Else '70

Thursday Ed. Events

"Something Else '70" is a five-day happening at the School of Education this week. Subtitled "Alternate Futures in Education," this week long symposium and multi-media fair offers talks, tapings, music, drama, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, and numerous other activities. All university students and faculty and anyone else who is interested are invited to attend. All classes in the School of Education are cancelled during the fair.

University students may earn modular credits by participating in "Something Else '70". Each hour of participation will offer one-half mod credit, and fifteen mod credits will equal one graduation credit from the School of Education.

The Daily Collegian presents abbreviated schedules of "Something Else '70" activities. Due to space limitations, the schedule cannot be printed here in its entirety. Completed schedules will be available in the School of Education and the Northeast Area, where most of the activities are being held.

Tony The Tiger Tells A Big Tale

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Staff Reporter

Tony the Tiger outclasses mothers according to Robert B. Choate, a former special advisor to Robert Finch. Choate, participating in the School of Education's Something Else '70, accused the food industries of blase and deceptive advertising that equates sugar with alertness and brightness, and misleads and miseducate not only children, but adults as well.

Mr. Choate, a civil engineer by profession, became the Ralph Nader of nutrition this past summer when he testified before the Senate on the value, or lack thereof, of dry breakfast cereals. Cocoa Krispies, contrary to what television advertisements imply, do not give a person good wind, Froot Loops do not have a fruit content, Sugar Smacks do not necessarily let one play ping pong better, and there is no evidence that Cheerios "make you feel groovy all morning long." Advertisements like these and those from the Grocery Manufacturers of America, form 65% of all TV ad revenue. Because of the intensity of the advertising, Choate said, good nutritional practices are neglected in the United States.

Mr. Choate also challenged the nutritional myth of the four food groups that one needs (dairy, meat, grain, fruit) by saying that they were the result of the four major food lobbyists. A more honest way to teach basic nutrition to children and adults would be by teaching nutrient groups, rather than food groups. This should be accompanied, Choate added, by more truthful and even educational advertising.

During his presentation yesterday, Choate also discussed the role of nutrition in education. Children who are dull, irritable, and prone to sleep in school are often hungry of malnourished. Choate said that the Nixon administration has done more to feed hungry and malnourished people than the Kennedy and Johnson administrations combined, but there are literally millions of Americans who have not been reached by the food stamp program, direct distribution of commodities, or by the school lunch program.

Choate discussed a variety of other nutrition-education oriented topics:

Although there has been a revolution in food technology for the past twenty-five years, there has been little attempt to educate the consumer.

The government still pays farm subsidies on the basis of tonnage, rather than nutrients. This has prevented many new foods, such as "Opaque-2-Corn", a superior, yet lower yield corn, from being produced.

Soy beans, a flexible, cheap and nutritional food, will be used in the future to augment other foods. Choate worried that the consumer may not know he is buying a soy bean augmented food.

Educators should take a greater lead in the fight for consumer education. "People talking to each other", he said is fine, "but that doesn't count when we have to change the policies of this country."

On a scale of 1 through 60, the top three cereals, nutritionally speaking, are Kellogg's Product 19, General Mills Kaboom and Total. The cereals served in the UMass dining commons are rated as follows:

7-Kellogg's Special K
9-Kellogg's Sugar Smacks
13-Kellogg's Raisin Bran
21-Kellogg's Froot Loops
22-Kellogg's Apple Jacks
25-General Mills Cheerios
31-General Mills Wheaties
33-Kellogg's Stars
39-Kellogg's Sugar Pops
40-Kellogg's Corn Flakes
41-Kellogg's Rice Krispies
43-Kellogg's Cocoa Krispies
60-Kellogg's Sugar Frosted Flakes

Choate said that he felt Frosted Flakes should be taken off the market. He added that even the top three cereals could be improved.

Las Vegas Night To Be Held Friday

For the fifth consecutive year, the brothers of Alpha Phi Omega will sponsor their annual Las Vegas Nite. This year, the festivities will take place in the SU Ballroom, on this Friday night, November 20th from 8 to midnight.

As in the past, a mock gambling casino will be set up, complete with roulette wheels, card tables and dice throwing. An auction will also be held during the evening, when prizes donated by local merchants in Amherst and Northampton will be auctioned off for the play money won during the night.

The Las Vegas Nite Queen will be announced during the evening. Tables are set up in the Student Union lobby and in the Campus Center near the University Store, between Monday, November 16th and Friday, November 20th between 9 a.m.-4 p.m. During these hours, votes may be cast by contributing change (pennies, nickels, dimes etc.) under the candidate of the person's choice.

All the proceeds from the Las Vegas Nite project will be contributed to charity. The festivities are open to everybody.

"Man, This Thing Is Murder — But Only Second Degree, Mind You"

Course Exclusions

In a large University, such as this one, it is expected that oftentimes, one will not be excepted into the course of his choice. However, those who want to take courses in their major should definitely be given preference over those students who are not. It has happened that students have had to drop their majors because they could not be enrolled in their courses needed to fulfill their requirements. Granted, the University has a great need for more teachers, space, etc., however it is grossly unfair for a student to be accepted for a course when he is not majoring in that subject, when one who is majoring in it, has been refused.

Book Reviewers: Where Are You?

Daily Collegian Book Reviewers: It is now possible to review any book available in the Campus Center Book Store. If you would like to review one, just see me in the Collegian office sometime before Thursday night each week. We have several books now which you might be interested in reviewing. If you have not yet been contacted, please come in to see me any Tuesday or Thursday afternoon. Those of you who are currently doing book reviews, would you please call me sometime and give me a progress report?

We are trying to make Book Review a regular feature. To do this we must have REGULAR BOOK REVIEWERS. If you are at all interested please see me so that we can begin to make some headway in the matter. One review from each reviewer a month is all we ask.

In these troubled times the public is in great need of spiritual guidance in reading matter. If you can help, please do so; start reviewing books. Peace.

The Solon Snafu

I think its Legislator's Day at the football game this week and you can just hear the conversation from the five or six austere lawmakers who will bother to come:

—Is this Boston College?

—No, this is the state university of Massachusetts.

—Oh, is this place that sends all those goddamn academic snobs down to Boston to try wangle money from us in the legislature for crap like education, when we could be spending it on roads or legislative pay raises?

—Yep, this must be the place. Sure is big enough. When in hell did they build all these buildings?

—How the hell do I know? I sleep through those stupid meetings, and just vote the way Mossy or Blackie tells me to.

—I didn't know it was this big. Why look, at that big white thing, and that stupid looking thing with the ramp. That must be the ROTC building, because it looks like a fort. And where did those skyscrapers come from. Your sure this isn't Scollay Square?

—It says on the sign over there, University of Massachusetts. If I knew they were getting away with building all this I would have raised a stink. That shows you though. I'm away from this campus for only 20 years and they go and change everything. I tell you, its those academic snobs that always are bothering us.

—What was that dirty looking thing over there?

—Why, it's a student. Do you mean to tell me we are authorizing our money to send that thing to school? I thought every student had to wear a tie and suit jacket. I mean these long hairs can't be our students. They must be the outsiders that cause all the trouble. Are you sure this is UMass?

—It must be. What else could be this far in the country? Besides, the card board signs on the dirt roads that we took from the turnpike, said that it was in this direction.

—Well, frankly I'm shocked. You'd think those snobs would tell us what they were doing. I mean, I haven't been on this campus in the 20 years I've been a servant for the people, of the Great Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

—I'm not taking this sitting down. I read this study saying that Massachusetts was 49th in the country in per capita state aid to higher education, what ever that means. I aim to make us 50th.

—Right on.

Loneliness.

We've all experienced it. Many of us are experiencing it right now. It can be a real drag. You may feel like crying, or worse, wishing that your "life would simply cease." Few things rival loneliness in ability to get people down. Loneliness is a bad feeling.

I've often been lonely; it's a feeling I know well. Lonely simply for someone to talk to me. Lonely for someone to love me. Lonely for a specific person whom I wanted, knowing that she did not want me.

Anyone who has been lonely knows the feeling. But you should also realize that, quite frequently, loneliness is largely self-induced, and it can be as much your own fault as it is the fault of anyone else.

Because people are usually lonely for people. The disease and the cure are twins. Loneliness is nothing more than a failure to get together, people with people. What you need is another person, human as you are, and there are plenty such people walking around.

The University of Massachusetts is a community of over twenty thousand people, the large majority of whom are in the student age-group. There is certainly no shortage of people here. While the whiner may be able to get away with contending that there's nothing to do (which is generally not true any way), he can't possibly claim that there's no one to do. Quite simply there are plenty of people here who happen to like other people.

Did you ever live on the fourteenth floor of a tower and not know the people on the fifteenth? Or across the way in another tower? In the low rise next door? How many people have there been in your classes whom you never got to know because you didn't strike up a conversation with them when you saw them two and three days a week? Has there ever been anyone on the elevator or in the Hatch? Anyone who picked you up hitchhiking?

The people and the opportunities are both there. Many friends and a few lovers are looking for you too. Don't keep them, or yourself, waiting too long. Peace.

A Doctor's Letter To His Son

This letter was recently written by Dr. Paul Williamson, a McComb, Mississippi, physician, to his son who was about to enter Tulane University in New Orleans. It was subsequently published in Practice, Dr. Williamson's medical newsletter.

Dear Nathan:

Of course, you know that your mother and I love you deeply. There are limits to that love. Let me discuss one with you today.

Your are going to Tulane. We are proud and happy for you. There are, however, awkward things that must be discussed. College kids over the nation are "protesting".

They use many beautiful phrases. What it often amounts to is a contest with the duly constituted authorities of the United States Government. The only term that could apply to revolution. People are quite rightly shot in revolutions.

I suppose there is the legal differentiation between a peaceful demonstration and breaking windows. One graduates into the other by such indifferent degrees it is difficult to say where one ends and the other begins.

The duly constituted authorities have been merciful beyond belief-far too merciful, I think-with students. Obviously, this patience is nearing an end. Snap, I have seldom heard of a student being shot at his study desk. What he does in the open and contests the ground with the National Guard, he may very likely be shot-and very rightly.

Let us take, for example, the sweet little girl in Kent, Ohio. I feel nothing but sorrow that a beautiful young girl of great mental attainments be killed. Yet, Snap, if she had been studying-doing what her parents were paying for her to accomplish-would she have died?

She was helping contest the ground with duly constituted U.S. authorities. In this case, I back the U.S. I think it rather remarkable that they didn't shoot 200 more. In this case, the girl was a revolutionary and she got exactly what a revolutionary should expect.

The same, Snap, would be true of you. If you care to challenge the U.S. Government, this is your affair. If you get killed doing it, this is your affair. You see, there are constitutional ways to change the U.S. Government and I agree that it desperately needs changing. However, if you chose to try to change it by revolution, expect to get shot. Mother and I will grieve but we will gladly buy a dinner for the National Guardsman who shot you. You see, son, they pretty-up in definition all things you might want to do. When brought to its basics, it is still just revolution.

I am sorry for the colored boys who were killed at Jackson. But, son, I know a lot more about this than will ever be printed in national news media. There was sniper fire the night before as well as the night the police fired back. The students were given 15 minutes warning to clear the area before the police fired. I thought the duly constituted authorities were most gentle to take only two. If you take part in something like this and get shot, Mama and I will still back the U.S.

It may sound like great martyrdom to give your life for an ideal. Indeed, it may be when you are old enough to judge ideals. Trying to whip the National Guard or the Army appeals to me as damned foolishness. Snap, I have been shot and it hurts like hell. It's funny, but you don't think of ideals over the pain.

Now use your head, son. Remember this country is getting tired of student demonstrations which lead to revolution. The National Guard can shove in a couple students disturb the peace and destroy property.

Now use you head, son. Remember this country is getting tired of student demonstrations which lead to revolution. The National Guard can shove in a couple of clips and clean Tulane. I think they ought to when students disturb the peace and destroy property.

One thing of which you have probably not thought: Tulane is a non-profit corporation belonging to the public which means one brick is yours. The National Guard is a public organization which means that one bolt on one rifle may have been paid for with your tax.

It seems awfully foolish for you to pay for the bolt that snaps the cartridge home which kills you. It seems even more foolish to tear down the bricks you own.

When I went to Oklahoma City University, I always thought of it as my university. Ann and I probably own one bit of cement between the bricks. Believe me, sir, I was very careful of that bit of cement.

I, too, had ebulient spirits but I used them for more practical purposes.

Have you ever considered how many co-eds there are to be kissed? This is a much more worthy purpose than absorbing a bullet and not nearly so painful.

Think of these things.

Love,
Dad

Keith Bromery Answers Critics

To the editor:

I have received in reference to my article of the 6th of November (Beware the Salesman) several complaints, most notably from the American Automobile Association and The Fidelity Life Insurance Company, pertaining to the all-inclusive deceptive nature that my piece attributed to the average door-to-door salesman. I have no reason (legitimate or ethical) at this time to deviate from this attribution contained in my article, though I do see where these companies might be a little concerned.

Both the AAA and The Fidelity Life Insurance Company deal in part with college students and in fact retain student and professional salesmen on this campus to sell their services apparently without the consent or the concern of the university administration. These companies feel that my article prejudiced some potential customers of theirs, and one gave as an example of this feeling the rather abrupt negative reactions that some of their salesmen received from students they contacted following the publication date of my piece. I sincerely regret the rude in some people, but I believe that in the long run the good derived from my piece will far outweigh the bad.

My intention in writing the article was to get people, especially the younger students on this campus, to wake up to the fact that certain devious companies do exist and in fact flourish by profits made literally by shaking people down. The college market is ideal territory for many of these people, because many college students are just young enough to be ignorant of some of the facts of life and just old enough to sign away a lot of bread.

I hope that my intent and purpose is made clearer by this letter. I by no means advocate being rude to salesmen. There are many polite ways of saying no. I do, however, advocate that people take their time and be absolutely certain before signing any statements which they may later regret having signed.

Sincerely,
Keith M. Bromery

One Summer Session

To the Editor:

Many of us received a rather unpleasant surprise last week as will those of you reading this who expected to graduate either in August 1971 or January 1972 by being able to complete a full semester's work (four to six courses) next summer with the aid of a special summer session in addition to the regular one. As it stands now, it seems that the Administrative bureaucracy has seen fit to hold only one summer session. It is to last eight weeks instead of the usual six, and will be located in the very middle of the summer (June 21 to August 13). This not only decreases the likelihood of obtaining a summer job for those attending the one summer session, but eliminates even the possibility of scheduling a special summer session. Although "summer seems far away", graduation for many of us appears to be even further in the distance. Some of us had planned to use this special session to make up deficit credits or to accelerate toward early graduation. Others have been making plans for next September - jobs and graduate school - under the assumption that we would be graduating in August. Since the Administration has gone ahead and made these plans for next summer without first seeking student sentiment on its action and without making public its plans, we who have signed below have decided to seek this sentiment for them and present the results to the Student Senate. If and only if there is a significant amount of interest shown can there be any change made in the current plans. Therefore, if you feel you may be in any way affected by the Administration's current plans and are in any way dissatisfied with them, it is imperative that you contact any of us within the next few days.

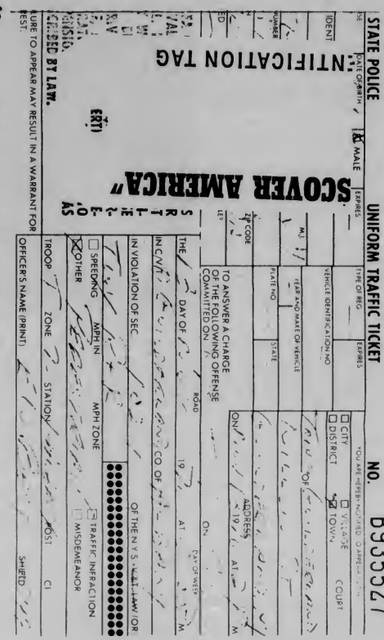
Attention: Campus Bicyclists



To the campus:

Tired of inconsiderate pedestrians? Irritated when you have to get off your bike to go over curbs? Don't you wish there was a direct way to get to somewhere on this campus, instead of around everything and through crowds of people? Would you like to have a bike rack nearby most buildings instead of chaining your bike to a tree?

There are a lot of bicycles on this campus, and, presumably, the people who ride them are interested in making the campus a more convenient place to own a bike. The University of Mass. Bicycle Club was formed about two months ago for such a purpose, along with getting together cyclers to form touring groups and possibly a racing team.

The club is planning a number of activities in the next few weeks, and is hoping to find a lot of people with an interest, we know they're around somewhere. We feel that the University has a great number of cyclers, and that they should be considered in the construction of the campus. The club needs the support of all people who are interested in this endeavor if it is to be successful. Anyone interested is to please contact: Vernon Rhett 235 Brett 6-6243 Debbie Taylor 407 Leach 5-2533

Why An Independent Women's Movement?

Imagine 40,000 women marching down Fifth Avenue in New York City. Representing scores of different political philosophies, different religions and races and backgrounds, professionals and non-professionals and maids and lawyers, but marching together, protesting their common oppression as women. Demanding goals for all women: equal pay for equal work, free community-controlled day care, free abortion on demand – no forced sterilization. That march of 40,000 was the scene in New York, repeated, somewhat smaller in other cities across the country, last August 26.

Now, an ad for Orbach's department store asks, "Have you ever hated your best friend? Meaning, have you ever been so jealous of her prettier hair, her newer clothes, her more successful boyfriend, that you couldn't stand the site of her. That jealousy is a sample of the way women have been isolated from each other. Few women consider other women their best friends; educated women often comment on not liking other women. And as soon as a girl becomes coupled with a boyfriend, she stops spending time with old acquaintances and becomes part of the guy's circle of friends.

And now the women's liberation movement is bringing us together! And we all join together, as we discover our isolation from each other to be just a little a spect of an all-pervading, all-inclusive, both non-conscious and out-and-out oppression: less pay for the same work as men; fewer job opportunities with less chance for advancement (check out the number of tenured women professors at UMass); no control over our own bodies (in Massachusetts we are legally denied birth control information if unmarried, then reducto ad absurdum, refused abortion if we become pregnant).

Because all women suffer oppression as women, we must join together to concentrate on fighting that oppression. Different movements must each consider their own interest – the totality of our struggles will produce our better world: the labor movement must fight for better working conditions, the black movement must fight for black control of black communities; and women must fight for control of their own lives, for equality in a world where men now hold all power, for decent lives in a country where all laws are made by men.

Remember that the very basis of American government is unrepresentative: before 1920, when women got the right to vote, no pretense was made that the government was elected by a majority of its citizens.

Clearly there is a demand for a women's movement at UMass. So that together we can work in fighting off those aspects of chauvinism in each of us that makes us feel inferior, and so we can demand changes and improvements on our campus just as the movement across the country demands changes in America. A Woman Studies Department, with courses in Women's history -- all history we study now is of men (note: his story), of their governments and their wars, with an occasional professor offering an occasional deprecating chuckle towards the story of Lysistrata or Czarina Katherine's bizarre sex life; courses in self-defense, so that we're not the obvious victims of any perverted male ego; in anthropology, to study our potentials and our pre-historic ancestors. A tiny percentage of professors at UMass are women; only a fraction of those are tenured. There are department heads who advise women not to enter certain fields of study; and a school newspaper that prints sexist advertisements depicting women as money-grabbers (a particular Good Humor ad last June) or as bodies.

Together as women we can build a mass movement with the strength to make demands if we organize around our common oppression as women.

And at UMass, when we all work together, we can begin to free ourselves and all our sisters.

Taylor Dance Co. Continues Residency

Two Avant-Garde Plays Presented By Dorm Group

By EDWARD ROGARTY
Fine Arts Staff

The Butterfield Theatre Group plans to present two plays in their kitchen this month.

In an effort to make theatre a less structured and more informal media a group of Butterfield residents have banded together to form a theatre group. They are presently working on two plays: Crawling Arnold, by Jules Feiffer and Sand by Anonymous.

Crawling Arnold is under the direction of Pam Klein and Sand is under the direction of John O'Neil. They are both one act plays with five characters.

This "community" theatre group is an extension of the idea of the Butterfield Community. It is an attempt to counter the formal, structured offerings of campus productions with a less formal amd more meaningful theatre.

"Unlike campus productions, we hope to have the people involved see all sides of the theatre, and not remove themselves to one facet of it," said Miss Klein.

"It is because we are a community that such a theatre will work," said Miss Scherry, a dorm resident. "Everyone here is a member of the community, so that many of the normally necessary structures are done away with."

Miss Klein and Miss Scherry are the only theatre majors. The other members have an informal interest in theatre, some with little or no experience.

"We are all so involved in the community that it naturally darries over into the theatre. And, that's what makes it work," said Miss Klein.

The two plays will be put on by Thanksgiving. After this the Butterfield Community Theatre plans to present further productions.

The Paul Taylor Dance Company will perform in Bowker Auditorium again tonight, and if you didn't catch last night's concert, you owe it to yourself to experience this gifted young group of dancers.

The film that the Concert Dance Group has been showing this week at the Campus Center, if you've seen it may have already given you a preview of Taylor's expression. Perhaps you've already gotten a hint of that light "butterflies-in-the-stomach" feeling you get from watching the delicately - human communication that happens when the Taylor Company performs.

If you're bored with the mundane and all too frequent routine that life can become, come and be resensitized to life and living and captured by the wonderous quality of a true artist. The performance begins at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker. Don't miss it tonight.

Friars To Sing Saturday Night

Saturday, November 21, 1970, the Newman Club will present the "Singing Friars" in concert at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center Social Hall. The Singing Friars are a group of Franciscan seminarians studying for the priesthood at the St. Hyacinth's Seminary and College in Granby, Mass.

They are not professional entertainers but rather are eight Friars coming out of schools in the Northeast. They look upon their singing as a way of spreading the Christian message of joy and the brotherhood of man through the use of the Folk Idiom.

Tickets will be sold for 99¢ at the Newman Center this week and at the door Saturday night. Refreshments will be served. Proceeds will go to the Thanksgiving Food Drive.

Black Play Opens Tomorrow

The Black Actors Group will perform their production of "FOR LOVE OF FREEDOM" this Thursday night at Amherst Regional High School and again Friday afternoon at the School of Education Auditorium here on campus.

Part of Something 70, the play is an hour-and-one-half review of Afro-American history told in dance, music, and drama. It was written and directed by 18-year old Carolos Anderson, who wants to do further theater study at the University of Minnesota.

The group is composed of thirteen blacks, all former or present students of Washington High School in St. Paul, Minnesota in the future they hope to mold themselves into a professional touring company.

Tickets are now available at $1.50 for undergrads, $2.00 for the general public at the Student Union Box Office. Also at Room 125 in the School of Education and Wysocki House.

Rosencrantz And Guildenstern Live

by ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Editor

If you happened to have seen last night's televised "HAMLET" and would like to view the play from a different, funny perspective, make plans to see "ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD" this weekend at Amherst College.

The play views the occurences at Elsinore through the eyes of Hamlet's old college friends. They have no idea what they are doing there and find the actions about them totally incomprehensible. This is where the play is funny, for its author Tom Stoppard has been able to infuse in Shakespeare's minor characters much of the bewilderment found in modern absurdist writing. The play resembles Beckett's "WAITING for GODOT", yet has sharper humor and makes for a far more enjoyable evening's entertainment.

The play is a perfect vehicle for a college production and the Amherst Masquers who saw it three times last weekends, perform it with intelligence and humor. This keeps the wordiness and complexity of dialogue from becoming boring and keeps the entire production together. It could have easily been long-winded and incomplete otherwise.

Much credit for the production's success should go to the leads, Robert Murphy as Rosencrantz and Jonathan Alper as Guildenstern (or could it be the other way around?). Both Amherst undergraduates, they both develop a feeling of the absurd which makes the entire play credible. And in their own unique way, they respond successfully to the many comedy styles in keeping with this complex production.

The device of using "HAMLET" as a background is brilliant. It gives us a different way of looking at Hamlet. He's no longer a brooding, troubled young Prince but more a sulking, cunning madman. And this view is played for all the laughs it can get by Jan Swanson who interprets the role in a typical ham actor fashion. The fusing of the original Shakespere play into the absurdist dialogue works very well.

For we have an understanding of "HAMLET" and can understand R & G's confusion and see it as funny.

Yet as "HAMLET" was serious, so there are darker meanings in the humor of this play. Its theme is modern, that of the meaninglessness of life, and there are many sharp comments and quick asides about Death and life, etc. This is best shown in the cunning character of the Player (Graham Brown), whose imposing, cold manner adds dark substance to the confusion of the title character's dilemas.

FINE ARTS

The settings are effective. Netting is used to suggest the vast mystery behind Elsinore's chambers. And it is refreshing, to say the least, to see a production in which the lighting cues are not obviously botched up.

The productions is handsomely staged. It has a sense of direction which culminates, without too much difficulty, in the final "HAMLET" tableaux. It attempts to be clear at all times. The Shakespeare sequences fit in, adding to this production's fluid feeling.

Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are alive and well (at least for the most of the play) and can be seen for three more performances at Kirby Theater, Amherst College this weekend. There have been few student productions done with the professionalism of this one as an excellent play receives a production it deserves.

Demonstration Planned Against Dow Recruiter

By MARK SILVERMAN
Managing Editor

A group of students and faculty members plan to promote interest in a planned demonstration against the presence of a Dow Chemical Company recruiter on campus Thursday by distributing leaflets today which imply that the recruiter will be kidnapped, an informed source disclosed last night.

The handouts, which are to be distributed today in dining commons and around campus, will say, "Witness a kidnapping in broad daylight. Place - Whitmore, time -12:30, Thursday. A Dow recruiter will be present."

The usually reliable source indicated last night that while the group has no intention of actually kidnapping the recruiter, it does want to drum up interest in the planned demonstration by the leaflets. But the group does hope that this move will force the administration to tighten security within Whitmore Thursday, and thereby "increase the chances of something happening," the source reported.

He said that the group does plan to stage a guerilla theater production during the planned demonstration, which will have participants play the parts of Chancellor Tippo, the Dow recruiter and several students.

The source said last night that several persons may speak at the planned demonstration, calling for an end to what he termed the University's complicity in the military industrial complex.

The group sponsoring the planned demonstration includes persons from the campus chapters of S.D.S. and MOBE, although spokesmen for both of these groups disavow any official connection with the planned demonstration.

Why doesn't General Electric talk about thermal pollution when they talk about nuclear power plants?

General Electric pioneered the development of nuclear power plants in 1957.

Right from the beginning, we felt that the greatest advantage of nuclear power was environmental. Unlike fossil-fueled power plants, nuclear plants don't burn anything to make electricity. And where there's no fire, there's no smoke.

But there's a possible disadvantage as well. It, too, is environmental. Thermal effects.

We recognize it.

One GE advertisement you may have seen recently pointed out that "all nuclear power plants discharge heat, as do fossil-fueled plants. America's utilities, with many years of experience, are working on thermal problems at nuclear sites on a plant-by-plant basis."

General Electric does talk about thermal effects. Because they are important. But also because we feel the facts about them are perhaps too little known.

Few people realize, for example, that federal law requires utilities to operate their plants within strict temperature limits. Thirty states have even stricter laws. Utilities are spending millions of dollars on dilution flow systems, cooling ponds and cooling towers to comply.

But, in addition, utilities are sponsoring basic research on the problem of heat exchange and its effect on aquatic life. More than 97 utilities have been financially involved in over 300 such studies. And each one adds a little to man's scientific understanding of the problem.

Some interesting things have already come of it. For one, it's been found that, in some cases, adding heat to water can actually be beneficial. Warm irrigation water has extended growing seasons. Warm water has created new wintering ponds along waterfowl migration routes.

Power-plant discharge water is reviving Long Island's oyster trade. Florida is using it to grow shrimp and lobster. In Texas, it's increasing the weight of commercial catfish by as much as 500%.

Listing these benefits is not to beg the issue. Thermal effects remain a tough problem to solve at some sites. Each plant must be considered individually, in its own environment, and this is being done.

General Electric, the electric utilities and environmentalists will continue to work. Work hard. Because we think the advantages of nuclear power far outweigh the disadvantages.

Why are we running this ad?

We're running this ad, and others like it, to tell you the things General Electric is doing to solve the problems of man and his environment today.

The problems concern us because they concern you. We're a business and you are potential customers and employees.

But there's another, more important reason. These problems will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

We invite your comments. Please write to General Electric, 570 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022

Yukica Talks On UMass; Injuries Bug BC

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Still keeping abreast of the UMass-Boston College football game, now just three days away on Saturday at 1 p.m., here are some more notes gathered from the Boston Globe and the Boston Herald Traveler.

Eagle bowl chances were not discussed by either paper yesterday as both papers interviewed BC coach Joe Yukica as to how he sized up the Redmen. Some of his comments follow:

IN THE TRAVELER: "This is essentially the same team that scored 30 points against us last year. We needed 35 to win the game. We'll need a good offensive effort again this week and the defense will have to hold up.

"A lot of people forget that this team held Dartmouth to a pair of touchdowns on a punt return and a blocked kick until the fourth period in its (Dartmouth's) first game this year.

"They had some injuries after that but have regained their whole organization in the last three weeks. This is their last game and you can bet they'll be coming at us with everything they have."

IN THE GLOBE: "They have a fine defense. That part of their game has been steady all year. I don't know what happened to the offense early in the year, but it seems to be going pretty well now."

A comment here on Yukica, and that is this guy just seems to have a lot of class. Sure he isn't going to say anything derogatory about the Redmen but, by what he has said, he comes off as a person that can't be baited by writers' questions, one who is going to say the same thing whether he knows that it will go into print or whether it's a point that he must make to his players.

SMARTING EAGLES: Along with taking a victory back to Boston after the Pittsburgh game last Saturday, BC also brought with it some injured players. One of them, offensive tackle Ralph Angel, is lost for the year after coming up with torn ligaments in his knee. Taking his place will be a sophomore, Joe Wappel.

Another Eagle, guard Orrie Scarminach, came up with a chest injury that could be either a cracked rib or a torn rib cartilage. He has been labled as a doubtful starter.

Fred Willis is a third bruised-up BC'er; he wracked up his thigh a little, was limping Saturday night, but is fully expected to be ready for this Saturday's game.

'FAVORITE' FOLLIES: Most sources have the Eagles as the big favorite against the Redmen; they are "heavily favored" according to the HT.

* * * * *

PICKING WOOD: Not only was UMass' Russ Wood selected as Yankee Conference defensive player of the week for his outstanding work against New Hampshire last Saturday, but he also earned a spot on the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference's team of the week. He was the third Redman player to be so honored this fall, following in the footsteps of safety John O'Neil and kicking specialist Denis Gagnon. Also picked for the team was BC's Mr. Willis.

* * * * *

Among the many Marshall University football players and staff that were killed in last Saturday's tragic airplane crash was Art Harris, a former UMass freshman football player, and his father. Harris was a halfback for the frosh team in 1968 and his outstanding play helped key this club to an undefeated season, one which included a 10-9 victory over the B.C. frosh, the highlight game of the whole fall and one which saw Harris play both ways. He transferred to Marshall, never advancing to the Redman varsity and was that squad's top ground-gainer this year, until the year was unexpectedly abbreviated.

Defensive Player Nod Goes To Redmen's Wood

Connecticut quarterback Rick Robustelli, UMass end Russ Wood and Vermont split end Dan Leber have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Robustelli, a 5'11 184-lb. senior, completed 13 or 28 passes for 224 yards and three touchdowns to pace U'Conn to a 33-12 win over Rhode Island that gave the Huskies the Yankee Conference championship. Robustelli also established a new University Division New England completion career record of 312 with one game left.

Wood, a 6'1 200-lb. senior, helped get the quarterback four times as UMass finished second in the Conference with a 24-14 win over New Hampshire that snapped the Wildcats' five-game win streak. UNH was held to minus seven yards rushing.

Leber, a 5'11 175-lb. sophomore, was a bright light in Vermont's 31-14 ss at Lafayette. Leber caught 8 passes for 137 yards, including touchowns of 33 and 32 yards, and returned 2 kickoffs for 50 yards.

Other nominations: Offense - flanker Chip Breault (New Hampshire), ight end John Hulecki (UMass), fullback Dick Narcessian (Rhode Island) and quarterback Earl Olson (Vermont); Defense - tackle Jim Pisciottano (Connecticut), linebacker Dave McBriar (Rhode Island) and inebacker Kevin Lynch (Vermont); Sophomores - cornerback Brian Herosian (Connecticut), offensive guard Jerry Moran (New Hampshire) nd linebacker Rich Cronin (UMass.)

Sports Notices

The UMass Redmen Quarterback Club will hold its weekly luncheon today at 12:15 in the Newman Center. Featured at the luncheon will be films of the UMass-UNH game, narrated by Coach Fusia, as well as a scouting report on the Redmen's next opponent, Boston College. Outstanding player awards will be presented and a raffle for choice game tickets will be held. The luncheon is open to all and admission is $1.50.

BOSTON COLLEGE FOOTBALL TICKETS—Football coupons are now in the process of being exchanged for football tickets for Saturday's upcoming game, UMass vs. Boston College. For those who still haven't traded in their coupons, they can still do so at the athletic ticket office, room 155 Boyden.

* * * * *

SOCCER BANQUET—The very successful UMass soccer team, which finished its season just a few days ago as one of the highest-ranked squads in New England, tapered off its campaign last night with a banquet. At that affair, new co-captains for 1971 were chosen and citations were awarded to members of the present team. Details of this happening will appear in tomorrow's Daily Collegian.

Polyglots? -- They're UM Booters With International Flair

(Editor's Note: Beginning to read this article and one can right away discover that it is not a usual Collegian sports staff article concerning a UMass intercollegiate team; it is obviously something different. It's about the Polyglots! It's quite interesting. These guys have a different approach to playing sports than do the competitive, intercollegiate ones. Whether this be right or wrong is another debatable point, but the story, and its challenge, are very interesting. Read it....lightly.)

The Polyglots are getting restless. A UMass soccer team of strongly international character, they have been quietly practicing all fall, lying low and waiting. Now is the time, they feel, to proclaim themselves for what they are--one of the best amateur teams in western Massachusetts.

With no further ado, the Polyglots here lay down their challenge to all comers; on Tuesday, the 24th November, at 3 p.m., they will compete with the very best team that can be sent against them. Although their opposition is expected to consist of a nucleus of varsity players, other volunteers are welcome, since considerable substitution will be permitted during the game.

All those interested in meeting the Polyglot challenge should leave their names with either Jeff Hague (546-6116) or Paul Slack (545-0192), and stand by for further orders. More details concerning the match will be furnished in a subsequent edition of the Daily Collegian.

The Polyglots live up to their name. Brazil. Cameroun. Dominica. Egypt. England. Germany. Ghana. Greece. Jamaica. Malawi. Nigeria. Rhodesia. South Africa. These are the homelands of many: Many also are from the U.S.A.

Most Polyglots are graduate students. During the week they tend to lead normal, unexciting lives around the UMass campus. They seem to have nothing in common with one another. Saturday mornings, however, they cast off their street clothes and stand revealed. They play in sun or rain or snow. They will chase after anything that is round and bounces.

The Polyglots are a living testimony to the value of pure amateur sport. While play is often fast and furious, there is a total absence of hard feeling. In the absence of the overburdening American emphasis on winning no matter what, players meet in a spirit of international companionship that would be difficult to find elsewhere.

The existence of the Polyglots also owes much to the admirable facilities the University provides: six full soccer fields west of Boyden Gymnasium, several of which always seem to be available for impromptu play. "We know we can count on reliable facilities," says Patrick Fairbairn, chief Glot. "All I do is let everybody know there is a ball available for kicking at a certain time each week. The rest just happens."

With the exception of a tentative match scheduled with Amherst College after Thanksgiving, next Tuesday's match will mark the end of this season's highly successful play. The Polyglots are expected to field a team (or two) for intramural competition next spring.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Aries is a fighter. Where justice is involved, Aries stands ready to do battle. Aries seeks a cause. When it is found, persons born under this sodiacal sign are willing to back up their convictions. If you are looking for one who quits look elsewhere, Aries sticks to it. Aries can be aggressive and thinks of winning — not of losing or retreating. When carried to extremes, Aries becomes militant and overly aggressive. If you have Aries on your side, you have a fighting ally.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on change, travel, variety. Public reaction to efforts is intensified. More persons in more places pay attention to what you say and do. Romance and creativity are favored.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Attention centers on real estate, security. Take long-range view. Open communication lines. Say what you mean, mean what you say. No time for beating about proverbial bush. Be specific.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Accent on short journeys, how you relate to relatives. You may have to ask aid in removing irritating red tape. You get help required — if you have facts at hand.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Spotlight on what you earn and save. Key is to be alert, observant. Gemini individual could figure prominently. Express feelings. Remove restrictions which make you appear to be a robot.

UMass Booters Reap Fond Memories

Great Redman Year Ignites New Soccer Chapter At UMass

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

The 1970 UMass soccer season is over. But the memories, both to those who played and those who watched, will not soon be forgotten. 1970 will be remembered as the year that soccer became a major sport at UMass.

It was the year that thousands of people, at once, saw the Redmen in action. It was the year the booters came within four breaks of having a perfect season. It was the year that UMass came from out of nowhere to finish as the fourth best soccer team in New England, and very close to a national ranking.

It was the year that seniors Rick Matuszczak, Duane Brown, Larry DeFelice, Tony Nunziante, Marc Cantor, Dave Piccus, Gus Penon and Dan Howle won the big one, the Yankee Conference title, to close out their collegiate careers. This season meant many things to many people, but more than anything else it signalled the beginning of a new chapter in soccer at UMass, one that shows promise of being the best ever.

It was the Collegian of September 25, 1970 which reported that: "Bolstered by some outstanding sophomores, the Redmen appear to have the necessary depth and experience that make championship teams....Coach Broaca has the opportunity to make this season one of the very best for UMass." While the rest of New England was looking toward Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut to distinguish the Yankee Conference, a reporter and the Redmen themselves, had other thoughts.

The day it all began for the booters was the annual Western Massachusetts jamboree early in September. After the Redmen had marched through the likes of Western New England College, American International College and Westfield State College, a feeling arose among the fans and players that a special season was about to begin.

Exactly one week later the Redmen opened the regular season against Maine, with an impressive 5-1 shellacking of the Black Bears. The contest featured the dual goal performances of Brown and Lindo Alves, and a single tally from the booming foot of Penon, and sent the booters off to Boston College feeling they could defeat any team they faced.

For the third straight year the visiting UMass team shutout the Eagles. Once again Alves had the hot foot, scoring two goals and Brown added the other for a 3-0 margin of victory. These two brilliant performances of the Redmen boosted them into the number nine spot in New England, their first taste of the top ten.

The biggest test to date was fast approaching however, as the booters prepared to host the eighth-ranked UConn Huskies on October 10. By game time the Redmen were convinced they were the superior team and they wasted no time in proving it.

With less than three minutes gone in the game, Alves set up Brown for the first goal and the booters were off and running. Alves picked up a goal for himself four minutes later, heading in an Augie Calheno corner kick to give the booters a 2-0 lead. Connecticut rallied, however, and by halftime the score was 2-2. When the booters came out for period three the pressure was really on.

Once again it was Brown from Alves to put the booters in the lead, this time for good. Cantor scored what proved to be the winning goals, with help from a busy Alves, to make the final score 5-3 and send Joe Marone's Huskies whelping back to Storrs.

With big victory number three under their belts, and visions of an undefeated season kept alive, the booters had two days to get ready for Trinity, to settle an eight-year grudge. Until October 13, UMass had not defeated Trinity in over eight years. On the strength of goals by Paul Slack and Bill Davidson, the booters downed Trinity and sent it into a tailspin that it never did recover from.

The Daily Collegian proclaimed: "The entire UMass team played a heck of a game, but again it was the defense that took charge. Dave Ouelette, Joe Cerniawski, Paul Slack, Dan Howle, Augie Calheno, Bill Leary, Todd Buck and Gary Hart are names to remember and watch the rest of the year because if these men continue to play their usual game, the Redmen are in for a great season. They can't help it."

With a sparkling 4-0 record the booters headed for Kingston, R.I. for a homecoming game against the Rams of URI. By this time Coach Broaca's men were rated fourth in New England and first in the Yankee Conference. Depending on who you are and what you think, either the Rams tied the Redmen or the Redmen tied the Rams. In any case both teams were disappointed by the 0-0 tie, although the unbeaten streak of the UMass booters was extended. As the Redmen left Rhode Island they already had their eyes on Tufts University as their next victim.

By the Tufts game, the conference leaders were also leading in all statistical categories in goals (Brown, Alves), assists (Calheno) and goaltending (Leary). Their co-captain Rick Matuszczak had been named defensive back of the week, and the booters were anxious to resume their winning ways. The aggressive UMass squad took out its wrath for the URI draw on the poor Jumbos, with a resounding 5-0 bombing.

Simply outclassing the hosts, UMass scored in each period but the first, with the eventual winning goal scored by senior halfback Piccus. Abdu Thyra and DeFelice also notched single tallies, while Brown chipped in two hustling goals. The undefeated Redmen were untouchable that day, and by this time Bobby Grom had worked his way into the fullback line and bolstered the injury-riddles booters with his fine performances. Sophomore Dave Ouelette earned defensive back of the week in the Conference for his outstanding play in the recent games, the second straight week for a Redman back.

No one could predict that the Big Red Machine would have the roof cave in on it, but that's exactly what happened at this point. The villains were the inspired Worcester Tech booters, who handed the Redmen a heartbreaking 3-2 loss to end the dream of an undefeated season.

"In a game that was dominated by the Redmen, the wind and penalties played the biggest roles in Tech's upset win." read the Collegian on the morning of October 28. Cantor and Matuszczak goals were all the Redman booters could muster in a game decided on penalty kicks: Tech made one, the Redmen missed one, final score 3-2.

With a still respectable 5-1-1 slate the UMass squad headed north for Burlington, Vermont to do battle with the Catamounts of UVM on October 31. Needing a win to clinch a tie for the Conference crown, the booters once again fell victim to the penalty kick. Leading 1-0 throughout the game, the booters were accused of a jumping-in violation in the goal area. The kick was good and the final score was 1-1, but as far as theRedmen are concerned, Christmas came early for Vermont, and St. Nick had a black and white striped shirt instead of his usual red suit.

The awarding of the penalty kick came after a violation that had previously happened similarly many times on both sides. It just happened that, in one time out of fifty that it occured, the referee decided to liven things up. The ironic thing about the whole game is that twice following the Vermont goal, Alves of UMass was decked in the penalty area, with no word from the nearby referee. The disappointed booters headed home for another stiff contest against Springfield College.

In a game played before one of the biggest crowds ever to witness a soccer game at UMass, the Redmen and Chiefs played what one N.C.A.A. official declared to be the best college soccer game of the year in New England. Both squads came into the game ready to win and both rose to the occasion by playing their best, demonstrating why they were so highly and closely ranked.

Springfield captain Bill Bonavita scored the only goal on the only defensive lapse of the game for the Redman, handing them their second one-goal loss. The booters however had turned the corner, and were ready to claim the Conference crown by defeating New Hampshire.

And, on November 7, the booters sent thousands of fans home happy with a stunning 4-0 win over New Hampshire, and the Conference crown was theirs. Alves regained his hot foot, as he scored two big goals, while Thyra and Bill Crossman added the others. The Redmen finally took the Conference title from Vermont, and hope to keep the trophy for many years to come. The final game of the season was anti-climatic for the UMass squad, as it travelled to New London, Conn. to face the Coast Guard Academy.

On the shores of the Thomas River the booters stormed over the Cadets 5-1, closing out a season with the best winning percentage in UMass soccer history. Once again it was Alves who led the way, this time blasting three big goals past the CGA defense to close his junior year with ten goals, tops for the booters. Thyra and Cantor also scored for UMass.

The 1970 UMass soccer season is over. Although denied a tourney bid, the booters had one of the finest seasons anyone could hope for. Next year's team will have it's work cut out for it to top the performances of this year's booters.

Although the Redmen will miss the fine play of such graduating seniors as Matuszczak, Brown, DeFelice, Cantor, Nunziante, Piccus, Howle and Penon, they have names like Alves, Calheno, Grom, Thyra, Buck, Hague, Cerniawski, Ouelette, Hart, Slack, Leary, Hamilton, McCarron, Davidson and Curtin, to defend the Conference championship, and perhaps, with continued fine play, and a break or two, make it to the N.C.A.A. tournament next November.

Senate Hears Homecoming, Bomb Threat Problems

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

In an unusually hectic meeting last night, The Student Senate concerned itself especially with the violence at the Homecoming concerts and with the rash of bomb threats which are becoming such a nuisance on campus. The Senate also responded to the Long Range Planning Report of the Faculty Senate and was debating other issues such as firearms on campus when the Collegian went to press.

In response to the outbreaks at the Cage concerts this past weekend, representatives of the Homecoming Committee, Dr. Gage of Health Services, and Gerald Scanlon, Assistant Dean of Students, in charge of Student Activities addressed the Student Senate. They were there for informational purposes to explain just what the problems were and to give some ideas on how they might be worked out.

Since the Homecoming Committee is established by the Senate, they are ultimately responsible for anything that happens.

Concert Chairman Joel Wilson told the Senate that security for the concerts had been increased two-fold but that the crowd still was not manageable. He cited "the general display of obnoxiousness by the people trying to get in" and said that unless some new system of security can be developed, the Committee does not feel that the Cage should again be used for a major concert.

Dr. Gage told the Senate that he thought it was commendable of them to look into the incident because "it had the makings of a real mass tragedy." As far as he can tell from infirmary records of the night, five persons were actually treated there as a result of the violence. Admitting that there were many others hurt, frightened, and badly shaken up who were not treated there, he said that he was not minimizing the seriousness of the incident but just pointing out its potential danger. He concluded by saying that something must be done to prevent this from happening again.

As head of the Student Activities Staff, Gerry Scanlon informed the Senate that his staff can no longer accept any responsibility for future concerts in the Cage without an improvement in security. He said it is not a question of the lack of seats but is "the result of a stypid syndrome going around lately that everyone is entitled to concerts free, as community property."

Cathy Guasda

The Homecoming Committee, Dr. Gage and Mr. Scanlon all place the blame for the incident largely on the attitudes and mode of behavior of the students and outsiders attending the concerts rather than on the facilities or on security.

Following the discussion of the problems, the Senate passed a motion in Special Business which establishes an Ad Hoc Commission to investigate and study the problems of concerts on campus.

The frequency of bomb threats being made on campus and the inconvenience and danger which they cause was considered by the Senate. It resolved the following: 1) to publicize the matter of bomb threats and pertinent information; 2) to pledge the Senate's support in inhibiting threats; and 3) to initiate a petition which a person singing vows not to make a threat and also pledges to discourage others from making threats.

There was a heated discussion over whether there should also be a provision for a reward for information on anyone making a threat. This would have requested the Chancellor to make an appropriate reward within his authority. Successful arguments against this were that there are already state laws which would seem to serve the purpose of discouraging bomb threats, that it would not be the general public who would respond to this, but "scavengers" or law-enforcement agents, and that a similar reward offered at the University of Maine has not permanently stopped bomb threats on that campus.

Without provision for reward, the bill is still expected by the Senate to express its concern with the problem and to generate concern among students which would hopefully lead to individual pressure against those making threats.

In other business, the Senate considered objections which have been made by some students to the Long Range Planning Report currently being considered by the Faculty Senate. Feeling that students have certain interests which they should protect and that their voice should be heard in planning, the Senate established an Ad Hoc Committee to study Long Range Planning and to make recommendations concerning student needs before any final action on the report is taken.

As the Collegian went to press, the Senate was still in session. For results of the debate on such issues as two bills concerning firearms on campus, watch tomorrow's Collegian.

Bomb Hoax Law

Federal Law 18 USCA 837(d) reads as follows:
Whoever through use of mail, telephone, telegraph or other instrument of commerce willfully imputs or conveys or causes to be imparted or conveyed any threat or false information knowing the source to be false, concerning any attempt or alleged attempt being made, or to be made, to damage or destroy any building or other real personal property for the purpose of interfering with its use for educational, religious, charitable, residential, business or civic objective, or of intimidating any person pursuing such objectives, shall be subject to imprisonment for not more than one year or a fine of not more than $10,000 or more.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts law 269-14 Felony (Bomb Hoax) states that bomb threats are punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than 10 years in a state prison or imprisonment in jail for not more than 2 1/2 years or both, such fine and imprisonment in jail

The University administration is now and has been working closely with the phone company to install sophisticated tracing system on phones that can trace calls for periods even after an incoming call is hung up. The administration has also begun instructing persons working in buildings to become familiar with their surroundings and notice any change or out of place objects. In addition, by federal procedure, the FBI will be notified on every bomb hoax call.

Orchard Hill Panel Discusses Recent University Expansion

By IMELDA ROJAK
Staff Reporter

Apple Corps, a body that organizes events for Orchard Hill, presented a six man panel discussion about this university's recent expansion at Webster House last night.

Luther Allen, an associate professor in the government and faculty resident at Webster, was the moderator. Jack Littlefield, director of planning at UMass, told the small gathering considerations that went into building Southwest and the new Northeast dormitories.

Before Southwest dorms were built, he explained, the traditional dorms were overcrowded; in fact, most rooms were tripled, Littlefield explained. The students wanted 200 students per dorm, they wanted to live close to campus; they wanted more lounges than they had in traditional dorms; and they wanted this, of course at a low cost, he added.

The most logical thing to do, suggested Littlefield, was to build high-risers. These would act as many houses of 200 people, stacked on top of each other. The plans were given to an architect, and soon the construction began, although the initial cost of the dorms was higher than the final cost.

Concerning the new Northeast dorms, Littlefield said that Orchard Hill will have its own dining commons built, and the Northeast Complex will use the Worcester Dining Area.

The next speaker, Dr. William Nutting, a professor of zoology said he was concerned with the "aesthetic appearance" of the university. "When I visited other campuses", he noted, "they were beautiful." He suggested planting shrubbery and the like, but was told by the Administrators present there weren't enough funds. Nutting at one time was interested in preserving a wooded area, known as Prexy's Ridge now the site of the Northeast Dorms. "In 1951, I heard that Prexy's Ridge was going down the drain," he said. Dr. Nutting regretted that, after spending a lot of time finding ways to save the Ridge, he was not consulted in the final decision to build. He felt many people who were interested in the outcome of the decision were not informed.

Dean Field spoke about the difficulty of future planning. He told of the girls in the quad who were very effective in preventing the new dorms from being placed on the grassy area there. That was why the dorms had to be placed in Prexy's Ridge, he explained.

Nicolas Dines, who has an offical position in the Landscape Architecture Dept. here, spoke briefly and concluded "we need a researched response on the part of the students" in regard to planning.

Finally, Don Glickstein, a student who lives in Southwest, spoke about disorganized nature of architecture in the campus. He compared the campus to a city which grew around a "central core." "It has all the problems of a city; drugs, race problems, ad infinitum," he ranted adding. "What we must do is make it a more liveable city." Glickstein also said very little attention was given to education in planning the campus; in fact, very little planning was used, period, he emphasized.

Questions were asked about getting money for dorm repair or renovation. Dean Field replied the funds come from rents, rent increases, and perhaps some of it comes from the interest from the room deposit. He also mentioned that it is possible to petition the state legislature for funds, but the state may not have enough money to allot any more to UMass.

If anyone is interested in exerting influence on the legislature, he suggested contacting Judy Gill of the U.S.C.C., a student organization.

Nick Dines, of the Landscape Architecture Dept., tells the Webster House audience that more student feed back was needed in University planning, in a UMass Planning Panel Discussion last night. (MDC Photo by Tim Fagin)

Fac. Senate To Consider Planning Student Growth

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

The Faculty Senate will consider major portions of the Long Range Planning Committee's recommendations to determine the future size of the undergraduate and graduate student population today in a "special meeting" to be held in Thompson 106 at 4:00.

The meeting, which is the second called exclusively for the consideration of the important report released last September, is also scheduled to act on motions dealing with the future ratio of undergraduate to graduate students; the "mix" of lower division and upper division undergraduates; the creation of a "liason committee" between UMass and the Town of Amherst; and the development of "at least one experimental, semi-autonomous living-learning unit".

The Faculty Senate will also be asked to approve a "policy statement" which they will submit to the Board of Trustees for final endorsement. The statement says in part that the "University of Massachusetts" in order to meet its obligation to provide high quality undergraduate and graduate education to many thousands of the commonwealth's youth, the University's Amherst campus must continue to grow until at least 1980.....total enrollment will be increased by annual increments of no more than 1,500 in such fashion that enrollment will not exceed 26,000 in the Fall of 1975 and will not exceed 30,000 in the Fall of 1980."

The Board of Trustees is expected to take action on the recommendations of the Faculty Senate at a "Special meeting" of the Board to be held during the Christmas vacation, December 28 at the Sheraton Hyannis Inn, Hyannis, Mass. (See Related Trustee story on this page).

The entire agenda for today's meeting was submitted by the Faculty Senate Rules Committee and represents only part of the 28 proposal long range report. Various other Senate committee's are presently considering other areas of the report.

Today's gathering is expected to act upon a motion designed to redefine the "the charge and composition of the Master Planning Committee....to include both academic and physical planning within its scope. The Rules committee motion recommends that the Committee be "advisory to the Chancellor through the top administrative officers. Its membership will include both undergraduate and graduate students."

Cape Slated For Special Trustee Meet

The Board of Trustees is scheduled to hold a special meeting on the Future of the University December 28 at the Sheraton Hyannis Inn, on Cape Cod. The meeting has ben called "with the approval of the Chairman and President" and will last two days.

The meeting, according to a notice sent to Board of Trustee members, "will be one of the most important meetings of the Board in the past several years." The notice further states that "We urgently hope for full attendance," emphasizing that "All expenses at the Sheraton Hyannis will be paid."

The Board members will arrive in Hyannis Monday, December 28, starting the two session with lunch and ending no later than 3:00 Tuesday, December 29.

The Daily Collegian will not be able to report the final results of the special December meeting or the regular January meeting of the Board until the beginning of the Spring semester, because the University will be on vacation during both meetings.

Gadlin; Revolution And Violence

Dr. Howard Gadlin of the Psychology Department, a guest of the Maroon Keys 11th Hour Lecture Series, spoke last night about his reflections of violence in revolution.

Professor Gadlin contrasted and compared the violence in today's society and in the Revolution necessary to overthrow the system. "Violence comes from both sides," he stated. "It is not merely a cliche to define today's society as racist, imperialistic, and sexist; we all are victims of violence."

Gadlin accepted the necessity to destroy buildings and material goods in order to "achieve liberation." He, however, finds it difficult to accept personal violence. This is the crucial problem that cannot be resolved.

Gadlin's parting thought was: "I fear to kill....I fear that I cannot handle killing and thusly not have revolution - and there is no resolution to that."

MOBE Supports Protest Against Dow Recruitment

By ANNE STADNICKI
and ROBERT SCHREIER
Staff Reporters

The Student Mobilization Committee, in a meeting last night, decided to support a demonstration against the presence of a Dow Chemical Co. recruiter on campus today.

The demonstration, to be held in front of the Whitmore Administration building today at 12:30, was first organized by an ad hoc committee of students from Southwest and various faculty members. The demonstration will include guerilla theater to be put on by the students. It will attempt to link companies like Dow, Chancellor Tippo, and the university and to question their relationship. The Mobe will confine its activities to picketing and leafliting.

The administration has made no plans for special security measures at the recruitment session, in spite of the threatened demonstration, said Dean William Field yesterday.

The ad hoc committee yesterday distributed a leaflet on campus, stating that there would be a "kidnapping" today at the demonstration. However, the main purpose of the demonstration is to educate students on campus as to what the committee sees as a representation of the military-industrial complex on campus. No plans have been made by either the Ad Hoc committee, or the Mobe, to try to keep the recruiter off campus or impede his activities.

Dean Field said the University planned no special security, however, because little trouble is expected. There is a job shortage at present, he explained, but the companies are here more or less as a favor to the students. If disruption occurs, the company representatives will probably be happy to leave, he said.

If a demonstration should occur the picketing policy approved by the Board of Trustees would be upheld, Field added. This policy says basically the demonstration may not be brought inside the building, as read in the University's Student Handbook. The police are not expected to be called in, he said.

Clarkson Edwards from the Office of Placement and Financial Aid, which sponsors the job interviews with prospective employers, said that office was interested in the fact that students who really want to talk with the recruiters might be kept away by demonstrators.

No statement could be obtained from the Dow recruiters about the action expected against their participation in the recruitment.

Concern has been expressed because in the past two years heated debate and demonstration has resulted from the Honeywell 1968 and Dow 1969 recruitments.

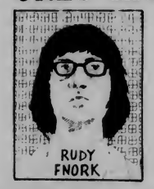
After the 12 hour confrontation with Dow at Whitmore on February 14, 1969 34 UMass students and faculty members were arrested by riot equipped State Police.

The reason for the 1969 demonstration against Dow was their production of the chemical napalm. What underlies today's expected protests is unclear.

"I'll protest the fact that they gave the contract to someone else" said one would be participant, when she learned Dow no longer produced napalm.

No opposition to the other recruiters is expected by the Placement office.

Italian Lecture



'Changing Literature, Society'

The Italian Department announced that "Changing Literature in a Changing Society" will be the topic of a speech tonight by Professor Michele Ricciardelli, of SUNY at Buffalo, at 8:00 p.m. in Herter 231.

According to Peter Pedroni, advisor to the Italian Club, the Editor of Forum Italicum, "a scholarly journal of Italian literature," will discuss, in English, Italian literature from the neo-realistic style of the World War II period to the present style, sperimentalism.

The lecture and a following reception is open to the public.

Some GM Strikers Returning Today

DETROIT (AP)-Return of 3,000 long striking employes to a General Motors plant today was vetoed Wednesday by the United Auto Workers Union.

But the UAW left undisturbed, at least for the time being, plans of 2,500 others to begin returning today to another plant.

A nationwide UAW strike against GM now in its 10th week will not formally end until union ratification of a new national contract on which voting winds up Friday.

There was no explanation from union headquarters in Detroit why workers had been ordered not to return immediately at a Fisher Body plant at Grand Blanc, Mich., but no such order had been given a similar plant at Kalamazoo, Mich.

Local unions representing employes of the two plants have approved overwhelmingly both the new national contract and at the plant working agreements which supplement it.

They had also agreed with local management to return to work without waiting a formal end of the strike.

Don Ellis, UAW regional director for the Flint area, pointed out the union had not called off its GM strike and that it still wasn't "absolutely certain" the new contract will be ratified.

General Motors said it would welcome any workers who return Thursday either at Grand Blanc ot Kalamazoo, but James Huffman, shop committee chairman at Grand Blanc, said "orders came down from the international" for none to go back before Monday.

The UAW local at Kalamazoo said it had received no such orders and that make ready crews would begin reporting at midnight Wednesday, skilled tradesmen Thursday and production workers Friday.

A Fisher Body local union at Grand Rapids, Mich., reported it sent back make ready crews Wednesday and planned to return production workers Monday, when results of the ratification vote will be known.

There was a groundswell Wednesday in new contract approval, with 27 units voting to ratify and bringing to 53 the number thus far approving out of 155 separate GM UAW bargaining unite around the country.

Mandatory Insurance Cuts Ruled Unconstitutional

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled Wednesday that a mandatory 15 per cent reduction in physical damage automobile insurance rates is unconstitutional.

The ruling was made nearly a week after a similar reduction in property damage insurance was ruled unconstitutional, "will have no effect whatsoever upon the $76 million in savings brought about by the no fault" automobile insurance law, said Insurance Commissioner C. Eugene Farnam.

The rate reductions were ordered by the last session of the legislature in an amendment to the no fault law, which applies only to compulsory bodily injury insurance. The latter provides payments by the motorists' own companies regardless of who is to blame for accidents.

Eighty per cent of the companies underwriting auto insurance in Massachusetts contested the reduction in property and physical damage rates, claiming it was "confiscatory and therefore unconstitutional." They claimed it would cause them prohibitive losses.

Physical damage insurance covers fire, theft and collisions.

Dispute Delays Pakistan Relief

DACCA, East Pakistan (AP)-A question of which country's pilots should fly relief helicopters has delayed delivery of urgently needed aircraft from the United States and Britain, Pakistani relief officials said Wednesday.

At the same time, the United States announced the most massive direct government aid program-a $10 million program of emergency food supplies, disbursement of American counterpart funds in Pakistan and reimbursement of direct dollar relief costs.

International Red Cross official in Geneva said the largest pledge of help through their organization-$1.24 million-came from Red China.

The Pakistani officials said their government wanted the United States and Britain to provide the aircraft for use by Pakistani pilots. But Washington refused to go along, the officials said, so Pakistan backed down and the helicopters were expected to arrive late Thursday.

Two small American helicopters were expected Thursday afternoon from Katmandu and a military cargo plane was to bring in four Huey choppers Thursday night, shortly after an American chartered DC8 carrying five tons of blankets and tents for survivors of the disastrous storm and tidal wave that claimed at least 55,000 lives on the Bay of Bengal coast last Friday.

Unofficial estimates of the dead ranged from 300,000 to 650,000.

Nixon Asks $1 Billion Foreign Aid Increase

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon asked Congress Wednesday to add $1 billion to the $2.8 billion he had requested earlier for foreign aid in this fiscal year. First indications were that the request faces a rocky legislative road.

About half the added funds asked in a special message to Congress would go to help Israel build its military potential. Neighboring Arab states of Jordan and Lebanon are down for $30 million and $5 million respectively for what White House aides described as internal security needs in those countries.

Apart from Israel, major sums would go to Cambodia, South Korea and South Vietnam.

Nixon described the money as necessary to carry out plans for reducing direct U.S. military commitments abroad while increasing the ability of allies to defend themselves.

White House officials conceded, however, that part of the need for more money traces to the U.S. intervention in Cambodia and to events in the Middle East which were not foreseen when Nixon made his original request last January.

Cognizant of the fact that anti-foreign aid forces in Congress already have trimmed his original request to $2.2 billion, Nixon called congressional leaders to the White House Wednesday afternoon in an effort to win support for the revised request.

Even before the White House session, formidable opposition surfaced on Capital Hill when the Senate majority leader, Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., told newsmen he opposes the added funds.

Mansfield said he would be glad to listen to the administration case but added "this simply will add to the deficit which already is going to far exceed the original estimates."

Of the slightly more than $1 billion total in the Nixon package, $500 million would be earmarked for credits to help Israel finance "purchase of equipment that have been necessary to maintain her defense capability, and to ease the economic strain caused by her expanded military requirements."

A White House official conceded that $500 million in credits would permit the Israelis to purchase considerably more than that amount in armaments from the United States. Pressed to state the value of war goods that could be delivered to Israel under the program, he professed that he did not have the figure readily available.

As for Cambodia, Nixon asked for $155 million in new money-$70 million to support the Cambodian economy and $85 million in military aid. He said 70 per cent of the military outlays would go for ammunition.

In addition, he asked for $100 million to restore funds "to such vital programs as those for Taiwan, Greece and Turkey" that had been diverted to Cambodia last spring. About $52 million of the diversion had not been disclosed before.

Christmas Toys Named Hazardous

WASHINGTON (AP)-A consumer organization warned Wednesday that toys under the nation's Christmas trees could wound, electrocute or burn children unless the government acts now.

Consumers Union, which does its own product testing, petitioned the government to ban-and seize if necessary-eight toys the organization called dangerous.

Most of the toy manufacturers discounted the Union's charges. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, whose Food and Drug Administration on Friday began steps leading to a possible ban on four toys, said it had negotiated design changes or was investigating all of the toys named by the consumer organizations.

In a joint news conference with officials of the nonprofit Children's Foundation, Consumers Union technical director Morris Kaplan said actions already taken by FDA offer no guarantee that even admittedly dangerous toys have been taken off the market.

Tate Trial Defense Begins Case

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The defense begins its case in the Sharon Tate murder trial Thursday, and part of its plan is to try to introduce a confession by someone other than the four defendants.

"I'd rather not mention specific names," says a defense attorney, "but we will attempt to show that others had motives to kill the victims."

He added that the state will probably try to block admission of any alleged confession when it is presented later.

The trial, in its 23rd week, resumes Thursday after a two day recess to allow preparation of defense arguments for dismissal of charges. They will be heard before the first defense witness is called. The state rested its case Monday.

Two Climbers Reach Peak of El Capitan

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK Calif. (AP)—Two hardy mountain climbers struggled triumphantly to the top of El Capitan just before noon Wednesday, completing in 27 days the first conquest of the sheer 3,000- foot southeast face of the giant rock sentinel over looking Yosemite Valley.

Warren Harding, 46, and Dean Caldwell, 27, had a relatively easy climb up the last 400 sloping feet to the summit after their perilous scaling of the vertical cliff. El Capitan itself is 7,400 feet above sea level.

At the top, reachable by foot trails from the opposite side, a party of about 80 friends and newsmen had food and refreshment for the weary, half-starved adventurers.

Park Rangers said both men were in good spirits and appeared to be in fine physical shape, although they had eaten their last scraps of food Tuesday.

Harding's 79 year old mother, awaiting him, on the valley floor, exclaimed, "He's still my little boy. This is the longest he's been away."

Harding, of West Sacramento, Calif., is the acknowledged dean of American rock climbing. Caldwell, of Portland, Ore., is a veteran of the climbing sport in North America and the Peruvian Andes.

The men began their dangerous ascent Oct. 23, carrying all of their supplies of food, water, ropes, steel pitons, hand drills, hammers and sleeping bags.

Harding made the first overscent of the sheer face of El Capitan in 1958, leading a party up the slightly easier "Nose."

That was a summer long assault and retreat operation, the climbers returning to base camps at the end of each day.

The conquest of the southeast face, known as the "Wall of the Morning Light" because it reflects the sun's first rays, was a classic go up and stay affair.

The vertical and sometimes overhanging granite offered few handholds and rare spots to stand.

Jarring Returns To Moscow "Little He Can Do" At U.N.

UN Middle East peace mediator Gunnar V. Jarring is returning temporarily to his regular diplomatic post in Moscow because "there is little more that he can do at UN Headquarters," Secretary General U Thant announced Wednesday.

In a statement issued through a spokesman in New York, Thant said the Swedish ambassador "is well advised" to return to the Soviet Union until the three way talks he was holding between Israel, Egypt and Jordan can be resumed.

The statement said Jarring would leave "possibly as soon as Thursday of this week." It added Jarring had informed the three governments "of his travel plans and of his constant availability and readiness to return to UN headquarters within a matter of hours to resume the talks, or if otherwise requested."

The talks opened Aug. 25, but were broken off soon afterward when Israel walked out charging that Egypt violated the cease-fire by advancing antiaircraft SAM missile sites in the Suez Canal truce zone.

Both sides have agreed to a 90 day cease fire extension beyond Nov. 5, the day the original standstill expired.

There have been reports that Israel was considering returning to the talks or modifying its demand for complete withdrawal of the offending missile sites, but Thant's statement made no reference to this.

In Cairo, the semiofficial newspaper Al Akhbar reported that Syria's new government has acknowledged Egypt's leadership in the Arab world, indicating that Syria may drop its opposition to peace talks with Israel.

Ousted President Noureddin Atassi, a Marxist, had refused to recognize Egyptian leadership and ignored the late President Gamal Abdel Nasser's plea for Syrian acceptance of the cease fire and peace talks with Jarring.

The newspaper said Lt. Gen. Hafez Assad, who ousted Atassi in a coup Friday, had told visiting Libyan strongman Muammar Kadafi: "Any move in the Arab world would be worthless without considering that Cairo is the base of liberation and Arab unity."

Photographer Testifies To Executions At My Lai

FT. BENNING, GA. (AP)—A former combat photographer testified Wednesday at the court martial of Lt. William L. Calley Jr. that he witnessed the execution of a large group of Vietnamese at My Lai, including a woman with a baby in her arms.

He also took gruesome color pictures of other slain men, women and children.

However, the prosecution made no attempt to connect the testimony to Calley, on trial on charges of premeditated murder of 102 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai March 16, 1968. And on cross examination, civilian defense attorney George Latimer asked:

"You never saw Lt. Calley?"

"I never saw Lt. Calley," agreed the witness, Ronald Haeberle, 28, a Los Angeles free lance photographer and ex GI.

Haeberle's testimony was put before Calley's court martial jury of six officers to support the government's claim that multiple executions of Vietnamese took place at the hands of American soldiers at My Lai.

Calley, 27, faces the maximum penalty of death if convicted on the premeditated murder charge. He led a platoon from Charlie Company in a sweep on My Lai. Haeberle was assigned to the company as combat photographer.

Haeberle's color photographs of Vietnamese bodies were subsequently published by Life Magazine.

On cross examination, Latimer brought out that Haeberle sold his color pictures for some $35,000. after keeping their existence secret for more than a year until the disclosure by the Army that the My Lai incident was under belated investigation.

"I didn't want to start the ball rolling.....I didn't want to get involved," Haeberle testified about his secrecy. "The Army could have come to me."

On direct examination, Haeberle testified that he was landed by helicopter with Charlie Company and made his way into the village until he came upon a group of Vietnamese. His testimony continued:

"It seemed like quite a large group of people, I'd estimate between 50 and 75. I noticed these people squatting in the Vietnamese position. I noticed about five soldiers. I saw three or four people walking. I thought nothing of it. Then I heard firing and I could see some of the people trying to get up and run. They just fell down again."

Fire Damages Lowell Jr. High

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) - State and local officials continued their investigation Wednesday of a fire that destroyed four classrooms and a hall of the Butler Junior High School.

Police and fire department officers said someone broke into the school Tuesday night and poured an inflamable liquid on parts of the first floor of the 100 year old school before igniting it.

The two alarm blaze damaged structural partitions between the floors in the 2 1/2 story brick building.

Classes were suspended Wednesday for the 300 students. There was no decision on when and where they would be resumed.

No damage estimate was available.

Hickel Orders N.Y. State To Clean Up L. Champlain

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) - Interior Secretary Walter J. Hickel has ordered New York State to produce by Dec. 15 a "detailed plan" for elimination of a vast sludge bed at the southern end of Lake Champlain a spokesman for U.S. Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., reported Wednesday.

Details of the order weren't available immediately, but the spokesman said he understood copies of it were being sent to officials in both New York and Vermont.

The development climaxes a week's old controversy between the two states and the International Paper Co. over removal of the bed, a smelly, dark ridge that covers 300 acres in depths of 1 to 16 feet.

West Germany Agrees To Treaty With Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP)—West Germany, in another major step toward better relations with Eastern Europe, agreed Wednesday to a treaty with Poland aimed at easing 31 years of enmity.

The treaty was initiated by the two countries' foreign ministers, Walter Schoel and Stefan Jodrychowski. Initialing is the first stage in sending a treaty toward ratification.

The Polish official said the treaty will "open a new era between our two nations." School in turn hailed the pact as a decisive step in Bonn's relations with Poland - a country which was invaded by Hitler in 1939 and numbered six million of its citizens as victims of Nazi aggression.

Bonn and Warsaw have had no diplomatic contact for two decades. The treaty is expected to raise to consular level the Polish trade mission in Cologne and the West German trade mission in Warsaw.

The treaty text is to be published Friday. Chancellor Willy Brandt, who in little more than a year has launched major evertures toward the Eastern Bloc, will come to Warsaw before Christmas to sign the pact.

One section is understood to spell out West Germany's renunciation of all claim to 40,000 square miles of former German territory by declaring that the Odor Neisse line is the westen frontier of Poland.

Those war ravaged territories, developed following World War II by the Polish government, are now inhabited by some nine million Poles. There is little evidence today that they were ever German.

West German figures show that 9.6 million persons lived in Germany east of the Odor and Neisse rivers in 1939. The figure includes these in the eastern portion of East Prussia that was ceded to the Soviet Union. More than eight million Germans fled or were expelled starting in 1945.

Market Continues To Decline

NEW YORK (AP) - The Stock market tumbled to a substantial loss Wednesday in an other session of light trading.

The decline ranged widely through the list and was at its steepest at the close.

"It is apparent that many investors have retreated to the sidelines awaiting some tangible signs that the economy is on the recovery path," a Wall Street investment analyst commented.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slumped 6.23 to 754.24, hitting its lowest level of the session at the closing bell.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Most Used Draft Alternatives Presented

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

Early in the semester this column gave a brief explanation of the most frequently used alternatives to the draft. This information is being repeated for those who missed the column, whose circumstances may have changed so that they are now eligible for deferments not previously open to them, and those who have just decided to take some positive action to free themselves, in part, from the enslavement of the megasystem.

For more information about any of these alternatives, visit the Draft Counseling Services office on the second floor of the Student Union.

STUDENT - At best a temporary deferment. As long as you are regularly enrolled as a full-time student and making satisfactory progress, you qualify for a I-S(H) for high school students or a II-S for college students deferment. You may retain this deferment until you either graduate, withdraw, or fall behind in your studies. Generally speaking, graduate students are no longer eligible for II-S deferments.

MEDICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL - There are two deferment classifications, L-Y and IV-F. The IV-F is nearly permanent classification meaning that you are not qualified for any service. It is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain a IV-F. The I-Y means qualified for service only in time of war or national emergency. It is usually given subject to a six-month or annual review. Many people with medical histories which do not interfere with their daily lives qualify for I-Y because the rigors of military training and duty may aggravate the condition. If you think you may qualify for a I-Y consult your doctor and a qualified draft counselor. Many people have been able to "arrange" physical or psychological reasons for disqualification. This works, but is not a good idea to rely on such tests without adequate preparation.

HARDSHIP - If being drafted would cause extreme economic, physical, or emotional hardship on dependents or other members of your family, you may qualify for a III-A. The fact that this deferment is not requested more frequently than it is points up the blatant racism of the SS in practice. I would guess that a large majority of core-city draftees qualify for III-A deferments. Draft boards, required by law to place a registrant in the lowest classification for which he qualifies, never follow proper procedure in determining hardship when it is indicated on the classification questionnaire.

SOLE SURVIVING SON - If you are the sole surviving son in your family, and your father or one of your brothers died as a result of military-related injuries, you are IV-A and may not be drafted.

MINISTERS AND MINISTERIAL STUDENTS - If you are a full-time divinity student or a practicing clergyman, you qualify for a IV-D. Some legal interpretations as to who qualifies for a IV-D are yet to be made. (The law requires that a minister must spend at least 100 hours a month practicing to qualify. As yet, the law does not believe, apparently, that one can serve God unless one is wearing a collar.) This is an area still open to challenge in the higher courts.

OVER AGE - If you're over 35, you are V-A over age. To all practical purposes, you are over age once you have your 26th birthday. There are some exceptions, but, in general, life begins at 26.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR - This is not a religious or pacifist deferment. People with religious and/or pacifist backgrounds are of course eligible for the I-O or I-A-O classifications, but others may also qualify. The law provides CO status for those opposed to participation in war (Note: It does not say opposed to war) for religious, moral, philosophical, or ethical reasons. My experience is that nearly everyone who takes the time to think about it is a conscientious objector. (In fact, it seems to me that the Selective Service attacks the problem backwards. Those who want to serve in the military should be asked to request status as conscientious participators, and made to prove that their conscience and training require that thy kill people). The I-A-O classification is for those willing to serve as noncombatants in the military, usually as medics; the I-O is not required to serve in the military, but must work for two years "in the national health, safety, or interest." Never request CO status without first consulting a draft counselor.

These are the major legal alternatives provided by the SSS. If you want more information, or if you don't qualify for any of these deferments, see a qualified draft counselor. You may also want to consider some extra-legal alternatives.

NON-REGISTRATION - Legally you should register with the SSS within five days after your eighteenth birthday. Failure to do so carries a maximum sentence of 5 years, but in practice you are usually given the alternative of registering late. The advantage, of course, is that the SS does not have your name. Consider, however, that most schools automatically report your academic status to your local board, and if the board finds that you're not registered it could be a hassle. The complications are similar if you get busted for anything. Generally, non-registration is not a viable alternative for people moving within middle class institutions.

RESISTANCE - This includes resigning from the SSS by returning your draft card, refusing to report for induction, ripping off or trashing local and state boards, and similar methods of non-cooperation and interference. You should expect to get busted and sentences can range up to 5 years,so you should have a clear idea of exactly what you hope to accomplish, whether the resistance method you choose will achieve your goal, and whether it's worth trading time in jail for.

EMIGRATION - Canada and other countries have been reasonably friendly to American political refugees seeking escape from the draft or the armed forces.

The moral, emotional, and financial questions raised by emigration are very complex, and we will devote considerable space to this in the future. However, one simple fact is that emigrating before you must report for induction is not a crime, and it leaves you free to return openly to the States to visit friends and family.

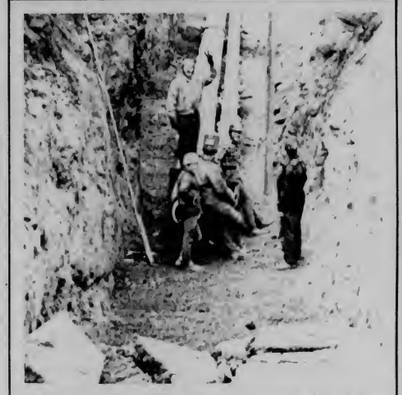
Inflatable Bubble

By MAXINE FORWARD
Staff Reporter

Those who happened to be around the Quad yesterday saw what seemed to be the recasting of "Attack of the Blob". The huge, black circular mass pitched and rolled with every person it engulfed.

Jim Wrathall, spokesman for Clearing House for Student Initiated Changes and Higher Education, explained the bubble as being an "Inflatable Auditorium". Clearing House is new on the campus this year, and is part of the Free University.

Inside the bubble was a group of shoeless observers and a television, which is part of Clearing House's audiovisual equipment. According to Jim McDonnell, Free University's Field Person for Boston and R.I., the chief purpose of the bubble is to help instruct students in the usage of audiovisual materials.



Once students learn to use the material, they can make their own documentary films and tapes about campus events and workshops, said McDonnell. With the help of Clearing House, these instructive films can be taken throughout New England to universities and colleges as methods of communication between other students about activities on their campuses, he added.

WHAT IS IT? The inflatable auditorium, of course, another public service of Clearing House. A wary student takes a quick peek, before entering the onimous interior. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

The Man Who Came To Dinner

WASHINGTON -- Al Capp, who has become the sex symbol of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was in Washington last week as master of ceremonies at a $150-a-plate dinner given by the Republicans in honor of Vice President Spiro Agnew.

Mr. Capp was kind enough to mention me in his opening remarks. He said, "The people who should be here tonight saying 'Thank you, Mr. Vice President' are Art Buchwald, Herblock and Mary McGrory....The Vice President helps them keep their jobs. Never have so many columnists owed so much to one person, and never have so many showed so little decency to a man they owe so much."

Now, first of all, I would like to say that I would have loved to have attended the dinner for the Vice President, but I couldn't. I didn't have $150.

Secondly, Mr. Capp should not have interpreted my absence at the dinner as a lack of gratitude toward the Vice President. I am well aware of the debt we all owe him for making Washington another Disneyland.

The subject I would like to address myself to is not whether Miss McGrory, Mr. Block or myself should or should not have attended the Republican dinner (it turns out Miss McGrory did), but a much larger question that concerns all American citizens and that is: How many more fund-raising dinners can the Vice-President of the United States stand?

It is no secret that, through no fault of his own, Spiro has been condemned by the Republican Party and the Nixon administration to the fund-raising camquet circuit for his entire term of office.

Despite what Mr. Agnew thinks of the cartoonists, columnists and pundits, I can testify to the fact that he has only their sympathy and understanding. Only a sadist would not be moved by someone who was doomed for four years to eat all his meals in a Sheraton or a Hilton hotel.

No cartoonist would do it. No columnist would do it. No vice-president of the United States would do it, except Mr. Agnew.

So far, the Vice President has shown he has the stomach for it. But medical science has proved that no human being, no matter how strong willed, can survive on chicken cacciotore for four years.

The question the American people have to decide is, do we want a Vice President with a bad liver?

The men responsible for sending Mr. Agnew out day after day and night after night have shown little concern for his welfare. The White House staff refer to Mr. Agnew as "the man who came to dinner." They are not worried about him getting indigestion. As one White House staffer put it not long ago, "What's a little heartburn if you can win Mississippi?"

To prove that we are not the heartless people Mr. Capp says we are, Miss McGrory, Mr. Block and I have formed an "Ad Hoc Committee to Save the Vice President's Liver." If need be, we will take it to the courts and prove that sentencing a man to the fund-raising banquet circuit for four years is not only unconstitutional but cruel and unusual punishment.

Surely, in this great country of ours, with so much opportunity and wealth, there is something the Nixon Administration can find for the Vice President of the United States to do other than force-feed him at the Biloxi Hilton Hotel.

A MEMORABLE FANCY: Two dissimilars sat at the table waiting to be waited on. One was a babyface with two dimples balanced on either cheek; the other was a wit with a sharp nose. One was Mac; the other was Stan. Stan was playing with his paper napkin while Mac made coy faces in the window hoping one of the girls on the street would come in and sit next to him. They called themselves the Nurk Twins, and the waitress paid them heed and came over. "Now wha'll ye be ha'n?" She laid a spoon on either side of the table. Stan exclaimed -- "hey yeh letsee! Outside the window a heavy Mum was standing in the raw cold with a baby on her shoulders waiting for a bus. She balanced it just like it was a papoose which it was. Then sometimes it would seem to become a burden. Yes sometimes it was a monkey on her back. The twins by now, had forgotten the waitress who went storming off into the rories of the gorgeous kitchen. Campus Comment

Busts, Concerts, Top of Campus

BUST. "Pigs!"..."Roll the car!"..."Get 'em!" were the shouts I heard as I witnessed one of the most tense and potentially tragic situations on this campus ever. Before the start of the second concert last Sat. Night, a student was being escorted from an area south of the Cage to a manned squad car waiting in front of the building. The escorts were 3 cops, two of whom held the victim's arms tightly, with the third following close behind. The student and 3 cops were being followed by a mob of about 50 students shouting slogans and hurling objects at the "pigs." One of the cops, shaking noticeably as he brushed past me, had his hand opened and near the holster of his exposed gun. The slightest unpredicted move by anyone involved in the incident could have resulted in a Kent State HERE.

CONCERT BAN. As a senior student and promotion manager for Columbia Records on campus, I'd been in the process, until Monday, of bringing to this campus a FREE concert by Redbone, a group on the Columbia label. Because of the gate-crashing on Sat. night, a ban has been imposed on all concerts, placing even Winter Carni in jeopardy of being cancelled. As a result, the scheduling of a free Dec. 13 concert by Redbone looks, according to RSO, almost impossible. Maybe if the 4 cops (including the one in the squad car) had acted as officers helping to prevent the crashing instead of as pigs perpetrating a bust on one student, there would have been no crashing and therefore no ban.

TOP OF THE CAMPUS. But the ugliest deed of all concerns the Campus Center and, in particular, the Top of the Campus. It was on Sept. 22 of this year that one Michael Egan, Director of Food Services at the Campus Center, asked, upon my being referred to him by C.C. manager Terry Grinnan, that I serve as entertainer-booking agent for the T of C Restaurant. I agreed and, as I had long been opposed to the use of the T of C as anything but a student facility (night club, etc.), I accordingly prepared to book as many as possible of the over 50 students who expressed interest in performing there. Subsequently I discovered, just 4 days before we were to open at the T of C, that Egan had deceitfully booked his own choice of talent without informing us and that they were booked on opening night. As a result, the T of C is now featuring non-student entertainment which plays non-student music for a non-student audience and is being run by a non-student capitalist who has put himself in charge of auditioning, booking, and de-booking his own choice of "talent" and who has managed to add to his anti-student policy by charging exorbitant rates for food in a building that students have had to provide funds for.

FOR THOSE WHO DEMAND AN EXPLANATION for why 4 cops hauled off a student and left the Cage more vulnerable to a gate-crash, for those who demand that we not be deprived of seeing a FREE concert on Dec. 13, for those who demand the liberation of the Campus Center for student use: cut this letter out and come to a meeting in the C.C. Auditorium on Monday, Nov. 23, at 7:30 P.M.

ENOUGH of "student leader" sell-outs who in effect say: "Don't let the administration shit all over you -- open your mouth."

ENOUGH of "student leader" sell-outs who in effect say: "Don't let the administration shit all over you -- open your mouth." The time has come for the PEOPLE to ACT.

Where's The Diet Counter?

To the Editor:

Awhile ago I thought I read that a diet counter was going to be set up in the dining commons. It was a great idea and I wish they would implement it right away. As anyone knows who has tried it, dieting is virtually impossible here. Everything is covered with gravy or fried. The salads are made with bitter tasting lettuce or whatever it is, and must be covered up with high calorie dressing. If we can't have filling low calorie food, we shouldn't have to buy a meal ticket, as we eat almost nothing at the commons anyway. I hope someone will print a reply to this letter in the Collegian or on one of those notices they have in the Southwest commons.

Security

Dear Editors:

This weekend, one of the girls on my floor was attacked going up the President's Hill (i.e., Tippo's residence). The assaulter threatened her at knifepoint, and, although she was shook, she wasn't hurt. It wasn't just an isolated incident, it's happened before.

What's the story, does someone have to get raped, roughed up or killed before Whitmore (or whoever the hell is in charge) notices?

Lights were installed last year, but they were never hooked up. Feeble lamps light the dining commons hill from Worcester while the path between the Infirmary and Baker is a rapists paradise. This place isn't any safer at night than the Combat zone in Boston.

I can't understand what the priorities are on this campus. Are two hundred dollar leather chairs and color T.V.s in each hotel room of the Waffle more important than students' lives and peace of mind?

I'm just a student here, folks, but if my "mummy" and 100 other students' "mummies" call their legislators, I'll bet we'll have 1,000 watt spot lights hanging from every tree on campus.

Dickinson Residents Respond

To the Editor:

As residents of Dickinson House, we would like to qualify some of the statements made in the Collegian concerning the installment and testing by WMUA in our house. We feel that the two articles in the paper have given the impression that Dickinson House, as a whole, is opposed to the construction of the transmitter.

First of all, Dickinson House is by no means unified concerning this issue. A substantial minority or possibly a majority is not opposed to WMUA's plans, and no general house vote was taken this year. Therefore, a general house vote might well be taken before it may be stated unequivocally that Dickinson House as a whole is opposed to the construction of the transmitter.

Concerning the loss of the seventh floor ironing room, it has been suggested by members of the third floor that the two floors switch, but no response was received from the seventh floor. This excludes the loss of the ironing room as a major issue.

In conclusion, we would like the University Community to know that we residents of Dickinson House do not oppose the installation and testing of WMUA's transmitter.

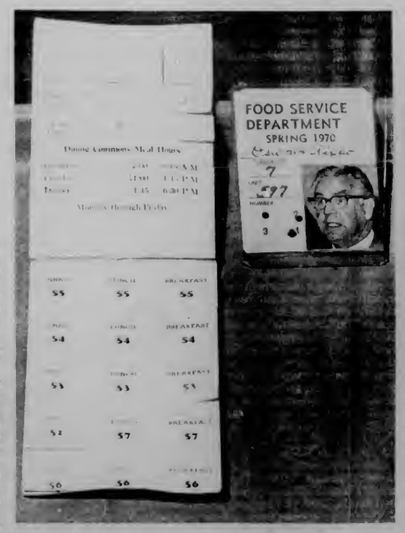
Humanity Or Buildings?

To the Editor:

I have just read "America's Colleges Feeling Pinch" in Tuesday's MDC.



Is there a possibility that the 80 per cent cut in the funds for the library at UMass Boston could have been avoided by a similar, better-directed cut elsewhere? Libraries are important to students. So are fully - equiped dormitories, well - staffed counseling centers, sufficient medical staffs, good food -- to take the load off the medical staffs, and enough valuable instructors with worthwhile ideas directed toward the interests of the students.

Personally, I don't want a lush Campus Center -- only a few floors of which are for my use -- or an extravagant Fine Arts Complex. They may be useful or needed, but has it occured to anyone to place less emphasis on looks and more on economy? and on HUMANITY?

Myths And Realities About Viet Nam

MYTH #1 American involvement in Vietnam is "Imperialist"

REALITY-According to the classical Leninist definition, Imperialism is the territorial aggrandizement by one nation for the purpose of exploiting the labor and resources of another nation. Those who accept this doctrinnaire appraisal of American policy are being deluded. U.S. plicy is not manipulated by "evil capitalists" behind the scenes, nor is it motivated by colonizing aspirations. The goal of the U.S. policy is to prevent the Communist forces from establishing their dictatorship on South Vietnam.

MYTH #2 The Vietnamese Communists are in the forefront of Vietnam's struggle for "National Liberation".

REALITY-The Communists are in the forefront of nothing other than Communism. Their goal is not to liberate anybody from anything, but to subordinate all of Vietnam to a Communist tyranny. It was not LIBERATION that systematically liquidated 4000 civilians in Hue during Tet '68. It was COMMUNISM. It was not LIBERATION that slaughtered over 50,000 peasants in North Vietnam when "Uncle Ho" tried to collectivize the agricultural system in March of 1956. It was COMMUNISM.

MYTH #3 Ho Chi Minh was not the George Washington of IndoChina.

REALITY-Ho Chi Minh was not a nationist leader for all the Vietnamese people. He was solely a Communist partisan. Prior to World War II he spent most of his adult life, not in Vietnam, but in the U.S., France, and the U.S.S.R. During this time he was associated primarily with his Ideological cohorts, the Communists, rather than his countrymen, the Vietnamese. His lifelong war was not against foreign domination, but against any obstacle to his brand of Communist dictatorship.

MYTH #4 South Vietnam is Violating the Geneva Accords concerning the Communist POW's ("tiger cage scandal")

REALITY-Knowledge of the poor treatment of North Vietnamese and Vietcong POW's and the alleged use of tiger cage quarantines came about through the investigations of the International Red Cross. The subsequent findings of the report called on the U.S. to urge the South Vietnamese to improve these substandard treatments. The problem is currently being rectified. On the other hand, the North Vietnamese have flagrantly refused to allow the IRC to investigate the conditions of the POW camps in their country. They have also refused to give any information concerning the names of the prisoners they are holding captive and the number of those presently languishing in their captivity. They are clearly violating the same accords with which they try to use as incriminatory propaganda against the U.S. and South Vietnam.

Building A University Senate

Beharry, Collins Boost New Governance Scheme

Remember the Strike last year when everyone gathered together to find a means of expressing their views on causes which they believed in?

Remember the Humphrey incident in which members of the community who felt there was no other way open to them resorted to open hostility in order to express their views?

These are just two examples of what can happen under a campus governance system which does not provide ample opportunity for all elements of the community to participate in the governance process in a way which will give them a significant voice in the formulation and control of University policies.

It is, therefore, of great significance that at UMass a new campus governance system has been proposed which would provide equal opportunities for all elements of the University community, students as well as faculty and staff, in all areas of campus governance.

The new University Senate, as proposed by the Joint Commission on Campus Governance, would see the three present Senates modified and combined into one body which would determine policies for the whole community. In such a way, all matters of campus governance would be dealt with jointly thus eliminating duplication, delay and unnecessary conflict between the groups, as now exists.

Within the structure of the University Senate, each element of the community would be represented by a conference made up of members of their constituency. It would be the responsibility of each conference to deal with the matters which are of specific interest to their group. Each conference would also join with the others in one body to give final approval on a one man one vote basis to measures passed by each conference, as well as to act upon measures which are of joint but unequal concern to all elements of the community. These issues would first be considered in committees whose membership would be weighted with representatives of the group having primary interest in the majority.

It has also been proposed that each conference have the power of the veto over Senate action on any matter which is its exclusive concern. The veto would guarantee that the policies agreed upon by the Senate will be those which are most agreeable to all elements of the University community.

It is hoped, however, that the ample opportunity given for discussion on all matters by all members of the Senate will eliminate the necessity for the veto except in extreme cases.

It is the Commission's hope that the University Senate proposal will be seen as a means of establishing more efficient, satisfactory formulation and control of University policies.

(Editor's Note: This special examination of the unicameral governance proposal for UMass represents the combined efforts of MDC staff reporters Karen DeGrace, Beth Goodell and Sandy Mitchner with Linda Balicki acting as special editor).

In commenting on this, Pat Beharry, Vice-President of the Undergraduate Student Senate, welcomed the proposal as "well thought out, serious attempt to straighten out the channels of solving the problems of the University." She has experienced the anxiety which accompanies the passage of an issue from one committee to another and from one Senate to another before it results in any specific action. She noted that because of this "sometimes an issue is never resolved because there is no one to go to for the final answer."

She therefore sees the University Senate as a body which will provide for the efficient satisfactory resolution of all issues of campus concern.

She also views the veto powers as a very essential part of the proposal, in that they will ease the transition from the current system of separate Senates to the new tripartite arrangement. It is, especially, because of the veto powers that she foresees little opposition, in general, to the acceptance of the whole proposal.

Her one objection to the content of the plan concerns the size of representation of the University's administrative staff. Of the 130 members of the proposed body, only five are to be from the staff with 70 faculty and 55 undergraduates and graduate students. Such a small representation of staff members does not seem equitable to her in view of the fact that it is their expertise which is necessary when issues are to be resolved into functional plans.

She would therefore like to see the staff more directly involved in the new system, rather than serving as advisors.

In response to an inquiry concerning the benefits which graduate students will derive from the new proposal, Daniel Collins, President of the Graduate Student Senate, said "It is a way of overcoming the petty professionalism and provincialism of the Faculty Senate and is a way of reducing the same single-minded preoccupation that both graduate and undergraduate students have demonstrated in the past."

FACULTY AFFAIRS - Faculty Senator Glen Gordon calls the proposed University Senate a means by which to improve communication between the members of the tri-partite community, and a method to speed up University decision making. (MDC photo by Ed Fenwick)

In regard to the representation ratio which provides graduate students with twelve voting representatives and nine non-voting alternates, Collins expressed the belief that as the graduate student enrollment increases at the University, the nine-non-voting members will acquire voting power so that there will be inevitably twenty-one voting members. "And", he said, "such an arrangement is equitable."

He also expressed the belief that the veto power is "an effective device in as much as it will allay the fears that any one group will be inundated or manipulated by the other members of the Senate." It is felt that the veto power is a protective measure which could not really be abused.

Among the issues and goals which the Graduate Senate has set and which Collins hopes will be achieved either under the present three Senate system or under the new University Senate are the status of graduate education at the University, the general welfare and tax status of Teaching Assistants and the quality of Graduate Student life. It is felt that these are important problems which must be dealt with and should be of concern to any governance organization.

Glen Gordon of the Faculty Senate expressed his view as follows: "I'm really not certain that any of the Senates will accept the proposal but I do think that it has many good points." He said it would help prevent stalemates in decision making and prevent stereotyping in the minds of many senate members.

While stating that the proposal "may face opposition from various groups because they may feel that by reducing the size of their groups that theywill have less authority, Professor Gorden stated that this will provide balance between the various groups. "The faculty would see that the undergraduates are not wild and irresponsible, and the undergraduates would see that the faculty isn't uninterested in their problems," he added.

Gorden hopes that when the proposal is submitted, it will have understanding and support from all three groups. "I feel that a smaller organization would be more effective especially since all three senates usually deal with the same problems." He says that they should all meet together first to discuss important issues before they become strongly committed to separate ideas.

Although there still exists many problems which must be solved before a University Senate can become a reality at UMass as a campus governance organization, it has been shown that at least in overall structure and intention, such a University Senate would have the support of the major groups which make up the University community. As such then, it may well be the solution to the problem of providing all members of the community with a proper and effective means with which to participate in campus governance at UMass.

STUDENT SENATORS Vice-President Pat Beharry, President Glenn Ehrich, Treasurer Richard Verrucci and senator Bill Brickhouse all agree a new governance scheme is necessary, [illegible]

New Senate Promises Greater Voice-Provost

The University Senate will serve as a single voice for the community where the great diversity of opinion will be represented."

These were the words of Provost Robert Gluckstern as he explained his beliefs on the new proposal for campus governance.

He said that the University would benefit greatly by involving more of the community in discussions of important issues. He added that the "increase in communications would allow those affected to have a substantial voice."

Gluckstern observed that while students should have substantial voice on many matters, they should not have total control. He said that each particular group, students, faculty and graduate students, have a distinct and valuable view point on issues, and that these groups must be respected.

He felt that the representation allowed each group under the proposal was significant, and it reflected the periods of association with the University now practiced by each group as well as recognizing the importance of each group's opinions.

In commenting generally on the proposal Gluckstern emphasized the need for trust and faith between the groups in the Senate.

Gluckstern

"The governance proposal in its preliminary form has a great deal of merit and I think it is capable of solving problems which have been difficult in the old three Senate system. I am anxious to hear faculty and student reactions when they are discussed," he said.

"Any system of governance" he continued, "is going to depend upon elements of the community having trust and faith in one another. It appears as if this proposal will work but if there is no faith among groups then even the most carefully prepared system is going to break down."

Ecology Society Sec. To Give CEQ Lecture

Dr. William A. Niering, secretary of the Ecological Society of America, will speak on "The Role of Wetlands, Marshes and Estuaries in Our Survival" Thursday, Nov. 19 at 8 P.M. in the Lincoln Campus Center Auditorium at the UMass in Amherst.

Niering's talk is the fourth in the Distinguished Ecologists Lecture series under the auspices of the Coalition for Environmental Quality, the Wetlands Research Group and other cooperating disciplines and groups at UMass. It is open to the public without charge.

Currently the director of the Connecticut Arboretum and a professor of botany at Connecticut College in New London, Dr. Niering was appointed chairman of the Environmental Council for the state of Connecticut by Governor Dempsey. His studies in the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania led to the creation of the Cranberry Bog Preserve there.

In 1954 Dr. Niering participated as a land ecologist in an expedition to Kapingamarangi Atoll in the South Pacific. Four years later, he was appointed conservation consultant to the Regional Plan Association in New York City. His studies of the Greater Metropolitan Area resulted in the publication Nature in the Metropolis. Dr. Niering has also done extensive studies of the deserts of Arizona and California.

Human Development Center Opens In Southwest

The student "Human Development Center" will open tomorrow for the first time in southwest with workshops in relaxation taught by student facilitators. The relaxation workshops will continue the following Monday and Tuesday.

The Human Development Center was started by a group of students interested in human potential and relations and starting a free school in the area. The students gathered under the direction of Philip Appel and the inspiration of faculty advisor Norma Gluckstern. They have been studying learning skills in human relations and shared a variety of group experiences.

The students have realized a need to grow in other areas than the "so called academics" and are now broaching upon the "Life Arts". The "Life Arts" are those skills which lead one to be more effective, more aware and culminate in the process of self-actualization.

The office is in the lobby of Kennedy tower and will be open on Friday from the hours of 9:00-11:30 & 12:30-3:30 (for more information contact staff there). To sign up for workshops go to Kennedy tower on Thursday, day or night, and sign up on the bulletin board in Kennedy lobby on the spaces provided. NOTICE THERE IS LIMITED SPACE.

If anyone has anything they would like to lead a workshop in or would just like to find out more about the Human Development Center and what they will be doing in the weeks ahead - contact them.

Poetry Readings In Memorial Hall

Air Traffic Control System Creates Collision Course

WASHINGTON (AP) - More than 8 million airline passengers land annually at U.S. airports unequipped with instrument landing systems which would warn a pilot if he were approaching a runway off course.

The lack of sophisticated equipment at some 300 of the nation's 584 airports serving scheduled airlines confronts one out of every nine flights. The guidance aids are especially valuable in bad weather.

One of the airports without a complete system is near Huntington, W. Va., where a DC 9 jet, unwarned it was approaching the rain obscured runway too low, crashed last weekend killing all 75 persons aboard a Marshall University football charter flight.

An Associated Press survey of government statistics, airline schedules and airport officials found that 17 airports each serving more than 1,000 passengers a week - frequently on jet liners - are without operational instrument landing systems ILS. Included are such busy centers at Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz.; Las Vegas, Nev.; Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and Monterey, Calif.

The AP study of ILS turned up such situations as these:

- Giant 747 jets will begin landing at Phoenix Dec. 1, joining nearly 100 other flights a day, but no ILS will be in operation for nearly a year.

- Forty jet liners a day land at Tucson, where surrounding mountains rise up to 9,400 feet. An FAA control tower supervisor said pilots landing there at night complain "it's like flying into a black hole."

- At Fort Lauderdale, Fla., an ILS system is installed, waiting to serve half a million passengers a year. But the fronds of two palm trees intrude into the required clear space for the system, so the ILS can't be used until - and unless - the airport wins a court fight with the owners of the trees.

Many other of the airports lacking the equipment are in more out of the way spots, where only one or two prop planes may land daily.

Federal Aviation Administration statistics show that while passenger traffic has doubled since 1964, the number of instrument landing systems ILS in that period has gone up only 20 percent.

FAA administrator John Shaffer told a congressional committee this year that every airport with jet traffic should have an ILS. Yet 16 of the 17 busiest airports which lacks ILS are servicing jet liners.

A complete ILS system has two parts: A localizer which warns the pilot if he is off course to the left or right, and a glide slope, which warns if the plane's approach is too high or too low.

General Says Vietnam Is Unlike Past U.S. Wars

WASHINGTON (AP) - Calling himself naive, Marine Corps Gen. Lewis W. Walt said Wednesday he and other American leaders were overly optimistic early in the Vietnam war because "we didn't appreciate the importance of the guerrilla."

"This was a brand new war and we didn't recognize it," said Walt, who led U.S. Marines in Vietnam for more than two years. Now assistant commandant, he will retire from the Corps in February.

Those who were over optimistic, he said, were thinking of World War II and Korea type conflicts and didn't understand "you just can't go in and wipe out guerrillas."

"When I got out there, I didn't understand this war," Walt told newsmen at a Pentagon briefing where he said he found in a recent visit that the Viet Cong guerrilla threat now is "pretty well in hand."

The four star general said that when he first arrived in Vietnam in 1965 it took him six months to find out what the war was all about, and that he had to get out into the villages and hamlets to learn for himself.

"It took a while to catch on, to learn how to fight that war," Wal said, adding that the Marines eventually found out they had to win the people over.

Surveying the situation as it is now, Walt said, he is "even more optimistic than before" about the eventual success of Vietnamization.

UMass Shares In Kodak Ed Program

The University of Massachusetts is one of 188 U.S. institutions to share in the 1970 educational aid program of the Eastman Kodak Company. The UMass aid comes in the form of an unrestricted direct grant. The amount of these grants is based on the number of graduates from the institution who joined Kodak within five years after graduation and are presently completing five years employment. The company grants publicly-supported institutions $250 for each academic year completes by these graduates.

Precisionettes Try Outs This Week, Group Tries To Change Image

The women's drill team which made its final appearance of the semester at Saturday's UNH-U. Mass. football game.

For the first time since 1960, the Precisionettes performed with the University Band. The team changed from their traditional uniforms to brand new ones which the girls made themselves. Many hours of labor went into projects such as a car wash, cookie sale, and parade performances to raise the money to buy the material for the new uniforms. All this is part of the changing image of the team.

The Precisionettes are also holding tryouts every night this week and next in Boyden from 7:00-8:30 p.m. for any U.Mass. co-ed who would like to be a member.

The team must, however, keep up fund-raising activities due to Student Senate action last Spring which eliminated their budget. The team plans to sponsor a 75-team Intercollegiate Drill Competition in April, and is sponsoring a Car Rally this Sunday starting at the U.Mass. Stadium at 10:30.

Semester activities have included the North Adams Fall Foliage Festival Parade through a pouring rainstorm; the Springfield Columbus Day Parade broadcast on area television; the U.Mass. Homecoming Parade; and the Pittsfield Halloween Parade.

The team currently holds the titles of Second in the Nation, First in New England, and Second in the East. To further interest women and other students in the team's activities, the Precisionettes will be holding several exhibitions on campus during the next few weeks.

Next semester is the Competition Drill Season and the team is already preparing a competition routine. The girls are not yet sure of how many of the seven competition invitations they have received they will be able to accept due to the lack of funds; but the girls will do as much as they can to raise the money to compete in the National Championship Competition in Washington, D.C. for the National Cherry Blossom Festival in April.

Short Named To Pollution Control

Dr. W. Leigh Short, associate professor of chemical engineering at UMass has been named to the Air Pollution Research Grants Advisory Committee of the National Air Pollution Control Administration.

The administration, a division of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, receives recommendations from members of the advisory committee as to the merits of the applications for grant or contract support. It also maintains up-to-date information on the status of research in air pollution to determine areas in which research should be expanded.

Members of this committee are selected from authorities in biological and physical sciences, engineering, and the social sciences.

Dr. Short's current research involves sulfur dioxide, a major air pollution source found in coal and oil smoke. Under a three-year grant of $88,000 from the U.S. Public Health Service, he is working on a process to remove sulfur dioxide from stack gases by reaction with carbon monoxide.

Grillo Opens Two Shows Saturday In New York

John Grillo, resident artist in the UMass, art department, is having two one-man exhibitions opening on the same day, November 21 in New York City: Recent paintings at Tibor deNagy Gallery, 29 West 57th St. and serigraphs at the Dain Gallery, 1018 Madison Ave.

Before joining the faculty here in 1967, he had been visiting artist at the University of Iowa, the University of California at Berkeley and Southern Illinois University.

In addition to more than a dozen one-man shows in New York he has had two retrospectives. His work is in the permanent collections of such museums as the Whitney Museum of American Art; Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum; Wadsworth Atheneum in Hartford; Los Angeles County Museum; Walker Art Center in Minneapolis; and in many college and university collections including Smith, Bennington, Wellesley, UMass and the University of Texas in Austin.

The painting exhibition is on view through December 10th.

Something Else '70

Friday's School Of Ed. Events

"Something Else '70" is a five-day happening at the School of Education this week. Subtitled "Alternate Futures in Education," this week long symposium and multi-media fair offers talks, tapings, music, drama, games, demonstrations, films, workshops, and numerous other activities. All university students and faculty and anyone else who is interested are invited to attend. All classes in the School of Education are cancelled during the fair.

University students may earn modular credits by participating in "Something Else '70". Each hour of participation will offer one-half mod credit, and fifteen mod credits will equal one graduation credit from the School of Education.

The Daily Collegian presents abbreviated schedules of "Something Else '70" activities. Due to space limitations, the schedule cannot be printed here in its entirety. Completed schedules will be available in the School of Education and the Northeast Area, where most of the activities are being held.

Christmas Store At Newman Center

The Christmas spirit can be found at the work meetings being held Thursday and Friday of this week at the Newman Center. Interested and talented people are working to create Christmas canterpieces and decorations. Orders for these items will be taken Saturday and Sunday after all the masses in the Newman Center Library which has been converted into a Christmas Store.

The proceeds from this store will be used to help buy gifts for a Christmas party for underpriviledged children. This is an opportunity for members of the campus community to buy Christmas decorations and help sponsor a Christmas party for children who deserve it.

Talented people are invited to join the work party Thursday and Friday at 7:00 p.m. in Classroom #2 of the Newman Center.

YanCon Soccer Champs Toasted At Banquet

The UMass soccer team held its annual banquet Tuesday night at the "Top of the Campus" restaurant, with letters and awards presented to the Yankee Conference champions.

James Mulcahy, president of the Varsity "M" Club, was the guest speaker. Coach Peter Broaca announced that the following players had earned varsity letters for the 1970 season: SENIORS Duane Brown, Marc Cantor, Larry DeFelice, Dan Howle, Rick Matusczcak, Tony Nunsiante, Augustin Penon and Dave Piccus; JUNIORS Lindo Alves, Augie Calheno, Joe Cerniawski, Bobby Grom, Gary Hart, Dick McCarron, Paul Slack and Abdu Thraya; SOPHOMORES Todd Buck, Bill Davidson, Eddie Doherty, Jeff Hague, Bill Leary and Dave Ouellette.

Mulcahy also presented Varsity M Club certificates, for excellence in athletics, to the departing seniors. Following the dinner the booters elected co-captains for next season. Junior Calheno was a repeat selection, and he will be joined by high-scoring Alves as team leaders.

The 1970 Most Valuable Player Award was presented to two-year co-captain Matusczcak. Sophomore Doherty was chosen as the Most Improved Player by his teammates to round out the individual presentations. The event concluded with the Redmen presenting their coach with a marble and gold desk set, a permanent reminder of the Yankee Conference Championship, 1970.

The final statistics for the Redman soccer team were released yesterday, showing Alves leading all others in all scoring categories. The official totals for the eleven regulation games read as follows:

PLAYER	Goals	Assists	Points
Alves	10	7	17
Brown	7	3	10
Cantor	5	3	8
Calheno	0	5	5

DETROIT (AP)—To millions of fans in this hotbed of Big Ten football, the only heavyweight title bout this week is that coming up at Columbus Saturday between the Ohio State Buckeyes and Michigan Wolverines.

Both are unbeaten and untied. Both have an eye on the No. 1 national ranking Ohio State is smarting under last year's upset loss and is bidding for a shot in the Rose Bowl. Michigan is high as a kite. The game is poison for selectors.

* * * * *

DETROIT (AP)—Champion Joe Frazier, grim and intense, took a 21-pound weight advantage over the remarkably relaxed challenger, Bob Foster, into their 15-round fight last night for the world's heavy-weight crown.

CINCINNATI (AP)—Cincinnati Reds' catcher Johnny Bench, the National League's Most Valuable Player, said yesterday "we're not going to worry about that" as to contract negotiations with Reds' General Manager Bob Howsam.

"I have some ideas and I suppose he (Howsam) has some and I just hope we're close to each other," said Bench. "But we're not going to worry about that."

Alfred Sheinwold says
"Practice on Autobridge® instead of your friends!"

"If your bridge errors embarrass you, try practicing all by yourself with the AUTOBRIDGE board. Your progress will be painless, and very gratifying to you and all your partners."

BRIDGE MAGIC. Many bridge players rely on magic for their success. They try to sit in the lucky seats or to deal with the lucky deck. If things don't go well, they try sitting on a handkerchief. But in the long run you have the same kind of cards no matter where you plant your seat. You can do better with those cards by working with your head. If you get a poor result with a hand, look for your mistakes in bidding or play. When your partner has made the mistake, try to recall whether you led him astray or whether you could have saved him. You will find it easier to work with your head if you practice with AUTOBRIDGE hands. Playing one or two hands a day will work like magic to improve your game; magic that will follow you to any seat at the bridge table.

FREE! Point Count Bidding Guide.

Fusia Rates BC Squad Best Ever; Hopes For Big UM Effort

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Continuing to keep abreast of the UMass-Boston College football game, now just two days away on Saturday at 1 p.m., here are some more notes gathered from the Boston Globe, the Boston Herald Traveler and yesterday's UMass Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheon.

IN THE TRAVELER: Head UMass coach Vic Fusia spoke in Boston on Tuesday and had many interesting things to say to the Boston area press. In the Herald he was quoted as saying that BC is the best team in the East, rating a notch better than Dartmouth College, a team UMass lost to in its second game, 27-0.

"This BC team has more guns than the great Dartmouth club," he remarked.

He went on to point out that the 1970 edition of the Eagles is the best BC team UMass will have faced in his ten years at the Redman helm. He had praise for the entire BC team, particularly the Eagle offense.

In the same HT article, coach Joe Yukica of BC, a former Yankee Conference head coach at New Hampshire, denied any possibility of an Eagle letdown, saying, "We've been the same team for eight weeks. He also had more of the same praise he has given the Redmen all week.

IN THE GLOBE: In this paper's story, Fusia was quoted on some of his more offbeat lines, a common thing with the coach, something he does to "put on" the writers in an unharming manner.

In Boston he quipped, "We've been working a lot of kickoff returns.....could have quite a few..."

He continued, "We had hoped to pass to their weakness, but they don't have a weakness any more....They have a big line, speed, excellent runners and receivers....Maybe they should be playing Dartmouth instead of us."

In a serious tone, Fusia had fine words for the solid UMass defense and said he hoped the offense could really come through on Saturday. He made it clear though, "But let's be realistic...BC just knocked off a fine Pittsburgh team and I know that this BC team is the finest team ever to play at UMass."

Yukica was also quoted in the Globe and reiterated the stand he has taken all week, "There's no such thing as an easy opponent."

AT THE QB CLUB LUNCHEON: Coach Fusia was very stern and serious at yesterday's luncheon. He re-emphasized a point he made in Boston when one of the first things he said was, "This is the best BC team I've seen in my ten years at UMass."

He raised a few eyebrows by commenting, "Our theme now is to delay, or prolong the inevitable."

His football strategy for Saturday was stated, "You're going to have to stop the quick score. If they're going to beat you, you're going to make them pass or run the length of the field."

His psychology strategy for the Redmen was also given, "The biggest effort of any football team UMass had ever had....our greatest effort."

He summed up the team's chore by saying, "Now they're up for their biggest challenge of the year...Is it going to be an easy task?"...His very serious answer: "No....it's going to be a tough task."

* * * * *

Russ Wood, defensive end, and John Hulecki, tight end, received awards at the luncheon as the top defensive and offensive players for the Redmen in their 24-14 win over New Hampshire last Saturday. For Wood it was his third citation of the week, having already been picked to the Eastern College Athletic Conference's team of the week and having been tagged the top defensive player in the Yankee Conference for the week.

Mermaids Swim Saturday

The UMass Women's Swim Team has its first meet this Saturday, November 21st. The team heads for the third D.G.W.S. sanctioned Invitational at Albany State University. The team has had an excellent past record at this meet, where 12 to 15 colleges meet to pursue a first and second place team trophy.

In 1968, the team returned as the first place holders and in 1969, it returned as a second placer. This year the services of Janet Shockley will be sorely missed. However, Cyn Erwin and Joy Yoder will definitely leave their marks at Albany.

As Miss Bev Reed states: "We have some promising freshmen, and with solid individual placements, we will defend and perhaps break a few of the eight pool records that UMass co-eds have held at this meet." Also favored to place well is the mermaid's 200 yd. freestyler Claire Briana and the 200 yd. freestyler relay team, comprised of Diane Kearney, Miss Yoder, Miss Erwin and Janet Manning. New faces this year include Janice Brack, Robin Betts, and Evelyn Huskins.

Anyone interested in assisting, timers, etc. will be needed and should contact Miss Reed at the women's physical education building (WOPE). All are urged to attend at the WOPE pool.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo can appear brash, but usually has proverbial heart of gold. Leo natives do best when setting their own pace and policies. They are natural executives because they know how to make people laugh while inspiring them to put forth best efforts. Leo encourages creativity and is not awed by tradition. Where sex appeal is concerned, Leo is near the top of the ladder. Praising a Leo is like putting money in the bank.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Check tendency to get too many irons in fire. Obtain necessary permission for questionable matters. Repeats and reprints. Improve relations with children. Stress the creative. Romance is accented.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Expect soma obstacles — accept them. But don't feel defeated by them. Stress on security, environment, how you relate to those in authority. Be kind to older family member.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Get signals straight. A relative may be expecting something you do not intend to deliver. Clear communication lines. Be ready for travel and soma basic changes.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Favorable for money transactions, investments. You could profitably investigate possibility of home buying, selling. Get domestic affairs in order. Take inventory.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Cycle continues high. Personal appearances would be beneficial. Utilize innate sense of showmanship. Touch others. Respond to appeals. Take direct route. Emphasize independence, originality.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Fight for principles. Don't permit yourself to be bullied. One who makes innuendoes is probably bluffing. Throw off secret doubts, fears. You will gain needed support.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Welcome social opportunities. Finish projects. Leave no loose ends. Broaden base of appeal. Add to knowledge. Don't permit yourself to be saddled with another's burden.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Taurus message. Accept obstacles as healthy challenges. New view — and approach — are necessary. Those who wield authority observe your actions and reactions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Follow through on hunch. Give full play to intuitive intellect. Look beyond the immediate. You can perceive future requirements. Sharpen timing. Be first with the most.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Concern with what might be hidden dominates. You are right not to accept surface indications. Dig for information. Check matters related to estate, policies, tax returns.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Tear down in order to rebuild. Gain cooperation of mate, business associate. Polish your image. You need green light from one who holds lead trump card. You can get it.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Co-workers, associates, those who perform special services may make demands. Acquiesce to those that are reasonable. Refuse to be concerned by others. Wise to play waiting game.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have streak of independence, pioneering spirit which marks you as unusual, dynamic and a leader. Lately, you have been surrounded by those of little faith enthusiasm. That is due to change. Don't permit anyone to drain you of confidence.

Wayne Hikes Harries To YC Top Spot, 2nd In N.E.

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

In late August the UMass cross country team assembled on Martha's Vinyard to begin preparations for the season that waited ahead. Now, three months later the season has ended and on the strength of a 7-2-1 record, a Yankee Conference championship, a second at the New England's, and a tenth place finish at the IC4A's, one can see that those days on the Island were truly the stepping stones for one of the most successful cross country seasons ever at UMass.

This year's team was centered around the leadership and experience of seniors Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, and Leo Duart. These three were the first class of runners that came in as freshman when Coach Ken O'Brien took over the reigns of the team.

Speaking on these three yesterday coach O'Brien commented: "I feel a bit of nastalgia in seeing these guys go, as they were the pioneers of a new era of excellence in the UMass cross country program.

From the New England freshman champs of 1969 came Tom Swain, Tom Jasmin, Rick Barry, and Bob Sullivan. These four added to the depth of the team.

O'Brien also had these thoughts on the sophs: "As expected the sophomores were good runners and they were filled with enthusiasm for this was their first varsity season, but it was expected that they would be inconsistent due to their lack of experience. Wayne, Paulson, and Duart were also like this as sophomores."

The first two meets of the season saw the Redmen tie Providence and lose to Northeastern. With Paulson sick for the first meet and Swain and Jasmin too sick to even make the trip to the latter meet the rest of the team felt that they could have won the both races.

In looking back over these two meets O'Brien had this to say: "Superficially the won-lost record didn't effect the motivation of the team, as the runners were eager to get another shot at these teams again at the New England's."

The sickness past to every member of the team and the low point of the season for the Redmen came at their home opener against Boston College in which they were defeated, 26-29.

It was at this race that Jasmin almost ended his season as his cold caught up to him during the race left him a sickly sight afterwards.

Springfield came to UMass a week later in what turned out to be the turning point of the season for UMass. The week before this meet was the first one since the season started in which the entire team was able to practice together as a group.

In this meet the Redmen swarmed all over the Chieftains 19-42 and in the process turned in eleven of the 15 fastest times ever recorded by UMass runners on the UMass course, including a new course record of 25:00 set by Wayne.

Next came Holy Cross and the Redmen took six of the top seven places.

The Yankee Conference championship followed at the University of Rhode Island and the Redmen turned in their best team effort of the season, setting a new record of 19 points as they easily disposed of the rest of the league. In this race Wayne won his second Yan Con title in three years.

After a warm-up victory over Central Connecticut the Redmen traveled to Franklin Park for the New England's. On this day Wayne, Paulson, and Duart turned in the best performance for the top three men all season, but all off day in positions four and five kept the Redmen from a first place finish. Wayne also won the individual title in this race.

The season came to an end at the IC4A's this past week. UMass finished tenth and in so doing placed the second best in the final team standings in the history of UMass cross country.

It's only fair at this time to review the accomplishments of Wayne, Paulson, and Duart.

Wayne of course has two Yankee Conference championships, and a New England title to his credit. He won nine out of nine races in New England this season and in so doing set five course records. He has followed in the foot steps of many former greats at UMass, but in looking over his four years of running he has to go down as the best Redman runner of all time.

Paulson had progressed more than anyone on the team since his freshman year. In his sophomore year he finished 60th in New England and this past year finished eighth.

And finally Duart. He had his best performance of all this season. After eight months of not running due to a knee injury he came back to the form that has made him one if the best in New England over the past four years. The highlight of this season for him was his 16th place finish at the New Englands.

Next year coach O'Brien will have the four sophs returning to be joined by the top four from this year's frosh unit. Add to this the experience of this years juniors and there's all the reason in the world for Coach O'Brien to say that next year's team will be every bit as good as the great one of this past season.

Harris, Willis, Bonistalli Generate BC

Boston College may well be the finest football team in New England despite what the pollsters say. Whether it is or not is really immaterial and will likely never be settled. However, suffice it to say that the task facing the UMass football team this Saturday afternoon at Alumni Stadium is awesome, to say the least.

Considering the 1970 Eagles, one might wonder what chance the Redmen, who have struggled all year, have against this Eastern football power. And rightly so. For this Boston College game will present UMass with the biggest challenge it has faced all season, bar none.

The coach of the Eagles is a man who should be familiar to followers of the Yankee Conference. Joe Yukica , in his third year at Chestnut Hill, was formerly head football coach at New Hampshire and was selected Coach of the Year in New England at that post in 1967.

Since arriving at Boston College, Yukica has posted a fine 17-9 mark against some pretty tough opposition. Such perennial football powers as Penn State, Syracuse and the three military academies are all regular opponents of the Eagles. So Yukica has done some job.

Any coach, however, must have the talent to work with if he is to win, especially against such formidable opposition. Yukica, especially this year, has been blessed with some of the finest football players in not only New England but the entire nation. In fact, there are many Eagles who are considered to be prime pro prospects.

The Eagle

All of these factors have led to the Eagles having their best year ever under Yukica. Although dropping decisions to Penn State (28-3) and Air Force (35-10), Boston College has had little difficulty with most of its other opposition. The Eagles flogged both VMI (56-3) and Buffalo (65-12), and also defeated Villanova (28-21), Navy (28-14), Army (21-13) and highly-rated Pittsburgh (21-6). It should be noted that UMass lost to Buffalo earlier in the season. It is little wonder that the Redmen are worried.

Boston College has the best offense that UMass has faced all year. It is an extremely well-balanced unit with some super football players. It has averaged just under 30 points a game, scoring by way of both the air and the ground.

The leader of this high-scoring eleven and one of the best pro prospects on the club is quarterback Frank "Red" Harris. Tri-captain Harris has virtually rewritten all of the BC passing marks previously held by such Eagle immortals as Jack Concannon, Butch Songin and Charlie O'Rourke. He is rated as an excellent passer, consistently completing well over 50% of his tosses and is also considered an excellent play caller. It would seem inevitable that with UMass' defense being weaker against the pass than the run, Harris will display his passing talents quite adequately come Saturday.

The senior quarterback has some excellent receivers to choose from. His favorite target throughout the year has been split end John Bonistalli who has nabbed 31 passes thus far. He, too, must be considered a leading candidate for pro attention due to his excellent size and hands.

Another man the UMass secondary will have to be aware of is tight end Jim O'Shea. The senior receiver is right behind Bonistalli with 27 receptions and is a key man on third and long yardage situations.

The flanker position is shared by two men, Ed Rideout and George Gill. Gill, a small but speedy receiver, will likely get the starting nod, as well as seeing niust action on kickoff returns. However, it is Rideout who will probably play most of the game. Though an all-scholastic quarterback in high school and a defensive back in his first two years at BC, Rideout has developed into an exceptional receiver. He is Harris' primary threat for the long bomb.

To compliment this outstanding passing attack, the Eagles also have a superb running game led by one of the nation's leading ground gainers, Fred Willis. The senior tri-captain has already gained 864 yards in eight games this season and needs only 39 more to tie Mike Holovak for second place on the Eagles all-time list. Rest assured that Willis, too, will be wearing a pro uniform next season.

Rounding out the backfield, which may be the finest in BC history, is fullback Gene Comella. Though overshadowed by Willis' heroics all season, Comella is a steady ball player who adds another threat to the already varied Eagle backfield.

Protecting these gentlemen is a large and mobile offensive line which averages about 236 lbs. per man and should provide a good test against UMass' solid defense.

Speaking of defense, the Eagles have done quite well in that department too. Though completely outshone by their headline-stealing offense, this unit has limited its opposition to just over two touchdowns a game. Only once has any opponent totaled more than 30 points against the Eagles and that was Air Force which scored late in the going to make the score not quite indicative of the contest.

So that's an overall look at Boston College. With a bowl bid hanging in the balance, the Eagles are not likely to be over-confident against the Redmen. It would look as if UMass must come up with its top effort of the season to stay in this game. But UMass gave Dartmouth a scare before succumbing in the second half and certainly the Redmen have improved since then. With UMass having nothing to lose and everything to gain, it could be a very interesting afternoon at Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

Fac-Sen Debates Limiting Enrollment

By WALTER SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

At a Special Faculty Senate meeting held yesterday, debate centered around whether or not the Faculty Senate should advise growth limitation at the University. Also under consideration was a motion concerning a committee to be formed to act as a liaison between the University at Amherst and the state and community colleges in the state. The result of such a committee would be the formation of an "open communication channel" between the institutions.

OVER THE RAINBOW - Dr. O'Connor of the Zoology Department talks with colleages at yesterday's Faculty-Senate meeting. The focus of discussion was possible limitation of university growth. No action was taken. And that's the way it goes in the merry old land of Oz. (MDC photo by Ed Fenwick)

Debate on the question of whether the University should limit the number of students to 30,000 by 1980 consisted of a rally of arguments. All present seemed to be of the opinion that if the enrollment of the University is expanded, existing facilities will also have to be expanded.

On the positive side of the motion, senators expressed the feeling that the size of a university should not necessarily affect the quality of education. If the enrollment continues to expand at the present rate of 1500 additional students per year, said one senator, the problem will not be size, but organization.

Senators opposing the motion were in two groups: those who did not want to continue growth up to 30,000, and those who proposed no limits on expansion. The first group argued that currently, without further enrollment, we have an overcrowding problem. With no new dorms in the planning, the problem would be tremendously increased by the proposed rate of expansion. As one senator put it, "If we want a 'student ghetto', then why don't we expand to FORTY thousand?"

Dean Field said, "Right now, we know the pace of growth and the response to it are not coinciding. We should slow down the rate of growth, and study the problems related to it."

One senator who proposed no limit to enrollment said, "As a public university in a democratic society, we cannot limit size. We have an obligation not to place such severe limits on growth." Other senators, too, were worried about the qualified students who would not get in due to the limits set.

A vote was not taken on this motion. Chancellor Tippo set Dec. 10 for the next special meeting when the motion will again be taken up.

A motion that the Faculty Senate set up a committee to open communications between the university and the other state schools also met with considerable opposition. The question of whether our Faculty Senate has the authority to set up such a committee was raised, and the result was the formation of a committee on the proposed Committee to study the feasability of such a program.

Marshes And Swamps Essential To Ecology

Man is an endangered species. We've been hearing that for a long time now. But somehow we never think of swamps and marshes as playing a very important role in our natural environment. Usually, people think of swamps and marshes as dirty, muddy homes for slimy creatures. But actually, they are essential to the preservation of a healthy environment.

In the Campus Center Auditorium last night, Dr. William Niering, Secretary of the Ecological Society of America, educated about 150 people about "The Role of Wetlands, Marshes and Estuaries in our Survival." The amount of open space in this country is slowly disappearing, and in this process we are losing many of our valuable wetlands. Lack of open space is responsible for psychological and sociological problems. Not only are swamps valuable to our mental health but they also have economical and nutritional value. Dr. Niering showed slides of various wetlands, illustrating their value and the necessity that they be saved.

There is currently a survey being conducted by the National Park Service concerning itself with the fate of wetlands in different states. Dr. Niering said that in some states it is difficult to even find wetlands to study. Wetlands are disappearing at the rate of 1.4 million acres per year.

Dr. Niering is currently the director of the Connecticut Arboretum and a professor of botany at Connecticut College in New London. He was appointed chairman of the Environmental Council for the State of Connecticut by Governor Dempsey.

There will be no Monday noon session of the Chancellor's Coffee Hour on 23 November. Instead, Associate Provost David C. Bischoff will hold an open session at 10:00 p.m. in Patterson House. The principal subjects will be academic programming, with particular emphasis on residential college aspects thereof.

Guerilla Theater Stages Mock DOW Kidnapping

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

The Dow Chemical Company campus interviewer saw 8 UMass students and had left the Whitmore Counseling Center long before a group of students and faculty acted out the "kidnapping in broad daylight" of his theatric counterpart yesterday afternoon in front of Whitmore.

A cold light rain kept the audience and demonstrators to a minimum, as the "guerilla" theater group presented the story of a student entering "Dow University", graduating with a lot of "specialized technical skills" and becoming part of the "socially responsible" Dow Chemical Company. After making bombs and seeing the results of his work in the charred remnants of a baby (doll), the young man joined with others to "kidnap in broad daylight" the man from Dow.

University administrators and police sat in the Counseling center office of Whitmore awaiting any developments during the demonstration outside.

There were three University Police Officers who periodically received reports from other areas of the campus concerning the progress of the "guerilla" theater group, which had already presented its skit at Hampden Dining Commons, before coming to Whitmore.

Also present in the counseling center was a photographer from the University Photo Service who had been assigned to take pictures as "part of the operation."

The special security precautions had been taken at the request of Dr. Randolph W. Bromery according to one of the officers present.

Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Financial Aid and Placement, told the Collegian that the Dow representative had only scheduled a half day of interviews because of "traveling committments." "There are a lot less jobs this year", he added.

Yesterday Dean William Field had commented that if there had been disruptions, the recruiters probably would have left. Field also told a Collegian reporter that no special security arrangments were being taken for yesterday's planned demonstrations.

(Wednesday's issue of the Collegian had reported the plans for using a "guerilla" theater group and the intent of those involved to arouse suspicions through vague leaflets.)

Later in the afternoon, the group, marching to the sound of Country Joe and the Fish's "Fixin-to-die Rag", presented the anti-Dow skit in the Student Union Hatch.

One member of the Young Americans for Freedom, who had intermitently offered his comments during the performance, protested that, while depicting war production of Dow the demonstrators had not told the audience about "the cancer and leukemia research" which Dow Chemical has undertaken.

Climaxing Something Else '70, the School of Education's week long educational marathon, William Schertz author of "Joy" and co-founder of Esalen Institute will make a presentation "Encounter Culture" at noon today in the Mark's Meadow Gymnasium attached to the School of Education.

Grad Student Killed In Accident

A UMass grad student was struck and killed by a car last night at 6:45 while walking on Commonwealth Avenue near the Physical Plant building.

He was identified as Frederic Drexler, 21, of Norfolk, Virginia, a doctoral student in sociology.

His local address was not immediately determined.

Student Senate Tests Trustee Prohibition Of Political Funding

By BETH GOODELL
Senate Reporter

A Student Senate motion to authorize category changes in the Committee on Poverty's budget last night tested a ruling by the trustees that student funds may not be used for political activities. The trustees prohibited the funding of political actions because of the government's threat to withdraw a university's tax-free standing for such involvement. In light of this, the senate voted not to transfer money to a category which would be used to transport students to Springfield to register voters.

The major business of the meeting was an airing of the problems at the Homecoming Concerts and an attempt to end the nuisance of bomb threats, as reported in yesterday's Collegian. A motion was also passed in support of Thatcher House residents who are renovating their dorm.

A motion to accept category changes in the budget of an organization is generally a routine matter. This time it led to some highly emotional debate on the question of political involvement and how closely the Senate will adhere to the trustees' ruling. Supporters of letting the Committee use its money for voter registration argued unsuccessfully that it is non-political act.

In other business, Vice President Beharry appointed several Senators and other students to serve on the Ad Hoc committee to investigate concerts, which the Senate had formed at the meeting. Appointed were: Joel Wilson, Ed Accomando, Ed Voci, Rick Santaguida, Jim Bouin, Julie Ierardi, Ed Kempsey, Jim Foley, Leonard Harris, Sheila McCreavey, Jill Corcoran, Jim Schwartz, and Mark Koltin, with others to be added later.

The committee is going to investigate the feasibility of holding concerts on campus and make recommendations to the Senate. There is no deadline on when the commission is to report back.

In another matter, the Senate voted to support the Thatcher House Renovation Committee. Residents of Thatcher, doing their own renovations, are seeking to be reimbursed. The Committee is working to get Thatcher excluded on those grounds from a room rent increase.

The Senate adjourned at 11 p.m. without considering several items on the agenda. Among those were two controversial ones concerning firearms on campus.

"Dollars Or Blood"
Proposed Aid To Cambodia May Increase U.S. Involvement

WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate war critics said Thursday that President Nixon's new $155 million aid package for Cambodia could lead to deeper U.S. involvement, like that in Vietnam, while Republican leader Hugh Scott said the issue is one of "dollars or blood."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, where the aid proposal faces its grimmest test, decided to send staff investigators to Cambodia before acting on the measure, part of a $1 billion aid package the President proposed on Wednesday.

"We're not going to stall," Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D Ark., told reporters. But he quickly added there is "no commitment to vote it out" onto the Senate floor.

Fulbright said at issue is the implication of the aid request as well as the amount of money.

"This is so similar to the way we became involved in Vietnam," he said.

Scott, talking with reporters, said failure to provide aid to Cambodia could jeopardize U.S. troop withdrawals from Vietnam.

"The choice here is between dollars and blood," he said, predicting that Democratic presidential hopefuls would use the Cambodia issue "to revive their flagging hopes" against Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine for the 1972 nomination.

Scott sought to link the Cambodia aid, which must be authorized before it can be appropriated, with the request for $500 million for aid to Israel, already authorized.

"If they want aid to Israel," he said, "they had better support the whole bill."

There is another potentially controversial item in the package-$150 million to help South Korea modernize its armed forces in view of the U.S. plan to withdraw 20,000 American troops.

Testimony From Calley Trial

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)—On the morning of the alledged My Lai massacre, Charlie Company moved into the Vietnamese hamlet with guns blazing even though no resistance was apparent, a witness testified Thursday at Lt. William Calley Jr.'s court martial.

Eventually, their commander told them to stop, he added. John Paul, 23, Jupiter, Fla., was radio operator at My Lai March 16, 1968, for Capt. Ernest Medina, Company C commander

Paul testified he finally transmitted a message to the advancing troops in which "Capt. Medina inquired what all the shooting was about and requested it be stopped so ammunition could be saved."

However, on cross examination, Paul testified that he and Medina watched a Vietnamese boy, about 8 years old, gunned down on another occasion that morning.

There was no suggestion that Medina's admonition against the excessive firing of weapons specifically was directed at Calley, who headed Co. C's 1st platoon. And Paul was asked on cross examination:

"Is it not true that at no time during your movement through the village of My Lai that you observed Lt. Calley?"

"That's true," replied the witness, a young man who said he now works as a technical writer.

An attempt to connect Calley to the shooting is expected to come later.

Cigarette Ad Ban Evasion Exposed

Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., said Thursday a major tobacco company is putting pipe tobacco in cigarette type packages in an apparent move to circumvent a forthcoming ban on cigarette ads on radio and television.

Magnuson, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, made the charge in a letter to Miles W. Kirkpatrick, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

Under a law passed by Congress this year, all cigarette advertising will be banned from radio and television as of Jan. 2. The ban does not apply to advertising other forms of tobacco.

Magnuson said he wanted to call Kirkpatrick's attention to "what I fear may be a patent subterfuge to promote certain brands of cigarettes under the guise of pipe tobacco promotion."

"Specifically," he said, "I refer to the enclosed packages of American Tobacco's Pall Mall, Silva Thin and Tareyton pipe tobaccos. Not only is the company newly marketing these under the brand names of its major cigarette brands, but the packages themselves are virtually facsimiles in color, emblem, and design to the counterpart cigarette package."

"I do not pretend to be a tobacco technician," Magnuson said, "but if charcoal serves any purpose at all it is as a filtering agent. Its presence in pipe tobacco is to my mind inexplicable except as a covert promotion of Tareyton cigarettes."

Lunekhod I Rambles Over Moon Service

MOSCOW (AP) - Lunokhod 1, Russia's moonrover, completed its second patrol of the lunar surface Thursday after creeping nearly 300 feet across the Sea of Rains, taking pictures and conducting scientific experiments.

The self propelled vehicle traveled successfully over rocks, small craters and a low ridge but remained in an area of comparatively level ground, Tass reported.

After flipping open its lid to expose solar battery panels, the eight wheeled moonrover rolled several yards, then turned around to televise its mother ship, Luna 17.

The scouting mission began at 3 p.m. EST Wednesday and lasted 4 hours and 40 minutes, the agency reported.

The agency said all systems aboard the vehicle were functioning normally with a temperature of 61F inside the craft's instrument compartment.

Lunohod 1 rambled onto the moon from atop the Luna 17 space station two hours after soft landing on the edge of the Sea of Rains early Tuesday morning.

Although the Soviet press has reported that neither craft will return to earth, it has not indicated how long Lunokhod 1 will continue to operate.

MacLeich On Violence: "I Don't See How You Justify It"

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Archibald MacLeish has turned his poet's eye to contemporary America and fears for the soul of a nation whose culture is marred by violence and drugs, but finds hope in the human decency of Americans.

"There is something terrible happening to the human soul or psyche, call it what you will," he said in an interview in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin before giving a poetry reading Wednesday night.

"What frightens you is the sense that the floor you stand on, your human self, your human bottom is not secure. One used to take for granted that men would act like men, that there were limits beyond which they would not go.

"I don't see how there could be two opinions about the use of violence," said the 78 year old former Harvard professor and assistant U.S. secretary of state who has won two Pulitzer prizes.

"Our forefathers were very clear on the fundamental right of revolution, and I suppose the right of revolution involves the use of violence."

"But violence today is not really used for revolution but just to make life so miserable for everybody that you will hope something will happen. This is a form of cheating. I don't see how you justify it."

MacLeish said he feels the drug culture is a "horrible thing," an escapist solution. Yet he said the present young people are "better human beings than we've seen in a long time.

Psychedelics: Exploding The Myths

by DAN BROWN
Room To Move

The widespread use of the psychedelic drugs, LSD, mescaline, psilocybin, on campus necessitates a response from us concerning what we believe to be the evolution of mythic elements about these drugs. Psychedelics are now available to the consumer in various shapes and colors. Each of these carries with it a special name. Announcing the name of the drug implies the specific subjective effects peculiar to it. This naming function is evidence enough of early signs of the mythic evolution of drugs within the culture.

Certainly most would agree that the subjective effects of acid and mescaline are so different that one would have no difficulty telling them apart. Those even further along the mythic progression claim that each color and shape of the psychedelic drugs will have recognizable differences in the subjective effects of tripping.

I plan to show the inaccuracy of this thinking, and to offer explanations for the evolutions of these myths. In short a psychedelic is a psychedelic, with the exception of STP, which is technically not a psychedelic.

It is likely that many of the shapes and colors are chemically quite similar, while only the tabbing medium or buffer is different. Much of the "mescaline" analyzed each year in the state police laboratories turns out to be LSD. From our own drug analyzation we have confirmed this fact; every sample purported to be mescaline that we had analyzed this year has turned out to be acid of varying quality. The only real chance of getting real mescaline is to get powdered peyote, which is quite scarce.

Similarly most psilocybin is also acid. Synthetic psilocybin is unstable except at very low temperatures. Organic psilocybin, which is made from mushrooms, is usually available only a few times during the year. Laboratory reports have shown almost all psilocybin" to be either acid or a mixture of speed and monkey anesthetic.

How can we account for the fact that most of the mescaline and psilocybin are really LSD? One reason might be due to economic motives. The normal dosage in a marketed tab of LSD is 100 m while the dosage for mescaline is 100 mg. It takes 1000 times as much mescaline by gram weight to get the same psychedelic effect as acid. Assuming that it costs relatively the same amount to purchase starting materials, the chemist can make 100 tabs of acid for every tab of mescaline.

Let us suppose one really could get mescaline or psilocybin. Mescaline, acid, and psilocybin should have the same minor somatic and perceptual differences, these have been widely exaggerated. For the most part, the effect on the mind is the same.

An experiment was conducted, when it was still legal to conduct experiments, with subjects who claimed they could tell the difference between the different psychedelics. Some of those were told that they had received acid, but were given mescaline; others were told that they had received mescaline and were given LSD; others actually got what they were told. In this double blind study, it was found with a high degree of reliability, that a person always described the effects of the drug which he was told he received, rather than the effects of the drug which he was actually given. For example those subjects who were given acid and expected mescaline described a mescaline trip. The study confirmed that in corresponding dosages, all psychedelics are very similar.

How can we account for the alleged differences? In re-examing the research done in the early sixties, we find a heavy emphasis placed on set, setting, and suggestibility. What you expect the drug to be is an important factor in its effects on you.

In fact expectancy was such an important factor, that researchers at the Milbrook Foundation experimented on the actual programming of psychedelic experiences through careful planning before the session along with careful guidance during it. Those who believe that the different shapes and colors of the psychedelics give them different subjective experiences will probably experience these differences. One's own psychological attitude toward the drug is the important factor.

This argument takes the emphasis off the drug and places it upon human psychological potential. If expectancy has been a key factor in LSD psychotherapy and LSD guided religious sessions, it is also this same factor that at times allows one to have a high, bum out, or reach cosmic consciousness. The drug is only the instrument to unlock or manifest whatever potential is within.

Exposing the myth does not negate its existence, but it does shift the emphasis of varying psychedelic experience from the drug to the individual mind set. Like many other things, it's all in your mind.

USCC Student Porticipation To Mark Legislators' Day

A special feature of this year's Legislator's Day will be participation by a student group, the University and State Communications Council (USCC).

Headed by Judy Gill, a Chelmsford junior, USCC works actively to improve the state university, particularly through public relations projects and legislative liaison. USCC filed two bills seeking additional funds for higher education in the General Court last year. Neither passed but the students believe the experience gained warranted the effort.

UMass will honor members of the General Court with a Legislator's Day at the Amherst campus, Saturday, Nov. 21.

The program will begin with guided tours of the campus, Saturday, Nov. 2

The program will begin with guided tours of the campus and a luncheon with welcoming remarks by President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Oswald Tippo. The group will then attend the Boston College-UMass football game as guests of the University and attend a post-game reception at the Chancellor's House.

In his welcoming letter President Wood says, "On this campus you can see the tangible visible results of a decade of sustained and increasing public support--in actively working students, energetic faculty, new buildings and new programs of instruction making up a diverse and busy educational community."

In addition to members of the General Court, invited guests will include the UMass Associate Alumni Board of Directors, the UMass Board of Trustees and others.

Interview With A Draft Resister

This Sunday at 12 noon, radio station WMAS, Springfield (94.7 FM), will broadcast an interview with an American draft resister now living in Canada.

The interview, broadcast last month on WFCR's "Community Workshop" program and on WMUA's "Focus" program last Monday, was taped in September by "Focus" moderator Ken Mosakowski, who traveled to Canada to gain information about the "Toronto Anti-Draft Programme."

The draft resister, Darryl Robertson, formerly of Concord, New Hampshire, graduated from UMass in 1969 with a major in astronomy. Robertson applied for conscientious objector status early in 1969, but his claim was rejected by his local draft board and by the New Hampshire State Appeals Board. Faced with prospects of arrest and a possible five-year prison term and $10,000 fine for refusing to be inducted into the Army, he decided to leave the country.

Spot To Be Phased Out

Dick and Jane, the kids who helped millions of Americans learn to read over the past four decades, are destined to run, jump, look and see no more.

The kids and all their pals--Baby Sally, Spot, Puff, Tim the teddy bear--are being "phased out" by their publisher, Scott, Foresman & Co.

Introduced in 1931, the Dick and Jane Basic Readers were the first reading book for tens of millions of Americans and quickly became a national institution.

Despite their popularity, Dick and Jane came under criticism over the years from people who disagree with their approach to teaching reading skills or from others who thought they were too white and middle class. In 1965, the company added "multiethnic characters"--black twins, Pam and Penny' Rosa Cruz, a Mexican American girl; and Tim Wing, a Chinese boy.

A spokesman for the firm's new reading system will include no single cast of characters.

Hold Off, Board

The Board of Trustees has called for a special board meeting late in December on "the Future of the University". If the Board is going to discuss the future of the university, that is a welcomed prospect, and hopefully, they will have a profitable meeting.

But we strongly urge that the Board does not take up and act upon the Long Range Planning report and also urge that the Board not make any firm, unalterable and definite decisions. It would be the type of mistake the board has made in the past, like last year's rent hike for instance.

For, the Board should postpone any definite long range plans until there is substantial student input in those plans. Presently, a Student Senate committee, under the aegis of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Senate has been charged with formulating a student long range report.

Particular differences with the Faculty Long Range Report will probably arise. But that is not the vital thing at this time.

The vital thing right now, is for the Board to delay any final action, until they have a student plan, until there is student voice and influence in these decisions.

Hopefully, the Board will not fall into the pattern it set at last December's meeting, when it approved a rent hike in the obscurity of Christmas vacation and then watched in disbelief as one of the most massive student demonstration in school history took place before their eyes.

Similar arbitrary action this December in regards to long range planning, should and will produce similar reactions on campus. But more importantly, it will reinforce the beliefs of most students, sometimes unwarranted, that the Board of Trustees is an aloof, unlistening body, that sits sending thunder bolt decisions from above.

The future of the University should not be handled in the left handed, loose-wristed manner of the rent hike. We strongly suggest to the Board of Trustees that they postpone any definite decisions on long range planning at their December meeting which is being held in the hinterlands of Cape Cod, but rather discuss the problem thoroughly, while awaiting a student long range opinion.

Hopefully the lesson of the infamous rent hike incident has been learned.

The Next-Greatest Show

The kind and just student leaders who have appointed themselves to the Winter Carnival Committee were sitting around the other day, discussing how they could come up with something truly out of the ordinary for this year's February Festival.

But they weren't too optimistic. After all, Homecoming had thought of the great idea of wrecking the cage, and that would be hard to top. So they sat, twiddling their Top Of The Campus Membership cards, thinking.

All of a sudden, this tall kid with a jock haircut and pimples on his face got up and tripped on a copy of the Boston Herald Traveler while on his way to the bathroom. He picked it up in disgust and was ready to throw it into a pile of empty Budweiser cans in the corner.

But then, all of a sudden, his higher education trained eye caught a picture and a headline in the paper. "Thousands of Curious Flock to Sea Monster in Scituate."

Brainstrom, And they thought of it all by themselves, or almost by themselves. It would top anything UMass has ever seen. Nothing will ever equal it. Hire a sea monster to rise out of the campus pond on the Saturday night of Winter Carni and just lay there on the ground.

No worries about people sneaking into the Cage or anything, this will be a free concert. No problems about off campus people taking seats away from students; there is unlimited seating around the edge of the pond.

And, best of all, its the kind of entertainment that everyone can remember for a long time. Just think, freshmen can bring their zoology kits and cut out a souvineer from the Sea Monster's tail. And the Index can assign 20 photographers to shoot the event and can cover it in next year's yearbook with a 10 page foldout.

But the tall kid with the pimples stopped all of the Committee dreaming and said, "Sea Monsters must have tough agents. You never see them on Ed Sullivan or anything. I wonder if we can afford a real one?"

After thinking about this for a while, the Committee decided to go all out. It will cancel everything else except for Saturday night entertainment for Winter Carni and will spend its entire budget on a one show extravaganza.

At 8:30, Orpheus will make its 60th UMass appearance by sailing around the Campus pond on a barge with the Peace Day Singers serving as a swimming excourt. And then the UMass rifle team will line up on top of the Campus Center and shoot Orpheus' lead singer. He'll fall into the Pond and ride out on the back of the sea Monster, which will be shot to death by the rifle team just after it eats Memorial hall.

An unbelievable show. The greatest ever. But, after all, what else could the Winter Carni Committee do that would top Homecoming?

Hooked On Bad News

WASHINGTON--No one talks about it much but the United States of America has become hooked on bad news. It's gotten so bad that if people don't get their fix of bad news every day, they become anxious, neurotic and even suicidal.

Dr. Felix Hamburger is trying to treat people who have become addicted to bad news, and I visited his clinic the other day.

He told me, in his office, "Our studies indicate that 90% of the population more than 12 years old has an abnormal craving for bad news. This compares to 20 years ago, when only 30% was on the stuff."

"How do you explain it?" I asked.

"Thanks to television, fast communications and new rotary presses, bad news has become available to everyone. You can find it in any bar, on any school street corner, on your radio at home. All you have to do is buy a newspaper or read a magazine, and you'll get a dose of bad news. The worst part of it is that the human body builds up a tolerance to bad news, and people have to have larger and larger doses to supply their habit.

"The pushers, everyone from government officials to newspapermen, know this, and vast sums of money are being made now from bad news."

"But why don't they pass legislation outlawing bad news?" I said.

"Because Americans have built up an insatiable appetite for anything that will depress them. You cut off the bad news supply in this country and everyone will go into shock."

As we were talking, a nurse ran into the room.

"Doctor, Doctor, come right away. McCauley is going berserk."

We ran down the hall into the ward. Two male attendants were holding McCauley's arms.

"Doc, give me a fix," he was crying. "Please Doc, just one little shot of bad news."

Dr. Hamburger said sternly, "McCauley, when you came here you asked us to cure you. You said you couldn't take any more bad news, that you had had it. We can't cure you if you keep asking for it."

"But I didn't know what it would be like to do without bad news. I can't stand it, Doc. Please. Let me have a couple of pages of Time magazine, an Agnew speech, anything, Doc."

"That's what you said yesterday, McCauley. We let you watch the 6 o'clock TV news. If you keep giving in, you'll never kick the habit."

"Doc, a headline. Just give me a headline. any headline. I promise, tomorrow I own't ask for any more."

Dr. Hamburger studies McCauley's chart at the end of the bed. "All right," he said to the nurse, "give him the country's unemployment figures for October."

The nurse went to the medicine cabinet and took out a newspaper clipping and let McCauley read it. He started to relax: he didn't fight the attendants any more. Greedily, he took in every word. "Oh, my! Oh, my! he cried. "It feels so good."

We left McCauley reading and re-reading the clipping.

"As you can see," said Dr. Hamburger, "we don't have as much success as we'd like to. The trouble in this country is that if we just had to deal with the problem of genuine bad news, we would be all right. But, obviously, there is not enough genuine bad news to go around, so the dealers have been manufacturing synthetic bad news and mixing it with the genuine stuff. Most Americans have become so dependent on bad news that they can't tell the difference between the two."

"What's the danger?"

"The synthetic bad news can really give someone a bad trip. Bad news has a mysterious chemical reaction, and anvone who becomes exposed to enough of it can become bad news himself."

At's A Spicy Campaign

The high cost of democracy showed itself this week when figures for several campaign expenditures were released. According to published reports, Senate, House, and Governor races totaled over $200 Million- and that's only what was reported by the candidates.

One would think that only the rich can get into office.

Congress is considering overriding President Nixon's veto of a bill to limit spending on political broadcasts. Other people have thought campaign expenditures should have an absolute ceiling on them, anyway. Here is a plan which should benefit the people while encouraging limited campaign expenditures.

The idea is to progressively tax all campaign and related expenditures. In this way, the more a candidate spends to get elected the more he would pay his constituency.

Who would do the taxing and where would the money go? In city elections, such as mayor, council, board of aldermen, the city treasury would receive the revenues. In county elections, such as county commissioner, registrars, and court clerks, the county treasury would receive the money. The play would work the same on the state and federal levels also, with the money reverting back to the same treasury of the level of government as the election.

Candidates would be forced to keep accurate records of their expenses and the governments could charge him according to a progressive tax table such as this one:

1% up to $1,000
2% $1,000.01 up to $10,000
5% $10,000.01 up to $100,000
10% $100,000.01 up to $1,000,000
20% $1,000,000 on

This tax would cover all expenditures in a campaign such as advertising, cost of bumper stickers, posters, etc.

A FACT OF LIFE

Whether you are straight
Or crooked,
There will always be someone
To tell you to Get Bent.

for Harriet

She looked at me too many times tonight like she would really have liked to make it with me
but all the time
I was there she talked about Paul so I figured
she was just horny or so in love that she couldn't see straight

January 31

She looked at me
again the next night
this time it wasn't an
I-want-to-go-to-bed-with-you stare
it was more a
I-like-you-and-I-really-want-to-be-your-friend look
I wouldn't mind going to bed with her but friends stay with you longer than lays

February 1

WHAT GOOD IS A DEAD GRANDMOTHER

She smiles
her arms around the brown paper bag her fake leopard coat unbuttoned

He waits at five accepting her gift
a ritual
more meaningful than the face of Christ on Sundays more beautiful than the Lone Ranger's dash between the rocks.

They walk home past the black top playground laughing through the alley she hugs him before the rest of the family surrounds her.

He could never understand how she could put her head back on the flowered couch and die.

Cannonball Adderly Quintet Highlights Weekend

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Staff

Music

The father of black music Cannonball Adderly and his Quintet will be in residence on campus this weekend. The concerts will take place Friday and Saturday evenings in Bowker Auditorium. Reserved tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office at Herter Hall and the Bowker Box Office one hour before the concert. Tickets for undergraduates are priced at $1.50, graduate and other students $2.00, $2.50 for faculty and staff, and $3.00 for the general public.

In addition the group will give two seminar/workshops under the general theme of "the history and evolution of Black music". The first will be held this afternoon at 1:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium, the second will be Saturday afternoon at 2 at the Black Cultural Center, Mill s House.

THE MOUNT HOLYOKE-AMHERST CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

This newly-formed orchestra makes its debut this weekend in two concerts. The forty member group, comprised of students and faculty from the five college area, will perform works of Beethoven, Mozart, and Wagner. Saturday evenings concert is at 8:30 in the Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, and Sunday's will be at 8:30 in Pratt Auditorium, Mount Holyoke College. Admission to both concerts is free.

Theater

FOR LOVE OF FREEDOM

The Black Actors Group will give one more performance of this original play which chronicles the Black man's history in this country. Part of Something 70, its final performance will be this afternoon at 2 in the School of Ed Auditorium. Tickets are priced at $1.50 for undergraduates, $2.00 for the general public.

ROSENCRANTZ AND GUILDENSTERN ARE DEAD

This absurdist comedy that won the New York Drama Critics Award as the best play of 1968 is presented by the Amherst Masquers through Monday. Fine acting highlights this overall excellent production which, because of ticket demands, will give an additional Monday night performance at 8:30 along with Friday, Saturday, and Sunday's at Kirby Theater, Amherst. Admission is $2.00.

Films

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID (Hampden Dining Commons, 7:30 and 9:45, this weekend; admission $1.00)

An extremely popular film starring Paul Newman, Robert Redford, and Katherine Ross, which deftly uses old western cliches for very funny results.

CATCH--22 (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A hard film to describe, a more difficult film to understand and maybe not a wholly satisfying adaptation of Joseph Heller's popular novel. Yet the fine performances of a large cast headed by Alan Arkin, and the careful direction of Mike Nichols make it probably the best film of the year.

DIARY OF A MAD HOUSEWIFE (Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

Frank Perry and his wife Eleanor (David and Lisa, Last Summer) brought to the screen the story of the harried existence of a sophisticated New York housewife. Newcomer Carrie Snodgress makes a film debut worth seeing in the title role and is assisted by Richard Benjamin as her status-conscious husband.

FIVE EASY PIECES (Paris Cinema, West Springfield)

IN WHICH WE SERVE (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)

Noel Coward wrote, produced and directed this 1942 film concerning the H.M.S. TORRIN, a destroyer of the Royal Navy, from her commissioning through its sinking off Crete. The film stars John Mills and Michael Wilding and has won high praise from critics along with an oscar and a New York Drama Critics Award.

JOE (Academy of Music, Northampton; Amherst Cinema)

An interesting concept sours as trite politics what could have been a powerful study of an interesting character.

LITTLE FAUSS AND BIG HALSY

Robert Redford and Michael J. Pollard take to the highway in the American Southwest in this film with a definite identity crisis for it resembles nearly every Bikie or Paul Newman flick over the last five years.

LOVERS AND OTHER STRANGERS (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Adapted from some Broadway one-actors, the various incidents in this film all deal with sex. It has the best filmed wedding sequence since GOODBYE, COLUMBUS and contains some fine performers, namely Gig Young, Anne Jackson, and Beatrice Arthur.

THE SILENCE (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9)

The weekly Bergman festival nears its conclusion with this one.

THE VIRGIN AND THE GYPSY (Campus Cinema, Hadley)

D.L. Lawrence has become the novelist to film, and this adaptation of his novellasi is the result of someone's idea or art. Not to be taken too seriously as the earth has a bowel movement of immense proportions when Franco Nero finally gets his girl in the hay.

Dance

Taylor Magical

By TARA RAHKOLA
Fine Arts Staff

The contrasting expanse of moods created by the Paul Taylor Dance Company range somewhere from whimsically mysterious to blatantly lewd with much in between. The Paul Taylor Company combines youthful exuberance with a mature style. The well trained dancers reveal much variety and flexibility in their facial expressions and body movements. Taylor's choreography is very close to life and very revealing of the man's sensitivity. He communicates most completely and honestly.

Tuesday night's concert seemed to grow--starting slowly with "Lento" and ending in the madness of "Churchyard." It was a thorough expanse of emotions and ideas. The slow motioned and subtle mooded "Lento" began a little awkwardly and insecurely. Probably the dancers needed to become accustomed to the audience and the stage. But from the start of the intimate "Largo," Carolyn Adams' and Daniel Williams' duet, the mood of the concert changed. Carolyn Adams, obviously the audience's favorite, is a most sensitive dancer and the audience was rightly enthralled by her's and Daniel Williams' performance.

"Big Bertha" changed the almost romantic mood completely to an unexpected American Dream--type of sexual tragedy. The talented Bettie de Jong showed her flexibility of style as the mechanical sex machine--nickle-a-throw-whore--who tragically tears apart the too unbelievably sweet and innocent B family. Costuming in this dance as in all, was very symbolic and effective in creating an obvious mood.

"Churchyard," a hauntingly medieval piece, seemed to expand the theme of "Big Bertha," examining in another light man's futile effort to control and hide his sexual and animal passions. The dance makes an almost startling transformation beginning with a very controlled ritualistic mood and finishing with a grotesque and madly uncontrollable orgy. The glint in Paul Taylor's eye as he exists with Eileen Cropley after their duet, captures man's not too carefully subdued sexual desires perfectly.

Wednesday's concert didn't have the growth of the night before's. I felt the abstract "Post Meridian" was too long for the type of experimenting with space and time that it was.

The characterization of the naive but curious virgin Agathe, protected by her "pure" but egotistical Angel Raphael unicorn, with his phallic and prized horn against the wolf Satan was very exacting. "Agathe Tale," and its storytelling style very much resembles pantomime in the importance of its facial expressions. Taylor and his dancers are very adept at this kind of total involvement of expression.

"Public Domain," the final dance, a kind of college of human types and emotions, and a little too long for its pageant-type atmosphere. The closing of the curtain as the "world goes on" was an effective close.

As a whole, the Taylor Company's performance was most refreshing and a reminder that we need more dance on campus.

"Soul Food at last". Homecooked dinners, of Chicken, fried fish, potato salad and collar greens along with rolls and homemade cookies. Dinners will be sold for the price of $1.00 at the Black Cultural Center from 8:00 Friday night until 6:00 p.m. Saturday.

"Willing To Be Willing"

Campus Crusaders Share Experiences

"College Life", sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ, was held Wednesday night in the Colonial Lounge to an audience of over 90 students.

To establish an informal atmosphere, Garry Morris, a UMass student from McKimmie, provided a selection of his folk music. Especially effective were a piece from Bach and Classical Gas.

Larry Showalter, MC and staff member here at UMass, gave a turkey dinner away as the door prize. He then opened the floor to what the Crusaders refer to as students, shared the relevance of Jesus Christ in changing their desires and attitudes.

The main speaker, Dave O'Dowd, director of Crusade work at MIT, spoke of his experience in coming into a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. Dave said that many people are not "willing to be willing" to find out if Jesus Christ can change their lives. He mentioned Hemmingway as a contemporary heroic writer, yet as one who obviously did not have the answer to life.

"College Life" will be held again December 2 at 8 o'clock p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Mr. Dick Sandquist will be the main speaker. Refreshments, door prize and entertainment will be provided.

Kelliher And Wood Blossom When They're Needed Most

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

Employment on the defensive line for three-year veterans Russ Wood and Jim Kelliher was hard to come by a year ago--especially at the post of defensive end where the competion was talented and thick.

For instance, there was the like of All-Yankee Conference selection John Hulecki to contend with. Paul Toner and sophomore hopeful Curt Bristol turned in impressive efforts. And on an occasion All-YanCon linebacker Tom York, who saw action at the position in earlier campaigns, added some strength.

But this season the situation has been radically altered. Hulecki has been inserted in the offensive alignment, Toner and York have exited the scene via graduation, while Bristol continues to have his problems in putting everything together. The opportunity was thus afforded and the UMass eleven has been rewarded as Wood and Kelliher have suddenly blossomed in their senior seasons, the years they were most needed.

"Both of them are intelligent football players and are extremely coachable," declares head Redman mentor Vic Fusia. They're well disciplined and do everything expected of the book which speaks admirably for their defensive line coach, Robert Graham.

"Russ and Jim have been contributing throughout the season, playing good steady ball and giving us a boost in many a situation. I respect their football ability and admire them both as men."

Fusia also pointed out that the pair has done a creditable job of containing the end run, squeezing the off tackle, and placing pressure on the passer. "They have really worked their way up and I hold them in high regard. Both comprise part of what I think is one of the finest defensive units we've had around here," he asserted.

Tomorrow will probably present the biggest test for the pair in their careers when the Redmen run into a potent opponent in Boston College. UMass bowed by the slim margin of 35-30 a year ago. But considering their Yankee Conference crown and the 6-3 mark, their showing was certainly qualified.

This year's Eagles, noted for an artful aerial attack, frequently counter with a strong ground game as well. BC loves to sweep and ran impressively against Pittsburg, going to the outside and using the off tackle. If the Redmen are going to make any kind of respectable stand against bowl-bound Boston College tomorrow afternoon, a lot will pivot on the performance of the defensive line, and perhaps the effectiveness of Wood and Kelliher.

Old acquaintances will probably spell out more incentive to Russ Wood's usual job in Saturday's tiff. His former high school coach, Jack Bicknell, and his ex-team mate John McElgunn are among those included on the BC roster. Bicknell, presently an offensive backfield coach for the Eagles, piloted Governor Livingston Regional High (Berkley, N.J.) to state championships in both '65 and '67. McElgunn shows promise as a budding sophomore linebacker.

An all-stater on his school's unbeaten grid team in 1965, Wood lettered seven times over his schoolboy days. He received all-league recognition in basketball, captained the track squad, and also competed in baseball.

Having been cited for his brilliant defensive work in UMass' 24-14 victory at the expense of New Hampshire, his week turned out to be a triple plus for Wood. A berth on the Eastern College Athletic Conference team of the week, top defensive player in the Yankee Conference, and his second Varsity M award comprised the recognition which fell his way.

By distinguishing the gap between schoolboy football and the collegiate brand, Wood draws a correlation to life:

"If you're a schoolboy, you'll never make it. Every year you lose players that are freshmen, sophomores or juniors. The true athlete is the one that sticks it out for four years. He's no longer a schoolboy, he's a college athlete. He is able to withstand the punishment and criticism of the long practice hours. If you can take criticism on the field, and that hurts the most, than you can take it through life."

Jim Kelliher, a product of Abington High, experienced an oddity similar to Wood's last weekend. Bob O'Neil, brother of Redman safety John, and a neighbor of Kelliher, joined in the UNH quest for the Beanpot. Kelliher was a three sports man in high school, chalking up two letters apiece in football, basketball and baseball. His outstanding play in UMass' 14-7 setback to Rhody earned himself a Varsity M award.

"Football has done a lot for me these past few years," says Kelliher. "It has had a tremendous effect on my character through relationships with others and my association with Coach Fusia. He has done a lot for me and there's no way you can't respect the man even though we've had our differences at times. Some day I can look back upon football and credit him for shaping a part of my life."

Here's how the two players think in terms of the BC contest:

Wood: "This is a game that you can't get primed for Thursday or Friday. We have to prepare for it in body and mind. We've been thinking about tomorrow since the final whistle of the New Hampshire game and we're gonna be ready for it.

"For Jim and myself, this marks the last week of practice, the last game we put on a UMass uniform, and the last time we hit anybody in that stadium, which gives us an extra incentive against BC. I think every senior on this club will be playing as hard as he knows how to play.

"If you can have a good last game the season is a success regardless of the final record."

Kelliher: "I can see the fan being a bit disenchanted in respect to how we were expected to do and what was done. But this season hasn't been a complete loss. There's still this game to go. If we beat the Eag'es it is going to be a winning season not just because of the 5-4-1 mark, but because of the stature of the BC team.

"To the football squad when you speak of Boston College, there's a funny feeling you get because of their prominence as a top-ranked New England football power.

"But UMass has some fine personnel and we're capable of playing much better ball than our statistics indicate. Playing BC is almost completely different from playing anybody else on our schedule. This team's attitude is to beat the Eagles, and we feel we have the equipment to do it.

FROSH HOCKEY SCRIMMAGE—The UMass freshman hockey team will scrimmage Mt. St. Charles Academy of Woonsocket, R.I. tomorrow at 6:30 p.m. at Orr Rink, Amherst College.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Scorpio becomes involved with causes. Many who think they know their Scorpio friends and relatives could be mistaken. Natives of this zodiacal sign react intensely, but do not often wear their hearts on their sleeves. Therefore people are apt to be ultrasensitive. They can also be shrewd bargainers. A touch exterior often hides a delicate, fine sense of justice. Scorpio can fight, but usually aids the underdog.

ARIES (March 21- April 19): Avoid taking unnecessary chances. Gambling instinct may be strong. But tendency is to choose on impulse. Logical decision now would be to hold tight to financial reins. Go slow.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Caution should be keynote — applies especially where savings, property are concerned. Seek additional information. Refuse to be cajoled, pushed or rushed. Other fellow may have ace in hole.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Put off travel. Take care with what you put in writing. Review promises made to relatives. Some of them may have to be revised. Clarify meanings contained in messages.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Someone who want you to put money on line would sing different tune if their own assets were involved. Know this — respond accordingly. Element of deception may be involved.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Your goals are in sight. But some delay is indicated. Adhere to rules, regulations. Attempting to skip essentials could be costly. Hold off on snap judgements.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): You could be tempted to brag, make unrealistic claims. Know this and apply self-restraint. Some around you are resentful. You arouse envy by careless remarks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Friend may be well-meaning but misinformed. Rely on your own judgment. New view may be necessary. Stress-Independence of thought, action. Accent creative endeavors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You may be working against your own interests. Review procedures. Take time to follow through on past commitments. Aquarius individual can be of aid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): All cards are not on table. Some factors are hidden from view. Be versatile. Don't depend on just one event or person. Study Libra message. Time is on your side.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 18): Financial dealings favor opposition if you jump at first offer. Study fine print; read between the lines. Some delays are for your own benefit. There is no need to rush.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Cooperate with one born under Scorpio. Benefits will be mutual. Accent now on contracts, binding agreements. Logjam can be removed. But you require legal assistance.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Slow pace. Trying to be everywhere at once merely defeats basic purpose. Best to stick close to home now. Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Strive for domestic harmony.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a perceptive person, subject to moods. Important for you to have proper exercise and diet. Once you become ill in those areas, you also get careless in work habits personal relationships. Recent social contacts may lead to important relationships.

UMass vs. B.C.

Fusia Trying For Win Against Eagle-Sized Odds

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Writer

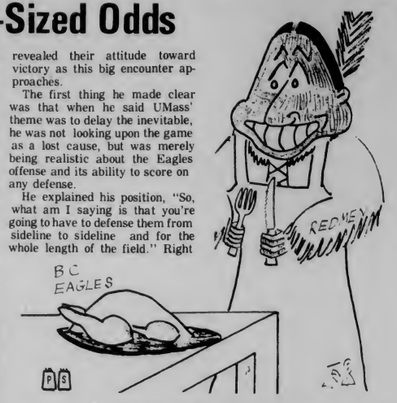
A perplexing situation has faced head UMass football coach Vic Fusia all week long as he has gotten his charges prepared for the yearly challenge of the Boston College football team, in a game to be played here at Alumni Stadium tomorrow at 1 p.m.

He has repeatedly asserted that the 1970 Eagles are the best he has seen in his ten years of coaching at UMass. He has said, "Our theme now is to delay, or prolong, the inevitable." He has labeled BC the best team in the East. However, he has also instilled in his players every confidence in the world that they can indeed defeat the Eagles.

Sound confusing? It is, a little bit. The coach has built up BC all week into being a great football team, and it is a great football team. At the same time, he has drilled the Redmen for a victory, for in his role as a coach who plays every game to win, he truly believes UMass can upset the Eagles.

Lending some light to this problem, Fusia talked about the pros and cons of getting ready for this BC club: "You scout teams, you evaluate them, you study their movies, you study their strengths, weaknesses...and you have to be objective and quite realistic and be sure not to underestimate or overestimate a team, and I assure you, I don't think we're overestimating them...This year's BC team is unique in that it can beat you many ways."

He elaborated by pointing out that the Eagles are expert kickoff returners, that they are adept at running reverses out of their offensive setup (what he called "Mickey Mouse" plays), that they can come right at you if they want "because of their size and running ability, and to make things worse they have a fine passer with many good receivers."



Okay, the coach had talked a while about the awesome shadow the team from Chestnut Hill casts. He swung back to the Redmen and revealed their attitude toward victory as this big encounter approaches.

The first thing he made clear was that when he said UMass' theme was to delay the inevitable, he was not looking upon the game as a lost cause, but was merely being realistic about the Eagles offense and its ability to score on any defense.

He explained his position, "So, what am I saying is that you're going to have to defense them from sideline to sideline and for the whole length of the field." Right here he assessed the Redmen's chances of winning when he commented, "And if you prolong them long enough, you never know what'll happen."

From all observations, tomorrow's matchup looks like a team that is known for its outstanding spirit and solid defense (UMass) going up against a team that has, oh, just so much talent (BC). It should be a great football game.

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES-This tilt will mark the last appearance in a Redman uniform for the following 15 seniors: John Farrelly, Pat Scavone, Ken Hughes, Bill Sroka, Bob Pena, Jim Kelliher, Russ Wood, Art Corsaletti, Mark Russell, Dick Heavey, Bill Byron, Dick Dyer, Joe Lanf, and Don Dotson and Tom Holmes...About this group, Fusia commented, "Ihave nothing but high praise for them. They're not just football players, but good men."...Aside from praising the seniors, the head coach doled out high words for the entire football staff, "We were in a position five weeks ago to just crumble, but they didn't. This speaks well of every member of the squad, our captain, our seniors and my coaching staff."...Redman fullback Dick Cummings is six yards shy of the 1000-yard rushing mark for his two years of running...Last year he compiled 424 yards on the ground, and thus far this fall has added 570 yards to that total...He is presently UMass' top ground-gainer.

Although famished by his foolish phonetic infatuation, the Great One is pleased to end his season's chores once again so that he might return once more to the somber solitude of his stony station.

But enough. He sees no reason to prolong the agony for his retarded readers who must wait a year to hear once more his reverent rhymes. To date, the Great One is rolling at an astronomical .733 pace and though the .800 mark has once again eluded his gratifying grasp, he is satisfied. And so he should be. Considering his illusory illness, the inane injun has endured quite well. But for the last time, the Great One scours the scores.

KICKOFF: Tomorrow at 1 p.m.
UMASS RECORD: (4-4-1) Beat Maine (28-0), Lost to Dartmouth (27-0), to Buffalo (16-13), to Boston U. (13-10), to Rhode Island (14-7), Tied UConn (21-21), Beat Vermont (48-6), Holy Cross (29-13), New Hampshire (24-14).
BC RECORD: (6-2) Beat Villanova (28-21), Navy (28-14), Virginia Military (56-3), Lost to Penn State (28-3), to Air Force (35-10), Beat Army (21013), Buffalo (65-12), Pittsburgh U. (21-6).
UMASS TYPE OF ATTACK: "T" with variations. Slow getting under way this year, but over past three weeks has responded well with Ken Hughes at quarterback. Rushing game strong with halfbacks Pat Scavone and Mark Russell, and fullback Dick Cummings, who has been great as of late. Receiving corps is good. Offensive line is strong.
BC TYPE OF ATTACK: A split backfield and two wide receivers stabilize the offense. Power "I" used on occasion, with some motion. There are three all-star performers here in quarterback Frank Harris, halfback Fred Willis and wide receiver John Bonistalli. Don't count out unheralded workmen like halfback Gene Comella and tight end Jim O'Shea.
UMASS BASIC DEFENSE: A 4-4 pro defense. Tackles Bill DeFlavio and Bill Sroka, along with linebackers John Farrelly, Dennis Collins, Mark Leamy and Joe Sabulis form the core of the defense. Defense is strong point of the whole team.
BC BASIC DEFENSE: A basic 4-4 front with three variations used off of that. This squad is young, with only two starting seniors, but is an improved defense over the one BC had a year ago.
PLAYERS TO WATCH: UMass-Quarterback Ken Hughes, halfback Pat Scavone, fullback Dick Cummings, tight end John Hulecki, defensive tackles Bill DeFlavio and Bill Sroka, linebacker Dennis Collins; BC-Quarterback Frank Harris, halfback Fred Willis, wide receiver John Bonistalli, linebacker Kevin Clemente and Al Dhembe, defensive halfback Skip Coppola.

Something Else '70 Draws 20,000

By ANNE STADNICKI
Staff Reporter

"Standing still is moving backward" said Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Education, when he addressed an audience at one of the closing lectures on Friday of "Something Else '70".

Entitled "Alternative Futures in Education", the lecture covered a great variety of reasons for educational pioneering, which was also the theme for the School of Education's marathon week of events.

"Something Else '70 was an attempt over one week, to give an opportunity to students, faculty and the general public to look at a variety of educational options and new frontiers in education," said Bob Woodbury, Assistant to the Dean for Special Program Development.

It offered about 500 different units, he explained, including mock appeals-trials, equal educational opportunity events, media experiments, various workshops, programs on different structures, and a special talk by Bill Schultz, author of Joy, who works with sensitivity methods.

The importance of Something Else '70, Woodbury added, was that it presented possibilities in the educational process to undergraduates teachers, principals, parents and children all together. There are few places where all these people can get together, he noted.

"Some people here liked or disliked individual parts of this week," said Dean Allen, "that's what it's all about."

The main idea of Something Else 70 was that change is needed and desirable in education, he said, but courses and experience."

Change for the sake of perspective is important, but experimenters must expect hostile criticism, he added. Especially significant is the alignment of allies before they are needed, he said.

"It's more dangerous to turn back than to go on, once you pass a certain point," warned the Dean.

Knowing when to discard the old is important, he said. A premature "hardening of the arteries" before educational goals are reached could result in stale, "sick" schools, it was his opinion.

an unusual group of people plus events must collude to gain a perspective on the problems.

"Competing programs create diversity," the Dean noted in his speech, "and I think we should have them, although the University says that two courses on the same subject is wasteful. Individual instructors, people, shape

"Youngsters learn more outside the school than inside in the inner city schools" he offered as an example, yet educators insist on enclosing their pupils in a box. What the Dean and many others propose is to let students out to learn in the world.

Collegiality between faculty and students here, and state and nationwide among educators is vital, said the Dean. The fraternity of educators must stand together for change, he suggested, although working on different programs or in different directions.

"We don't pretend to be comprehensive, we are a reasonable mix of people and ideas," clarified Dean Allen.

He added that no one dimension is absolutely important in education, but he feels that studies of the inventory of resources will prove important.

"Something Else '70 accomplished its goals, said Dean Allen.

It proved its value in the variety of resources expounded upon, the many contacts made with educational people and the general public, and the contribution of ideas and involvement in Western Massachusetts, he summarized.

"What people do with the options offered in Something Else '70," said the Dean's special assistant, "will be seen in future parent, teacher, and student achievements."

Something Else '70 was the fourth annual School of Education happening, according to Pat Crosson, assistant to Bob Woodbury. It followed Something '70 of last February, and two other events in 1968.

It all started as a class excercise that grew too large for the classroom, so it was expanded to a day's, then a week's, program, with all education classes at the University cancelled for that period, she said.

Whether or not another event will be sponsored by the School of Education is uncertain remarked Allen. It could become an overworked idea, or a really useful institution, he said.

Total attendence at Something Else '70 amounted to an estimated 20,000. Only about half of this amount was accounted for by undergraduates. The School of Education was pleased, said the Dean, that so many outsiders participated. Each day an average of 3,000 to 5,000 attended the workshops and lectures.

See Me, Feel Me, Touch Me

By JOHN BOITEAU
Staff Reporter

"Take off your shoes." "Put your arms in front of you." "Mill around, and when you touch someone, do what you want with them," were the words of William Schertz, co-founder of the Esalen Institute, as he began a discussion of encounter group culture Friday in Mark's Meadow Gymnasium, climaxing the School of Education Something Else '70.

Mr. Schertz told the audience of 150 that the techniques of the encounter group, which he had just demonstrated, could bring about a revolution in world relations if combined with the social revolution from the left.

"The techniques of the encounter group," he said, "have a universal application, and may be applied to any social situation."

The speaker then enumerated the three basic characteristics of the encounter group. Individual responsibility, he said, is the first goal of the encounter group.

"You are responsible for your body -- what it does and what happens to it," he explained.

Mr. Schertz added that sickness derives from a conflict which is not dealt with on a conscious level, but must be dealt with by the body. "Injuries and sickness," he said, "are the responsibility of the individual, and when the conflict is dealt with on a conscious level, the symptoms disappear."

Honesty is the second principle, he said; a person must know what is true, and must not deceive himself. "We are taught to lie," he said, "and this tendency must be overcome." Mr. Schertz said that truth is in the body, and that one must get in touch with the body to know what is true.

The third characteristic of the encounter group, according to Mr. Schertz, is its open format. "The encounter group may borrow from a number of techniques," he said, "such as yoga, psycho-drama, Gestalt therapy, and so on."

By request of the audience, Mr. Schertz demonstrated Rolfing. The theory behind Rolfing, he said, is that uncompleted experiences are manifested in muscular tension. The technique, he explained, involves deep body massage, which relaxes tension and allows the completion of an experience.

HELPING TO CLOSE OUT Something Else '70, William Schertz, left, co-founder of Esalen Institute, told an audience of 150 at Mark's Meadow School Gymnasium that the techniques of encounter groups could bring about a revolution in world relations. (MDC photos by David Bernstein)

Hanoi Charges Laird With "Covering Up"

PARIS (AP)-North Vietnam's delegation to the Paris peace talks said Sunday denials by U.S. Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird that American planes bombed above the 19th parallel was "an intolerable provocation" and an effort "to cover up the crimes of the Nixon administration."

In a statement, a spokesman said North Vietnam and "the entire Vietnamese people severly warn the Nixon administration" about the U.S. renewed bombing and repeated an admonition that the raids "seriously threaten the Paris conference on Vietnam."

Hanoi again asserted it had no "understanding" with the United States about permitting unarmed reconnaissance planes to fly over North Vietnamese territory.

The statement said Laird's denial that U.S. planes had attacked a U.S. pilots' detention camp and places in the region of Haiphong, Quang Ninh, Ha Tay, Hoa Binh and Hanoi were made "in order to reduce the extreme gravity of the Nov. 21, 1970, acts of war against the Democratic Republic of North Vietnam."

"The delegation of the government of the DRVN to the Paris conference on Vietnam resolutely and totally rejects these bellicose, insolent and deceptive statements of Mr. Laird's," the spokesman said.

Characterizing the Nixon administration as "odious and obstinate aggressors," the spokesman warned that any attack, "no matter on what parallel, has been and will continue to be deservedly punished."

There will be no Monday noon session of the Chancellor's Coffee Hour today. Instead, Associate Provost David C. Bischoff will hold an open session at 10:00 p.m. in Patterson House.

The principal subjects will be academic programming, with particular emphasis on residential college aspects thereof.

Senate Set To Vote On Veto

WASHINGTON-Senate supporters of a bill that would limit the amount of campaign money that could be spent on political broadcasting on television now claim they are within three votes of overriding President Nixon's veto of the bill.

However, Republican leaders insist that the President's veto will be sustained by "one or two votes."

A vote is scheduled for 5 p.m. today.

The outcome apparently hinges on eight senators, equally divided between Democrats and Republicans, who have not indicated how they will vote.

Democratic and Republican supporters of the bill say they have 61 votes. Since four senators are expected to be absent, a total of 96 votes will be cast.

To override a veto requires the vote of two thirds of those present. If 96 senators vote, it will take 64 votes to override.

If the supporters of the bill are correct, they must pick up three votes from among the eight senators who as yet have declined to commit themselves.

The four Democrats are James Allen (Ala.), John Stennis (Miss.), Everett Jordan (N.C.), and James Eastland (Miss.).

The Republicans are John J. Williams (Del.), William B. Saxbe (Ohio), Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), and John Sherman Cooper (Ky.).

Jordan indicated to newsmen last week that he is leaning toward overriding the President, although he voted against the bill Sept. 23, when it passed the Senate by 60 to 19.

The closeness of the vote and the uncertainty of the outcome is underscored by the fact that over the weekend Mr. Nixon directed personal letters to each of the Republican senators, asking for their support to sustain his veto.

At the same time, Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott issued a statement assuring senators that if the President is sustained, he will produce an all encompassing measure that will meet the demands of the Senate and close more loopholes than does the present legislation.

Mr. Nixon vetoed the bill on grounds that it set ceilings for television campaigning, but did not regulate spending in other media.

Scott, in his statements, said, "The measure which I will offer will meet the objections laid down by the President in his veto message. The problem with campaign spending is not radio and television. The problem is spending. This bill plugs only one hole in a sieve."

He added, "Such legislation is being drafted and I know it can pass."

Scott noted, "I have consulted the White House on the legislation I proposed and they know of this statement."

Scott's statement was designed to mollify those senators who fear that if they vote with the President there will be no further attempt made by the Administration to reform campaign spending.

Its All Politeness And Agreement When Trustees Open Door To Public

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

NEWTON—Perched on a small bluff overlooking Lake Norumbega sits the Marriot Motor Hotel, a very, very plush place. Guests have a tremendous view of the Rt. 128-Mass Pike interchange, Rt. 30, and if they go up on the roof and crane their necks, they may be able to see the beacon flashing on top of the Prudential Tower 14 miles away.

It looks like the kind of place that only traveling salesmen who sell aircraft carriers on commission could afford, but as a chambermaid told me, it only runs about twelve dollars a night.

The UMass Board of Trustees met Friday afternoon at the Marriot in the Concord Room. They were served lunch at noon and the meeting began, or was supposed to begin, at two. It took awhile to clear all the dishes out of the room.

As far as Trustee meetings go it was pretty normal. Any time a motion came up for a vote Chairman Joseph P. Healey would say, "All in favor say 'aye' (and they all would)..Opposed? None, it's a vote." John Haigis of the Building and Grounds Committee gave his familar clear, concise report. George Pumphret, chairman of the committee on Finances not unsurprisingly reported that he would have something to say at the next meeting, and to start the ball rolling, President Robert Wood made his customary remarks, often tagged "inane" by veteran observers of Trustee meetings.

The cast of characters doesn't really change much from meeting to meeting. Last time in the Campus Center, Chancellor Edward Moore from the Board of Higher Education was a guest along with a few people from UMass Boston. Last week Dean Lamar Souttar of the Medical School was there, Frank O'Brien from the Planning Office of UM Boston, J. H. Littlefield from our own Planning Office, and most notably, Dr. Randolph Bromery were present.

When the Trustees reached the item tagged "personnel action" on the agenda and unanimously accepted it, Dr. Bromery was given an ovation, preceded by a few remarks by Chancellor Tippo, because it meant that Bromery had just been appointed Vice-Chancellor in charge of student affairs.

It was a very short meeting, comparatively speaking. It didn't begin until close to 2:30 and was over by 3:30. The Trustees don't really have lunch at their meetings, They just eat during what is called "Executive Session." It is entirely possible that most of their work is accomplished during this informal, closed-to-the-press session.

Wood and Healey customarily preside over a press conference at the conclusion of business. Of Bromery's appointment Healey said "It's outstanding...We don't have to conduct a nation-wide search to find a man with Dr. Bromery's quality." He was also quick to point out that the special meeting at the Cape on December 28 is just a get-together, something that "every family should do once in a while." No formal, binding action will be taken by the Board at this all expense paid conclave.

The Trustees and the principals at their meetings are very easy people to approach and talk to. As evidence I offer President Wood's first comment to me at the press conference. Remarking that I had taken a lot of pictures during the meeting, Wood said, "You're wasting an awful lot of film, you know that?"

Bromery On Job Now

Before his appointment as vice-chancellor for student affairs, Dr. Bromery had been serving as special assistant to the chancellor for student affairs since last spring.

Although he will be performing essentially the same duties, the special assistant designation was an interim one whereas the vice-chancellor post is a permanent one under the new administrative organization of the campus.

(The new administrative plan calls for the work of the campus to be divided into five areas, each headed by a vice chancellor under the chancellor.)

Prior to the Board's finalization, Dr. Bromery's appointment received swift student-faculty-administration approval.

He came to UMass as an associate professor of geology in 1967 and was named head of the department two years later. He will retain his title of professor of geology.

Before joining the UMass faculty Dr. Bromery had a distingquished career as an exploration geophysicist with the U.S. Geological Survey. He is a graduate of Howard University with an M.S. degree from American University and a Ph. D. from Johns Hopkins University.

At UMass Dr. Bromery helped found and is now president of CCEBS, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students. CCEBS helps black students and others with college potential overcome financial and academic barriers to university careers.

Board Dubs Bromery UM Vice-Chancellor

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

The Board of Trustees named Geology Professor Randolph W. Bromery Vice-Chancellor for student affairs for the Amherst Campus at their meeting Friday.

Dr. Bromery's appointment is effective immediately

(An accompanying story provides background information to the appointment).

In his opening remarks, Chancellor Tippo announced that search committees had been assembled for the remaining four vice-chancellor vacancies. He also said that some of the new Northeast "suite" dormitories will be ready for students next semester.

A proposed "deficiency budget" of $150,000 was then presented to the Board by Dr. Bromery, to cover the costs of plans to ease campus security problems.

The main budgetary action of the meeting, however, was the Board's approval of the Fiscal 1972 Capital Outlay Request for the three UMass campuses.

The total requests amounted to $76 million with $17 million appropriated to Amherst, $5 million to Worcester, and $54 million to Boston.

John Haigis, Chairman of the Committee on Buildings and Grounds, presented the appropriation bill.

Modular classrooms, a "botany controlled environmental growth" facility, the graduate research center, designs for an engineering laboratory, and a "life sciences" building, campus improvement, and utilities will be funded by the Amherst portion of the capital outlay.

Boston's $54 million appropriation will be used for the construction of a physical education building, and another academic building for College 030. (The various departments of the projected Boston campus re labelled as Colleges 010, 020, 030, etc.)

The design funds for the second phase of the science building at the Boston campus will also be taken from this budget.

A combination student residence and minimum-care facility for patients not requiring actual hospitalization will be financed by the $5 million allotted to the Worcester Medical School.

The next Trustees meeting, scheduled for December 28 during Christmas vacation in Hyannis, was described by Board Chairman Joseph P. Healey as a chance for the Trustees to "sit back and take a look at the University as a whole... a chance to think about the problems ahead of us and how to meet them."

Healey envisions the Sheraton Hyannis (in which the meeting will be housed) as being converted into a "think-tank" where no "formal action" will take place.

There had been some speculation on the purpose of the vacation period meeting when it was first announced. Last year, a Trustee gathering held at approximately the same time resulted in the approval of the dormitory rent hike which prompted a massive student protest last February.

Central Dorms "Chained Shut" In New Holiday Security Move

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Central area dormitories will be "chained" shut during the Thanksgiving holiday in order to provide maximum security for student and University property.

The "chains" will be placed on all dorms in the Central Area unoccupied during the vacation and on all doors except the front entrance in those dorms with heads of residence.

These steps are being taken, according to Assoc. Dean of Students Michael West, because of inadequate security measures available with present security forces for dorms during vacations.

West told the MDC that in past vacation periods there have been numerous incidents of dormitory theft. The chains are expected to prevent much of stealing in dormitories, especially at dorms like Hills where the front door reportedly don't lock.

There has been some dispute as to whether the Physical Plant is able to supply the chains. "We'll get the chains, even if we have to go out and buy them," claimed West, saying that the Treasurer's office has been reluctant to endorse the plan.

ROTC Presents . . .

UMass' Air Force and Army Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets are now sponsoring a fund-raising drive for the relief of Pakistani tidal wave victims.

The money collected during the drive will be used to purchase badly needed medical living supplies for the Pakistani people.

Canvassing for contributions will begin today in campus dormitories. The drive got under way after Saturday's football game.

Cadet John Murphy, spokesman for the planning committee, anticipates a problem with the Thanksgiving vacation, but said, "The drive will continue after the recess."

In The Nation And The World

Starvation, Disease, Despair In Wake Of Pakistani Typhoon

DAULATKHAN, East Pakistan (AP)- An old man with hair mussed and wearing only a cloth skirt walked along a road here on Bhola Island, arms outstretched, hands clawing the air.

"He lost all his family in the cyclone," a local farmer said. Soldier Hussain Ali climbed down from a palm tree to which he had clung for five hours near Bhola Town on the morning after the cyclone and tidal wave ripped across the island to discover all but one in his family had been washed away with 70 out of 90 who lived in his compound.

An old man sat in the debris of bamboo and corrugated iron surrounded by bodies and told a government pilot: "I want to die. I am too weak to bury my dead and I don't even recognize them."

To these people the enormity of the East Pakistan catastrophe is virtually complete. All that they had known was gone, their experiences were multiplied a million times in the darkness from midnight to dawn Friday, Nov. 13 when winds up to 150 miles an hour whipped up waves 20 feet high and crashed them against the unprotected shores of scores of low, flat islands in the Bay of Bengal.

According to official figures, at least 150,000 persons were killed. But from eyewitnesses reports and discussion with officials on the spot, enough people to fill the metropolitan area of Pittsburgh, Pa., perished within five hours. Government officials make informal estimates of up to half a million dead.

Although the government was reluctant in the first week after the disaster to think of casualties in hundreds of thousands, now no one shrugs skeptically at talk of deaths as high as a million.

After the first week, officials in Dacca said deaths on Bhola Island alone were at least 200,000 of the pre-cyclone population of 900,000. In the Ganges River Delta area of Patuakhali to the west of Bhola Island, unofficial deaths one week after the disaster were 127,000 and dead are still being counted.

Many parts of Bhola and its sister smaller island, Hatia, still have not been reached by aid teams. The same was true in Patukhali.

Bhola Island and Patakhali between them are half the area of about 2,500 affected square miles and have more than half the affected population of 2.2 million.

The shore and island areas were fully populated with up to 600 persons per square mile. During the rice harvest this month, thousands more arrived to harvest the crop planted last April. The area is one of the world's richest rice growing regions.

This year the rice harvest, which gives life to at least 75 million persons who crowd this eastern province, the size of Florida, attracted thousands to their deaths.

The enormity of the human loss still has not reached the sprawling, crowded East Pakistan capital of Dacca.

Cyclones are old stories and the sun shone in a clear sky here Friday morning.

After President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan saw the cyclone area from a high flying civilian transport three days after the storm struck, he ordered "no effort be spared" to bring relief.

Eight days after the storm, the army had provided one helicopter and was not assigning any of the Soviet built models kept in West Pakistan. One week went by before the government declared a day of national mourning.

Some officials figured at least 40 per cent of the survivors had not received relief aid.

Getting aid to survivors is a problem of administration and geography.

White House Attacks High Wage Increases

WASHINGTON (AP)-New wage boosting settlements which helped keep the wage price spiral spinning upward will be a target of the next inflation alert from the White House.

The alert due this week, the second to be issued by the President's Council of Economic Advisers, is expected to be harder hitting and more specific in dealing with current wage and price developments than the first anti-inflation report issued Aug. 7.

However, official sources said the council's wage warnings will fall well short of an "incomes policy." The adoption of such a policy-the use of government persuasion or pressure, or the setting of voluntary wage price guidelines-is again being debated within the administration.

The Council of Economic Advisers opposes any "incomes policy," considers the concept unworkable, and does not wish to administer it if one is adopted. Nevertheless it has delayed its new inflation alert for some days in order to deal with two significant wage developments.

These are:

-The three year wage package offered by General Motors to end the United Auto Workers strike, with an estimated untimate annual cost of $2 billion to the company. The first year increase is about 50 cents an hour. However, much of the rise represents a deferred cost of living increase resulting from an informal agreement made in 1967.

-The recommendation of a presidential emergency board for pay increases averaging 11 per cent a year for three years, to ward off a strike of about 500,000 railroad workers.

These increases have been criticized widely as setting a probable pattern for other union negotiations, reinforcing the precedents set up by the 13 per cent yearly gains won by the Teamsters last spring and the approximate 15 per cent annual increases provided in the new settlement of the construction workers.

At a time when price increases seem to be moderating, industry spokesmen complain that the new round of wage settlements assures built in cost increases that will be forcing prices up for years to come, unless there are unexpectedly strong increases in productivity-output per man hour-to offset the rising cost.

The new alert will show an encouraging recent rise in productivity, officials disclosed. But the persistent inflationary pressures present a stubborn dilemma for President Nixon's economic team; if the government applies the strong stimulants many say are needed to revive the sluggish economy, it risks a strong revival of inflation.

Adminstration economists have been making appeals for moderation in wage contract settlements, and this pattern is expected to be repeated in the coming alert.

Governor's Phones Bugged By Mistake

WASHINGTON (AP) - Special hotline Civil Defense telephones in six of the nation's governors' offices were wired incorrectly so conversations in the offices could be overheard, American Telephone and Telegraph Co. said Thursday.

The company said the phones were wired so that they would have to be tapped from nearby in order for conversations inside the offices but not over the phone itself - to be overheard.

The survey of governor's telephones was made following disclosure early this week that Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel's hot line telephone was capable of picking up and transmitting conversations in his office.

The phones connect the governors to three different terminals including the North American Air Defense Command inside a mountain in Colorado.

In addition to Mandel's phone, the wiring mixup also was found in governors' phones in Delaware, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Utah, and Arkansas, AT&T said.

U.S. Ends Raids Over N. Vietnam

SAIGON (AP)—American supersonic jet bombers turned to targets in Laos and Cambodia yesterday after battering air detenses and supply depots in North Vietnam in the biggest air campaign in seven months.

Striking from aircraft carriers in the Gulf of Tonkin and air bases in Thailand and South Vietnam, as many as 400 Air Force and Navy combat planes took part in the raids across wide areas of Indochina.

Bombers pounded North Vietnam from midnight until dawn, the deadline set by the Pentagon for completing what it called a series of rotaliatory strikes against missile and antiaircraft gun positions and supply depots.

The operation was so politically sensitive that the U.S. Command imposed a news blackout and refused comment on two charges by Hanoi:

That five U.S. bombers and one helicopter were shot down during the around the clock bombing of North Vietnam that began before dawn Saturday, Saigon time.

That there were 34 "old persons and children" killed during the raids.

Highly placed U.S. sources said the Nixon administration was willing to gamble on the political consequences of resuming heavy raids over north Vietnam because some U.S. officials were unable to resist going after what they considered to be lucrative targets.

Announcing the raids on Saturday, Defense Decreatary Melvin R. Laird said they were "Limited duration protective reaction air strikes against missile and antiaircraft gun sites and related facilities in North Vietnam, south of the 19th parallel."

Laird did not say what the "related facilities" were, but sources identified them as supply dumps piled high with war materials awaiting shipment through Laos into Cambodia and South Vietnam.

The sources said the Pentagon seized on the downing of an unarmed American reconnaissance jet on Nov. 13 as justification for retaliatory raids, although a Pentagon spokesman said that since then other U.S. reconnaissance planes had been fired on but not hit. But the U.S. Command in Saigon had insisted since the Nov. 13 episode that it had no reports of American aircraft being fired on.

One source estimated that more than 200 U.S. warplanes took part in the raids over North Vietnam, while an equal number attacked supply depots across the border in Laos.

North Vietnam's foreign minister said in a broadcast over Hanoi's official news agency that the bombings posed "a grave threat to the work of the Paris conference on Vietnam."

He said U.S. warplanes "repeatedly attacked many populated areas, communication lines and economic establishments in Quang Bing and Ha Tinh provinces" in the southern most corner of North Vietnam bordering Laos below the 19th parallel, and that "many flights" of American planes "fired rockets on the periphery of Hanoi," which is far above the 19th parallel.

There were no post bombing reports available up to nightfall yesterday.

The U.S. Command reported that an Air Force F105 fighter bomber crashed in the Plain of Jars in North Central Laos after an operational failure and that both crewmen were rescued in good condition. It was the 73rd American aircraft reported lost over Laos since the command began reporting air losses there last March 10.

One informant said North Vietnam had near its western border surface to air missiles and anti aircraft guns capable of hitting American planes bombing supply routes running through Laos. He said these were in the area of the Mu Gia and Nape passes, which lead into Laos south of the 19th parallel.

"In the raids over North Vietnam over the weekend, they went in after the missile sites first, then hit the supply dumps," the source said.

Many of the raids reportedly were aimed at a heavy backlog of war materials awaiting shipment southward for North Vietnamese and Viet Cong soldiers fighting in Cambodia and South Vietnam.

Choice Of Moynihan Criticized At U.N.

UNITED NATIONS, (N.Y.) (AP)—Some U.N. diplomats were reported unenthusiastic yesterday over reports that Daniel Patrick Moynihan would replace Charles W. Yost as head of the United States' U.N. mission.

They remarked that Moynihan, President Nixon's special assistant on urban affairs, had practically no experience in foreign affairs, while Yost, is a career diplomat.

They said Moynihan's lack of experience would show up in the talks on the Middle East now in progress among the Big Four U.N. delegates.

Both men have been in the Nixon administration from the beginning in January 1969. Yost took the U.N. job after others declined.

The diplomats said that at least three Washington embassies heard of the reported Moynihan Yost change when they inquired about earlier news stories of pending changes in the Nixon administration.

One said he had heard that Moynihan would take over from Yost early in 1971. None seemed to know if Yost would be reassigned.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler refused Friday to confirm or deny the news stories about Moynihan replacing Yost.

Yost declined comment, but the first report was described as "news" to him.

Life Publishes Khruschev's Memoirs Despite Denial

NEW YORK (AP) - Reminiscences attributed to Nikita S. Khrushchev describe Joseph Stalin as a madman who replaced Lenin's revolutionary ideals with terror, but whose name now is being whitewashed in the Soviet Union "by a few of our influential military leaders."

But they also say that Khrushchev owed his rise to power - and perhaps his life - to Stalin's second wife.

The reminiscences, published in the Nov. 27 edition of Life magazine, portray Stalin as a heavy drinker, a murderer of millions and a leader who permitted conditions of famine and poverty to persist because he thought pleas for help were plots against him.

The chief points of the reminiscences are a denunciation of Stalin once more by Khruschev and a plea to clear the names of those Stalin executed or imprisoned.

They are the first of a four part series to be published in subsequent weeks by Life.

According to the official Soviet news agency Tass, Khrushchev has denied he had ever turned over his memoirs to any foreign publishing firm.

Life editors insist, however, the manuscript being published by them and later in book form by Little, Brown & Co. is authentic. In an Editors' Note in this week's issue of Life, Managing Editor Ralph Graves says the manuscript had been obtained by the editors a year ago.

Knowing then, he adds, that a denial would be forthcoming "we had to be sure that what we had was not a fabrication. We did many things to authenticate it."

Khruschchev, who as premier began the campaign to downgrade Stalin, was himself ousted from power in 1964.

The reminiscenses begin with Khrushchev saying he lives like a hermit on the outskirts of Moscow, communicating only with those who guard him.

Khrushchev, now 76, was reported taken to a hospital in Moscow early last week with a recurring heart ailment that had plagued him most of the year.

The remarks attributed to Khrushchev about Stalin come at a time when the name of the old dictator, who died March 5, 1953, is being resurrected in the Soviet Union in books, films and actions.

"We have no choice but to rehabilitate all of Stalin's victims," the article entitled "Khrushchev Remembers" says. "I wonder particularly about a few of our influential military leaders who, in their speeches and memoirs, are trying to whitewash Stalin and put him back on his pedestal."

At another point the reminiscenses contend that Stalin purged the best military and political brains in the Soviet Union and at the same time threw aside many of Lenin's ideals.

Khrushchev is described as being saved from the purges by Stalin's second wife, Nadezhda Sergeyevna Alliluyeva, because they studied together at the Industrial Academy. She was a party functionary and Khrushchev had to give her instructions.

"During the years that followed, I stayed alive while most of my contemporaries, my classmates at the Academy, lost their heads as enemies of the people. I've often asked myself, 'How was I spared?' I think part of the answer is that Nadya's reports helped determine Stalin's attitude toward me. I call it my lottery ticket. I drew a lucky lottery ticket when it happened that Stalin observed my activities through Nadezhda Sergeyevna."

Stalin's second wife commited suicide in 1932, driven to it by Stalin himself, according to their daughter Svetlana Alliluyeva, who defected to the United States in 1967. Svetlana is now married to an American architect, Wesley Porter.

At another point in the reminiscences, Stalin is described as being brutish toward Svetlana, affectionately called Svetlanka, when she was 26. The scene was a drunken New Year's party at Stalin's dacha outside Moscow in 1953.

"Stalin was in high spirits and therefore was drinking a lot himself. Stalin put on some records of folk music. We all listened and started dancing....." Svetlanka appeared and Stalin made her dance, although she was tired.

"No doubt Stalin loved Svetlanka very much. Stalin was proud and fond of her. He behaved so brutishly not because he wanted to cause Svetlanka pain. No, his behavior toward her really was an expression of affection, but in a perverse, brutish form which was peculiar to him."

Stalin was portrayed as detesting being alone and insisting on long dinners and drinking bouts.

"These dinners were frightful. During the day, I usually tried to take a nap, because there was always a risk that if you didn't take a nap and Stalin invited you for dinner, you might get sleepy at the table; and those who got sleepy at Stalin's table could come to a bad end."

"Khrushchev Remembers" is sprinkled with incidents indicating why he thought Stalin was abnormal. He is described as calling meetings of his lieutenants, including Khrushchev, at a theater where they would sit and watch cowboy movies, then pile into cars for rides to Stalin's home for drinking and eating.

Life said that in the second part of the series Khrushchev describes the events of World War II and Stalin's fear and cowardice during the worst days of the war. The other installments carry the reminiscence up through the Cuban missile crisis in 1962, Life said.

Europe Troop Cutbacks "Unsafe," Senate Told

WASHINGTON (AP) - Top Army and State Department officials have told a Senate sub-committee that the level of U.S. conventional forces in Western Europe is razor thin and further troop reductions could encourage Soviet "adventurism."

A transcript of subcommittee hearings released yesterday revealed that senators disagreed. They outlined a gloomy picture of the U.S. economy and said in a report "a way must be found to reduce the number of American military abroad."

Bringing 100,000 U.S. troops back from Western Europe was mentioned.

The hearings also elicited an Army statement that "U.S. allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization could and should do more in their defense."

The subcommittee staff, on another point, said there are 128 U.S. generals and admirals on the European scene compared with 91 in Vietnam during the period of peak American strength there.

The hearings were held before the Senate subcommittee on U.S. security arrangements and commitments in five days of testimony spread over May, June and July.

Testifying for the government were Martin J. Hillenbrand, assistant secretary of state for European affairs, and three four star generals: Andrew J. Goodpastor, supreme allied commander in Europe; David A. Burchinal, deputy commander of U.S. forces in Europe; and James H. Polk, Burchinal's deputy.

Subcommittee members, including Chairman Stuart Symington, D. Mo., and J. William Fulbright, D Ark., indicated the current state of the U.S. economy would prompt Congress to demand substantial U.S. troop withdrawals in Western Europe.

But reductions must be accomplished "while at the same time maintaining the deterrent effect" of NATO forces, the subcommittee's report said, adding:

"It is recognizably a difficult task, but this country now faces difficult economic problems." Sen. Mike Mansfield, the Senate Democratic leader from Montana and longtime advocate of reducing U.S. forces in Europe told a reporter he may call up for action next year his resolution urging a substantial reduction of these forces.

"In my opinion, it would pass if called up," he said.

Mansfield said he considers U.S. cooperation in NATO necessary and mandatory. "But I certainly do not think it is mandatory that we undertake this responsibility to this extent," he said.

Once the autumn leaves have fallen you can see the world in its true dimensions. It happens every year, but we seem to forget. It is almost as though we are seeing things clearly for the first time, through it is merely the annual renewal of perspective. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton).

Greenfield Commune Put On Trial Basis

GREENFIELD - consent decree was filed Friday in Superior Court calling for the Brotherhood of the Spirit Commune to receive a nine month "trial period" to continue occupying property in the town of Warwick.

During this period it must demonstrate whether or not it can meet sanitary regulations, the decree proposes.

The commune is a group that has congregated in a big colonial-style house which was formerly a restaurant.

Norman Callahan, hearings master, said a Superior Court justice must take final action on the consent decree. The court is expected to act within two weeks.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP)-Vince Staten, a graduate student, won election over 10 coeds as the University of Tennessee homecoming queen Thursday, but his victory later was invalidated.

The university's student tribunal decided that Staten, a write-in candidate, was ineligible because the contest was open only to senior women. Staten got 2,500 of the 4,000 votes cast.

Black Music's History Shown By "Cannonball" and Co.

"The History and Evolution of Black Music" was the theme of two concerts (Friday and Saturday nights in Bowker Auditorium) and two seminar/workshops featuring the Julian "Cannonball" Adderly Quintet this weekend under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council.

The photos on this page were taken at the first workshop Friday afternoon in the Campus Center Auditorium, where the group entertained a "full house."

Both seminar/workshops, the second taking place the Black Cultural Center (Mills House) on Saturday afternoon, were open to the public free of charge.

Baird Demonstration Fizzles In Southwest Rain Saturday

By GARY SLICKMAN
Staff Reporter

A demonstration concerning Legalization of Abortion, was conducted outside of Hampden Dining Commons early Saturday morning. William Baird, a birth control advocate, was the leader of the demonstration which consisted of members from Hillel, Parents Aid Society, and interested students.

Witnesses to the demonstration included Massachusetts State Senators, Representatives, and the UMass Trustees. A table was set up by the demonstrators near the entrance to the Dining Commons where the officials were dining with University Trustees. Included on the table were five petitions concerning outdated State Laws on such matters as abortions, sex crimes, and deviant behavior.

An attempt was made to secure the signatures of the lawmakers, who were on campus in regard to Legislators' Day, but the attempts met with no success. Various replies to the demonstrators queries by the administrators were: "My Bishop told me not to sign," and "You should have been aborted" or "Get Lost!". Some of those questioned declined comment on the matter.

Baird, who seemed upset by the proceedings, was asked if he felt discouraged by the reactions to the demonstration. He replied that, "I never get discouraged, because I am right." He further commented that the State Government was afraid of the church.

Baird and his followers continued to demonstrate despite the cold wet weather, while the legislators remained within the Dining Commons. They were there well after the Senators, Representatives, and Trustees had departed from the building to see the UMass football game.

Academic Chief Sought

The University is in the process of selecting a new Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs. All Deans, Directors and Department Heads are invited to submit names for consideration. Names of persons outside the University as well as those in the University are welcome.

The Vice Chancellor will have the duties of the former Provost except that he will not supervise student affairs. All deans and directors of academic units will report to him. He will have general oversight of all educational and research programs and thus will have important responsibilities in the areas of personnel, budget, academic planning, recruiting of faculty, etc.

All department heads and deans are requested to bring this matter to the attention of all faculty members in their respective divisions. All names, together with supporting material, is requested to be submitted by December 3. This information may be sent to Chancellor Oswald Tippo or to any one of the following members of the Vice Chancellor Search Committee:

Guinean Prexy Calls For U.N. Help As Portuguese Invade Nation

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) - President Sekou Toure of Guinea said Sunday night as saying the invasion force came from there. the Portuguese army and navy invaded his Marxist oriented nation capital of Conakry.

Toure appealed to U.N. Secretary General U Thant for the immediate dispatch of U.N. Airborne Troops.

In New York, the U.N. Security Council was summoned for an emergency meeting Sunday night on the question.

A spokesman for the Portuguese Foreign Ministry in Lisbon expressed "surprise" at Toure's charge and added: "We were caught by the oddity of this news in the middle of the weekend and the only thing I can add now is that we are still awaiting official texts of Toure's statement."

Toure's government has given shelter and open encouragement to rebels trying to oust the Portuguese from neighboring Porguguese Guinea. Radio Conakry quoted captured raiders

Radio Conakry quoted a prisoner, described as "one of the principal leaders of the attack" and identified as Capt. Ambroise Fernando, as saying the raiding force had more than 10 heavily armed warships and its mission was to seize the Guinea Defense Ministry.

The radio quoted another prisoner as saying the invasion force numbered about 350 men, including 50 Guineans serving as guides.

A Guinean captured with the invaders claimed the force set sail Friday mroning in six boats from an undisclosed place and arrived off the Guineas coast Saturday night, the radio said. He was quoted as saying five Guineans and a sargeant were to have captured the Defnese Ministry, and a contingent of 35 Portuguese and three Guineans was assigned to attack the planes at Conakry airport.

Toure said in a radio statement that Conakry was under bombardment but the attack had been contained by popular resistance. He said the U.N. troops were needed for the purpose of "wiping out, with our national army, the last positions occupied by the Portuguese mercenaries and to pursue the aggressors' ships in our territorial waters."

Toure appealed earlier in two messages to all African chiefs of state for help. President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania pledged Sunday night his country's full sympathy and our support." Tanzania is the base for a southern African guerrilla movement that has been fighting the Portuguese in Mozambique for over five years.

Legislators' Day Tops USCC Effort

Legislators' Day, an annual event at the University, was highlighted this year by the participation of a student group, the University and State Communications Council (U.S.C.C.).

Headed by Judy Gill, a Chelmsford junior, U.S.C.C. works to improve the state university, particularly through public relations projects and as legislative liason.

USCC met with the legislators at 11:00 Saturday and the combined group was estimated at 250 people. They then proceeded to a luncheon where opening remarks were made by Chancellor Oswald Tippo and President Robert C. Wood.

Speaker of the House David Bartley and Attorney General Robert H. Quinn were featured guests at the luncheon as well as former UMass president John W. Lederle.

Following the luncheon, students and legislators attended the UMass-B.C. football game.

It was at a post game reception that the real purpose of Legislators Day was accomplished, according to Gill, who said, "real and honest channels of communication opened up between the students and the legislators." The informal atmosphere and the willingness to talk, demonstrated by both groups combined to produce a very interesting and informative discussion.

"Chief among the topics of conversation was co-ed housing," she declared. "The administration seemed very receptive during the discussion, there was definite give and take between the two groups and we made tremendous strides in examining the problem," she added.

U.S.C.C. has now organized a lecture series featuring one or two legislators in each lecture. Each man will speak in his individual field of expertise.

Four Vignettes

Music

I was honored to have had Lynda Brown's Martin guitar spend this past weekend in my room. "Martin" (in case you don't know) is a name brand of American guitars. Lynda is a UMass student who sings in coffeehouses sponsored by various dorms from time to time. She is one of the dozen or more singers on campus who could and should be playing at the Tea Party or Carnegie.

The University of Massachusetts has a tradition of ignoring the performers in its own house, and then hiring them once they have left the University and become famous. Taj Mahal and Buffy Ste Marie are two that come to the mind.

I wonder if it would be possible for the Fine Arts Council or even the Homecoming and Winter Carni committees to find the courage to consider either hiring some local performers as concert "warm-ups", even sponsoring a concert itself featuring local performers.

The University should take a lead in discovering new talent. I do not believe that such quality musicians as Lynda, Rich Iocovelli, Poor Howard, Kevin Collins, Dan Martin, Frank Clark, John Sharkey, and others deserve their anonymity. They should not be for themselves; they should be for all.

The World

"A person with no background in the arts is likely to be a dull teacher," the lecturer droned on. Another of them would save the world through international television. One proffered sensitivity training and "relating' as the means. Good nutrition, said a different gentleman, is the panacea for not learning. "Computers are the Answer", exhorted the former mathematician. "But the environment and ecology!" retorted the scientist. The Secret of Life could be learned every two minutes in the Montague Attic. The integrated day, differentiated staffing, flexible scheduling, micro-teaching, individualized instruction, culture confrontation situational exercise, behavior modification, innovation, self-concept.....

The glory of Something Else '70, Modular Credit Week at the School of Education, was so many people sharing so many Utopias with so many. Not unlike the corner of 42nd Street and 8th Avenue, where old poor men and young rich men, whores and winos, junkies and people ofGod gather to preach their vision of the world, Something Else '70 offered UMass a week of excitement and education that all the Student Senates and Faculty Senates and professors and courses could not conceive of in a year.

"How do you know?" Dwight Allen, clothed in one of his obnoxious, multi-colored "fun" shirts, asked himself. "I don't know," he answered, "but I think it's important to find out. The resources of the world are the resources for education."

And the world accepted the invitation to come to Something Else '70 last week.

Evaluating

Evaluating teachers not only makes good political sense, it is common sense. Education, in fact, is one of the few industries that does not periodically evaluate its employees.

There are two kinds of evaluations. One passes judgement on a person -- it asks, "Are you good or bad, do you pass or fail?" The other tries to educate -- rather than demand "yes" or "no", it asks "how?" and "why" and serves as a basis for learning.

The Student Senate is sponsoring a teacher-course evaluation project, the first time on a University-wide basis this has happened.

Unfortunately, the evaluating questions are highly negative and serve no functional purpose, especially for a teacher who doesn't want to be labelled "good" or "bad", but who does want to improve his teaching. Thus, the students, similar to those who fight for peace, are guilty of asking for educational change, while not providing any themselves when given the chance.

If students are not capable of providing an adequate evaluation that treat faculty members as human beings, then the administration must shatter the myth of student impartiality and knowledge in this area, and it must take the initiative, not as a "white man's burden", but as its responsibility to improve teaching at UMass. Ideally, there should be competition between administrators, faculty, and students to see who can educate themselves and each other better.

Planning

The Faculty Senate's Long Range Planning Report has been received with a minimum of controversy and discussion. One of the reasons for this is that it is not a terribly profound or revolutionary document. Among its recommendations are that the University expand to 30,000 by 1980, that the University create diverse living and educational alternatives, and that the Long Range Planning Committee (academics) merge with the Master Planning Committee (physical). To the last recommendation, one can only applaud. To the first recommendation, one can wish that the directive had come from the State Board of Higher Education, rather than from a UMass Faculty Senate Committee; for it should be the responsibility of the State to formulate the overall direction of education, not one of the Universities of the State.

The recommendation for diversity affords my greatest disappointment with Chairman Marcus' Committee, for in a word, the recommendation, with all its vagueness, ambiguity, and generalness, does not go far enough. To be sure, its support for "at least one experimental, semi-autonomous living-learning unit" is specific and commendable. But except for that one unit which will affect only a small percentage of the students, there is no specific proposal that will raise the quality of ALL undergraduate and graduate living and learning.

The Report offers no proposal for in-service faculty training. It offers no facilitating of team teaching or interdisciplinary courses. It offers no provision for accreditation of modular experiences; indeed, it speaks only in terms of courses, not learning. And the Report retains credits and courses, assuming that these, and not performance and task criteria should be the basis for degrees. The Report does not offer an expansion of exchange programs. It does not offer off-campus situations. The rhetorical characterizations of faculty, administrators, and students is retained; it does not occur to the Committee that interests in our age are so interrelated that bloc voting is a thing of the past. The Report does not suggest what we can do with our existing structures that have failed: where is the mention of soundproofing dorms, or decentralization of decision-making, or altering the physical plan for UMass? Perhaps most important, the Report does not generate excitement, it has little vision for the future, and it is so vague, that it cannot hope to meet the challenge of the Seventies.

I would urge Chancellor Tippo and President Wood, not to react to this Report, but to make their own ideas known, to create an alternative plan. Until we get much more feedback from all parties on this campus, the "direction for the Seventies" will be one of continued loneliness and educational sprawl.

Phobic Radicalism

One of the more galling attributesof many of our outspoken peers is their simplistic readiness to evaluate the United States of America solely by assessing her history on a scale of absolute values and totally ignoring the realitites of human opinion at whatever period the outrages they gleefully cite occurred. They shrilly recount the history of slavery, witch trials, oppression and murder, with obvious intimation that all these inhumanities were invented in the U.S. and were exported to the other nations of the world, where puppet governments then adopted out subhuman tactics to exploit their own nationals for our gains. One might assume that prior to the establishment of the U.S. all men and their governments were noble, selfless, enlightened, and humanitarian.

One might also assume that these latter-day saints achieved their highly developed sense of moral outrage spontaneously. Not hardly.

Current concerns with the value and quality of human life are as much a product of America--or as much a part of Man--as are the technological creations which were also received first with such enthusiasm, then abused to such despair.

University faculties have encouraged social myopia: with all their emphasis on value and morality, they somehow neglected the inculcation of reason in their students. Pumping people full of information and moral aspirations is pointless when they are incapable of accurately evaluating that data, of understanding causation and consequence, and applying to this understanding the value systems by which they seek to live.

The most vehement social critics seem unable to assimilate the lessons of sociology and psychology. Useless to them also are the perspectives which history affords, the insights of personal experience with fellow humans. Somehow many people don't learn to wed these bits into an integral, rational, pragmatic philosophy.

It is convenient to ignore the nature of man and his interactions with his fellows; however, this omission has grave practical consequences, regardless of the beauty of the philosophic ideal it generates. Utopia, though a noble dream, is a mass of irresolvable contradictions in reality.

One cannot demand of Man any more than He is capable of providing. And Man is not capable of providing perfection, even in the simplest of his understandings, certainly not in his gargantuan social and governmental experiments. Any philosophy that hopes to elevate Man to the aerie of civilization staggers forward on a "striving for" basis, not an "achieving" basis. One can only strive for Justice, for Truth, for Meaning. Then recognizing that the only socio-moral alternatives open to Man are regression, stagnation, and successive approximation, one perhaps would devote himself to preventing the former two and encouraging the latter. (Action must not be counterefflective talk, must not be alienating symbolism, but must be considered, practical, and logically consequential.) No one can make society in his image; but everyone contributes something to the image that is society.

Many proclaim they have seen our injustice, our untruth, our hypocrisy. Of course they have. What they have chosen not to see is our humanity, which these failings are only reflections of. Certainly we will try to improve; but those who are so intent in condemning our weaknesses might perhaps best employ their intellectual resources with an inquiry into the factors that compel them to criticize so vehemently.

Could it be that they fear their own humanity?

Town Freedom

To The Editor:

As a lifelong resident of the Town of Amherst and a student at UMass, I deeply resent Peter Pascarelli's latest excursion into the depths of irresponsible editorializing in his Nov. 16 "Seize the Town." For 22 years I have watched with great pride the farmers, merchants, artists and academicians of this small town support and encourage both a university and a college, neither of which pay taxes on the prime land on which they stand. The property taxes levied on the residents are among the highest in the State, for the Town must provide the services necessary to accommodate the great swell in population from September to June. At the same time we, the residents, must watch shopping centers and hamburger joints sprawl, huge numbers of autos pollute and congest, great towers rise and once-beautiful farms and woodlands sprout hideous apartment complexes instead of corn or asparagus or trees.

We didn't build them. The Boston, Worcester, Springfield real estate companies, and the chain stores that did were responding to your call. We are as saddened by this false economy as you. That Amherst is no longer the "quaint, liberal community, scenic in the old Yankee New England Tradition" is hardly the desire nor the fault of its residents.

But throughall this the Town has continued to affirm its commitment to the two schools. To call us a "menacing, oppressive village that really does not respect its citizens' rights, at least student rights" is a gross injustice. Try talking to someone who has lived here most of his life instead of your landlord from Boston if you want to find out what Amherst is like. Go smoke dope for an afternoon or evening in the front window of Log's and then tell me about "harassment" and "wholesale oppression." The Town cops have never once set foot in that fine establishment. Compare prices in town with those of your own University Store and tell me that they are "ridiculous."

As for the "hazy facts about residency requirements for voting," get an apartment, live it it for a year, and then go see Mrs. Dittfach in the Clerk's Office of the Town Hall. You may be in Karaganda next semester but this is where you will vote. If you can't wait that long, go to the Town Meetings. Those who do are welcomed and listened to.

I have just returned to Amherst and the University this semester from a two-year trip through 46 states of this country. I was looking for a better place than Amherst but I didn't find it. Despite the contention of Mr. Pascarelli that students are the "principal citizens" here, it is not in their midst that I enjoy the peace and freedom of Amherst.

JOHN GRAHAME '72

Poorer Son

To the Editor:

"A Doctor's Letter to His Son" contains many sentences that more than adequately point out the immense differences in priorities held by comfortable, white, middle-class fathers and their uncomfortable sons. Dr. Williamson admonishes his son, "It seems awfully foolish for you to pay for the bolt that snaps the cartridge home which kills you." (One has only to think a few minutes about that statement to become a revoluntionary.) He also writes, "It seems even more foolish to tear down the bricks you own."

It is interesting that a grown man would place a higher priority on things one "owns" or "pays for," and on an ideal he calls "authority," than on the life of his own son, or on the lives of those "colored boys" who were killed at Jackson. He states, "Mother and I will grieve but we will gladly buy a dinner for the National Guardsman who shot you." His son, perhaps, as the main course? Dr. Williamson is apparently totally incapable of seeing the basic contradiction in his statement, "Of course, you know that your mother and I love you deeply." But....

I wonder what kind of doctor Williamson is, if he is incapable even of understanding the meaning of the Hippocratic Oath, to say nothing of the meaning of love. By making his letter public, he may have done his cherished position great damage. Surely, people other than myself will think twice about placing their lives in the hands of a man who claims that authority and ownership are of greater importance than human lives.

Fortunately for us, there are many doctors whose sense of ethics seems to have developed beyond the comfortable confines of professionalism. I wish the same could be said for Dr. Williamson, his poor wife and their poorer son. And I sincerely hope that Williamson's nice little chicken doesn't come home to roost.

A Good Man

To The Editor:

There is a long review, a very favorable one, of a book called Man in Motion by a Michael Mewshaw, in the 17 November Collegian. It is by David Starmbovsky and occupies two-thirds of page 7.

As chairman of the recruiting committee of the English Department for the past several years, I'm always pleased to see our boys given favorable review, but not a review so objective that it fails to mention even in passing that Mewshaw (after his Fulbright in Paris) joined the Department of English, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, and teaches creative writing and the modern novel. Now, here, today.

Perhaps this brings up a "bigger" problem; perhaps the omission is deliberate. For it is (speaking of expository writing now) so very easy to dump on people and institutions, so fashionable, as your editorial and letters pages illustrate each day of your publication. Perhaps you are so out of tune with anything remotely positive that it is indeed your policy to ignore the possibility for praise. For a pat on the back, even when deserved.

New S.U. Use

To the Editor:

Quietly the squat ugly ol' Student Union has changed this year. A non-profit vegitarian restaurant blesses a corner of that building seldom traveled by students. A crafts-guild is moving into a Snack Bar area no one ever knew about. In the space where the barbershop used to exist (an area most of us avoided with a purple passion), there is Room To Move. A soon to become (hopefully) 24 hr. Drop-in Center for those with difficulties, and anyone in need of good company. Across from the Hatch, where record lifting used to be a favorite activity, there now is a Free Space--housing a "Clearinghouse in Student Initiated Change" ($$), a Grapevine, a Free University (used), a Teacher/Course Evaluation Desk, and whatever else creeps in off the street (like maybe a cloud buster?). Like the point is to remind you of these groups and to suggest that they need your support. This Fall - 0; these can fill your personal and this campus' void. The more people who become involved, the more the Student Union will become the Campus Center.

Rinky-Dink

To the Editor:

I'm surethere are those who are tired of hearing about WMUA vs Dickinson. We have read many points of view, but I think an important point has been overlooked.

To review: WMUA wants to put an antenna on top of Dickinson House; the Seventh Floor says no because they will lose a multi-facility ironing room. There also has been the question of interference, damage to the roof and danger to the residents. WMUA says not probable; Dickinson says too possible. WMUA wants to win; Dickinson wants to defend itself; and Mr. Howland wants to be unbiased. None are doing very well.

This whole affair is typical of the UMass administration's economic policies. We have heard about the Money that will be wasted if WMUA is thwarted. It's not clear that the money won't be wasted anyway, since the need for an increase in power for a rinky-dink station like WMUA is doubted. Most students don't have FM radios in their rooms, let alone in their cars. So what are they going to do, come to Dickinson to pick it up on their fillings and braces?

There's more at stake than an ironing room; it is the right of students to demand a quality life at UMass. Orchard Hill is a residential area for living not transmitting. It's about time students..ALL students said NO to an administration that has consistently shafted students economically by building campus centers that are ugly and useless, instead of building low-income housing or providing a security system.

By the time this reaches press, the Trustees will have met to decide the fate of Dickinson, BUT Dickinson has tried to tell the students something we must be aware of and work for--the right of students to determine the priorities that will effect the quality of life here.

The Joker

To the Editor:

Phone caller(s) periodically inform different buildings that "a bomb is in the building." Even though classes are interrupted, students no longer want to tolerate being thrown into the fear of a bomb.

Perhaps more coverage on the scares would expose the foolishness the caller(s) display; if not by simply reading about it, by seeing fellow students' negative reactions to these tricks.

The most often called buildings seem to be Boyden, Herter Hall, Bartlett Hall and Whitmore.

A secretary at Boyden claims to receive a bomb scare via telephone every Tuesday and Thursday at 1:30 p.m.

I experienced a recent scare at Boyden. Campus police sent a verbal alarm from room-to-room because the noise of the fire alarm aroused more commotion. Individuals could leave the building at their own discretion.

Now that leaving the building depends on the individual's decision, or risk, someday too many people won't want to bother with the "call of wolf" and may face tragedy. One person is too many.

Bostonians will be even more stunned when they suddenly find out that the UMass community had kept this secret for "x" months.

Keeping secrets doesn't seem to be the way to find the prankster, or at least get him to stop. Maybe it's time for a change in tactics.

While passing students who had just evacuated Bartlett one day last week, I heard a student jokingly say to his friend, "You gotta stop making these phone calls." I wonder if he's say that jokingly to the real caller..

Thank You

To The Editor:

I must commend the MDC staff for it consistently bad Theatrical Reviews. As written pieces, I am sure that any Professor of creative writing would be pleased with them. But as a theatrical review; they make no sense. Such things as the quality of the acting, directing, the execution and use of set, lighting, etc. are usually non-existent. And if they are present in the review, you have to wade through paragraphs of the reviewer's "inner dialogue" to get to them. If a play is good, bad, or in between, then say it. But please, whether the play is done by UT, Operetta Guild Black Rep., or two guys in the street who just wanted to put on a play; make them valid reviews and not the random meanderings of the reporter's mind. I guess, what I'm trying to say is: Why don't you get people who have a background in Theatre and know what they are talking about to write the reviews. This would be fairer to your readers and much fairer to the people who spend months rehearsing the different productions.

Fight Smut

Over the course of the past year it has been an obvious policy of the Collegian to support anti-pollution groups and movements. The commitment has been less than total.

Let's consider the newspaper itself. To those of us who derive some enjoyment from reading a newsworthy, entertaining newspaper the Collegian is at best a disappointment, at worst a disaster. With the exception of Mr. Buchwald's column and the daily assortment of comics we find the newspaper not worth the paper it's printed on.

In the interest of fighting pollution we urge that the Collegian make a total commitment to the preservation of our natural resources and a positive contribution to the problem of waste disposal by ceasing production of its daily attempt at literary genius.

HUEY

To the Editor:

On November 27th through the 29th there will be a Revolutionary Peoples Constitutional Convention in Washington, D.C. The conference is sponsored by the Black Panther Party open to all people who want to attend. The Revolutionary Peoples Constitutional Convention is a continuation of the plenary session which was held in Philadelphia, Pa. in early September. Besides the Panthers, third world people, women, G.I.'s, workers, high school and college students, people on welfare and street people came together at the plenary session.

The Black Panthers havecalled for the convention because they feel that, "capitalism became caught up in a relentless drive to obtain profits until the selfish motivation for profit eclipsed the unselfish principles of democracy. Corporations have sought to increase their profits at the expense of the peoples and particularly at the expense of the racial and ethnic minorities. The history of the united states leads us to the conclusion that our sufferance is basic to the functioning of the government of the united states. The government, the social conditions, and the legal documents which brought freedom from oppression, which brought human dignity and human rights to one portion of the people of this nation had entirely opposite consequences for the minorities."

Workshops were held at the plenary session and proposals were made for free day care centers, full employment, rights for students, an end to police brutality, fair trials for all men by a jury of their peers, decent housing to be provided for all people, an end to capitalist exploitation and a United Nations plebiscite to determine the will of black people as to their national destiny.

The Black Panthers have called for Constitutional Convention because they believe that black and oppressed people have lost faith in the leaders of America, in the government of America and in the structure of the American government--that is the Constitution, its legal foundation.

They are calling a convention to make positive alternatives so that a new economic system will be created; Where the rewards and work will be shared by all people; where all people will be free and be adequately represented in decision making and where all people will be given the same privileges as every other man regardless of his condition or status. When addressing the plenary session in Philadelphia, Huey Newton said, "We will settle for nothing less, for at this point in history, anything less is but a living death."

On Monday, November 23rd the Committee to End Repression is sponsoring a free movie titled "HUEY" in the student ballroom. People can register to attend the Revolutionary Peoples Constitutional Convention at the Committee to End Repression office in room 418B of the student union. Please talk to someone from the committee or leave a note if you can drive down. Donations of food are also needed and can be dropped off at the committee office. Tonight there will be a meeting at 7:00 p.m. in room 418B of the student union for people interested in the convention.

COMMITTEE TO END REPRESSION

A New Drug

To the Editor:

Yes, a new drug has been discovered, one possibly more powerful and dangerous than any other. Although it has been in use for centuries, it seems to be growing in popularity with this generation.

This drug, when taken under ideal conditions, produces a euphoric state, in which the user can envision himself as capable of more than he really is. The user has an almost insane tendency to laugh and smile for no obvious reason. Other people look beautiful to him. He can easily lose interest in all his previous pursuits and ambitions and spend his time pushing and using this drug. In many cases, the user will feel that he has found the answer to life.

All this doesn't sound too bad, but this is the result only when the drug is taken under ideal conditions. Very often it is misused, particularly by young people, and dangerous synthetics are easily available. When misused, it can produce severe depression and a host of other complications. It is highly addictive. Most users come to depend on it for life. Withdrawal symptoms are extreme and can be fatal.

This warning will probably do little good for those of you who will "try anything," but I urge the rest of you, who don't take chances with your minds and your lives, to ask that serious legal action be taken against anyone found using or pushing.....love.

Ecologist Lecture Series Features Conservationist

Conservationist and political science professor Robert Rienow returns to UMass tomorrow night to speak on the topic entitled, "The Environmental Battle: Rhetoric and Performance".

His talk, at 8 p.m., in the Student Union Ballroom, is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Rienow's talk is the fifth in the series of Distinguished Ecologists Lectures scheduled at the University under the auspices of the University's Coalition for Environmental Quality and the Class of 1971.

Dr. Rienow is a professor of political science at the Graduate School of Public Affairs at the State University of New York at Albany. He holds M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the Columbia University Graduate School of Public Law.

He is author or co-author of over 15 books, most of them on American government and the American environment. The best known of these is "Moment in the Sun," the 1967 Dial Press Book that reported on the deteriorating quality of the American environment. His most recent book, "Man Against His Environment", is a transcript of his twenty-six TV lectures which were originally filmed for NY Educational TV. Both books were co-authored by his wife, Leona T. Rienow.

DR. ROBERT RIENOW

Dr. Rienow's articles, some of them co-authored by Mrs. Rienow, have appeared in nearly every important U.S. national magazine, including This Week, Rotarien, Saturday Review, Harpers, Coronet, Pageant, The Nation, the New York Times Magazine and others. He is a contributor of articles to Compton's Encyclopedia, World Book Encyclopedia and Book of Knowledge.

Dr. Rienow has been taking the honoraria derived from his lectures in recent years to buy many acres of standing virgin Redwoods in California to save them from the chain-saw and the woodman's axe by turning them over to the California State Park system.

The last Distinguished Ecologists' Lecture will be Thursday, December 10th at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. John P. Milton will be speaking on the Alaskan Environment.

Social Position Of Women To Be Examined At Smith

NORTHAMPTON - Psychologist Naomi Weisstein, whose article "Kinde, Kuche, Kirche as Scientific Law" indicted the field of psychology for its failure to assess women on the basis of scientific evidence, will lecture at Smith College tomorrow night.

Her lecture, at 8:15 p.m. in Wright Hall Auditorium, will be sponsored by the Women's Studies Organization as part of its "Perspectives on Women" series. It is open to the public.

An associate professor of psychology at Loyola University, she will discuss the ways in which psychology has shaped the social position of women, as well as the status of women scientists. She will include a critique of the anthropological theories of Lionel Tiger, scheduled to visit Smith in December.

Dr. Weisstein graduated from Wellesley College and received her Ph.D. in psychology from Harvard University. She did post-doctoral work with the Committee on Mathematical Biology of the University of Chicago, and taught at Chicago before taking her present position at Loyola. Her field of research is visual perception.

In addition to the paper "Kinde, Kuche, Kirche," she has published articles in such professional journals as "Journal of the Optical Society of America," "Psychological Review," "Psychology Bulletin," and "The Journal of Experimental Psychology."

Involved in the women's liberation movement since 1966, Dr. Weisstein plays piano in the Chicago Women's Lib rock band. She is married to historian Jesse Lemisch

Ballroom Rental Fees Passed By CC Board

The Campus Center Governing Board recently passed the following motion regarding rental fees of the Student Union Ballroom:

"Whereas the standard set-up of the Student Union Ballroom is Auditorium seating (Page 2, Student Union Room Reservation Information Manual, effective 1/1/70).

Whereas, previous justification for $50 rental fee was custodial costs of changing set-up of the Student Union Ballroom and whereas, Student groups in an effort to avoid the $50 fee have been scheduling movies at locations where the technical facilities are such that quality performances are difficult to execute.

Be it resolved that any use of the Student Union Ballroom using the standard auditorium set-up shall have a fee of $10, which fee shall be waived if no admission is charged or if progress is a financial failure. However, since the ballroom is the Campus Center's only large dining facility, management is authorized to relocate an auditorium type program to other facilities. The $10.00 fee shall be waived entirely in this case to compensate for any inconvenience. The Campus Center staff shall not schedule auditorium films in the Campus Center Complex on any evening when the Campus Center Program Council films are scheduled."

Militant Forum Continues Revolution Discussion

Tonight's Militant Forum, the weekly socialist educational series, will present a lecture/discussion in the Colonial Lounge on "The Russian Revolution: Part II". This forum will encompass the Russian Civil War, the death of Lenin, and the nature of Stalinism.

Tonight's presentation will be led by David Morgan, anti-war activist.

The forum will entail the role of the peasants in the Russian Revolution, the Bolshevik party, and the issues and actions that formed the results of the revolution, which today continue to mold many contemporary actions of Russia.

For those interested in studying this important historical stage in greater depth, these writings are suggested: Satlinism and Bolshevism by Leon Trotsky, and From Lenin to Stalin by Victor Serge. These, and other related literature will be made available at the Young Socialist Alliance literature table every Monday and Thursday in front of the Hatch.

The forum will begin at 8:00 p.m. tonight, in the Colonial Lounge of the student union. Coffee will be served.

Central Area Council Plans Campus Improvement

The Central Area Council in its last weekly meeting was brought up to date on the Student Senate's work toward resolving the vacation housing plan.

The Council itself is now working on paving the path between the infirmary and Greenough, having the light pole next to Chadborne removed, and remedying the speeding past Greenough and Chadborne.

Any questions or new ideas should be addressed to Frank Coughlan, 208 Butterfield House.

Revolutionary Peoples' Convention Planned Soon

The Black Panther Party has called for a Revolutionary Peoples' Constitutional Convention to be held in Washington D.C. on Nov. 27 through Nov. 29 (Thanksgiving weekend). The convention is open to all people who want to attend.

A Panther spokesman stated that there were over 20,000 people at the plenary session for the convention which was held in Philadelphia early last September. The plenary session was said to have been attended by members of the following groups: Black people, Third World People, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, high school and college students, women, G.I.'s workers, and street people.

The Black Panther Party has issued the following statement as an explanation for the need to have such a convention. "Capitalism became caught up in a relentless drive to obtain profits until the motivation profit eclipsed the unselfish principles of democracy. Corporations have sought to increase their profits at the expense of the racial and ethnic minorities. The history of the U.S. leads us to the conclusion that our sufferance is basic to the functioning of the government of the U.S. The government, the social conditions, and the legal documents which brought freedom from oppression, which brought humandignityand human rights to one portion of the people of this nation had entirely opposite consequences for the minorities."

Workshops at the plenary session led to proposals for a new constitution which will be voted on at the Constitutional Convention.

The proposals included: free day care centers, full employment, an end to police brutality, fair trials for all people by a jury of true peers, legal rights for students, decent housing for all people, and end to capitalist explotation and a U.S. plebiscite to determine the will of Black people as to their national destiny.

Over 50,000 people are expected to attend the Constitutional Convention. Free day care centers, housing and food will be available.

The Black Panther Party has asked for donation of food and money for convention expenses which can be sent to "The Committee to Defend the Panthers" 61 River St., Cambridge Mass.

On campus the Committee to Fight Repression has registration information, and car pools available, by phoning 253-5950.

Benefit Films

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom The Committee to Fight Repression is showing two films as a benefit for the Revolutionary Peoples' Constitutional Convention. "NOW" is a Cuban view of the U.S. Civil Rights movement and "Huey" presents Huey Newton and others speaking about the development of the Black Panther Party.

A spokesman for the committee said it is important to support the constitutional convention because it is "an opportunity for people to come together to decide what we want and how to obtain it, rather than just yelling about what we don't want."

The Committee will provide registration information as well as car pools to the convention. Donations of both money and food are requested.

Salem State Protest

SALEM - Student, faculty and administration representatives at Salem State College announced yesterday that they have agreed that four students occupying the Data Processing Center at the college should vacate the center so meaningful discussions of campus issues can begin.

The sit-in has been underway since Wednesday.

The announcement by the executive board of the Student Asn., the executive board of the Faculty Senate, and members of the Administration Council came after a series of meetings, together and separately.

Gym requirements, the language requirement, class cuts, a campus birth control center and on-campus psychiatric service are among the issues.

Christmas Buying

A meeting for those interested in informing the public of the needless financial and social burdens of excessive Christmas buying will be held tonight in the Council Chambers of the Student Union starting at 7:30 p.m.

Concert Ban Rally Called For Tonight

A rally concerning Campus Center policies and the recent "concert ban" has been called to take place in the Campus Center Auditorium tonight starting at 7:30 p.m.

According to Harold Koltin, coordinator of the rally, "If responses to the letter 'Busts, Concerts, Top of Campus' in last Thursday's paper are any indication of the turn-out for tonight, then I'd say we've really got something going here." Koltin also says that just casual remarks to him by students who read the letter and have had their own hassles at the C.C. indicate that the injustices perpetrated on students go far beyond what the letter implies.

"The success of any movement depends on its support by the people," remarks Koltin. "I think we've got that support to a very great extent. Now all we need is the stimulus that changes words to action."

Tonight's rally is open to anyone who wishes to ask about the particular facet(s) of the C.C. in which he is interested.

Seven College Conference Provides Women's Roster

(SOUTH HADLEY, Mass.)

A decision which may have far-reaching significance in the development of equal opportunities for women in college and university teaching and administration was announced today by Mount Holyoke College President David H. Truman on behalf of the Seven College Conference.

The annual meeting of representatives from Barbard, Bryn Mawr, Mount Holyoke, Radcliffe, Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley was held at Mount Holyoke last weekend.

The Seven College Conference, traditionally concerned with the education of women and committed to the improvement of the status of women in the academic community, has unanimously voted to take steps toward the establishment and maintenance of a national roster of women scholars and administrators in America. The proposed roster would be available to any academic institution in the United States.

In keeping with its long-time leadership in this area, the Conference would seek funds to establish an office to develop and maintain the roster and to publicize its existence.

The status of women in academic life is a critical national problem and it is appropriate that the members of the Seven College Conference, with their special commitment to the educational and professional opportunities available to women, should take the lead in providing solutions.

A committee consisting of two representatives from each of the participating institutions will be appointed by the presidents and will meet early in January to discuss the feasibility of the proposed program and its implementation

Chamber Music Series Opening Concert Tonight

The Festival Winds, an ensemble of nine virtuoso woodwinds, will perform the opening event of the 1970-71 Chamber Music Series tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

This concert, one of five events on this season's Chamber Music Series, is under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council and brings to the attention of area music lovers, one of the most unique ensembles before the public today.

The program for the Festival Winds will include Beethoven's Sextet in E flat major; Petite Symphonie by Charles Gounod; Two Arias for Oboes, Bassoon and French Horns by Handel; Woodwin Quintet by the noted contemporary composer, Elliot Carter and Mozart's Serenade in E flat Major, K. 375.

Reserved tickets for this event are available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall and are priced at $1.00 for undergraduates; $1.50 for graduate students and other students; $2.50 for University faculty/staff and $3.00 for the general public.

Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Box Office one hour before the concert. A telephone reaching both box offices is 545-0202.

SRO Crowd Greets Butterfield Players

by EDWARD FOGARTY
Fine Arts Staff

The Butterfield Kitchen was filled to "standing room only" this week-end as the Butterfield Players presented two one-act plays: Sand by Murry Mednick and Crawling Arnold by Jules Feiffer.

Both plays were presented in the Three quarter 'round, and combined the usage of cinema and theatre. In Sand a television set is of central importance through the play. In Crawling Arnold the opening scene is in total darkness while the audience and the actors look at slides.

The evening began with Sand. Sitting in the Butterfield kitchen; the audience beholds before them the toilet-living room of Mother and Father. Father is plugging away at the toilet while the Mother is playing in the sand box in the living room. From here the play moves through a series of jarbs and jabs between the actors to the end where the Son is hanging by a meat hook from the ceiling – in the Butterfield kitchen.

The play could have been better chosen. The incongruity of seeing a toilet in a living room in a kitchen is somewhat unsettling. Perhaps this is what the director John O'Neill intended. If so, he succeeded.

Technically, the play was well put-on. Maryann Powers as the Mother and Don Quatrale as the Ambassador portrayed their characters well and kept the pace going nicely to the end.

The second play Crawling Arnold, was an example of well-done student theatre. In the opening scene the audience is brought into the livingroom of Mr. and Mrs. Barry Enterprise. They are a seventy-year old couple who have just had a child. They have a second child....Arnold, who crawls...who is 37 years old.

From here the play moves quickly. Fine acting by all, but especially by Janet Roy, as Grace Enterprise, and Joan Aufiero, as Miss Sympathy, carry the play along to a successful end.

Faculty Recital At Bowker

Jon Humphrey, on the UMass music department faculty, will present a recital tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

He will be assisted by Peter Tanner, piano, and Ernst Wallisch, viola.

Mr. Humphrey has performed professionally throughout the United States and Canada with such groups as the Robert Shaw Chorale, the New York Pro Musica, and the Cleveland and Philadelphia Orchestras. He has also recorded for RCA Victor and Columbia.

His program will include works by Henry Purcell, Ludwig van Beethoven, Claude Debussy, Robert Schumann, and Ralph Vaughan Williams.

The program is part of the UMass music department faculty recital series and is open to the public without charge.

Smith College Committee Formed To Study Intergrated Residence

A committee of Smith faculty has been appointed to study the policies and problems of integrated residence at the college. The committee was appointed by the Committee on Student Affairs, composed of faculty, students, and administrators, which had jurisdiction over all noncurricular aspects of student life at Smith.

The 140 black students at Smith live in 18 of the 35 residential houses at the college. Eight of these houses, seven of them in a group of ten known as the Quadrangle, house those black freshman and advanced standing students who entered Smith this year.

All undergraduates at Smith indicate on entrance which house they would like to join, and can change houses each year if they choose.

The centralization of housing for the black students is a result of a request made last year to the college by the Smith Black Students Alliance. The BSA felt that while the presence of a small number of black students in most of the college's houses offered advantages to both black and white students, the black students were isolated from each other, thus making adjustment to the college and college life, particularly by black freshman, more difficult.

The BSA also asked that "a black person be hired to work on the housing placement of black students." Mrs. Carolyn Tucker, with her husband J. Jeffrey Tucker head resident of Cushing House, was named as assistant to the dean of students for black student housing. Dean of Students Helen Russell, those office arranges housing, Mrs. Tucker, and the BSA then worked together to create a housing committee and plan for the black students.

Last May, all black students on campus were given the opportunity to move to a quadrangle house for this year. Although many did move, some decided not to because they found the location of their houses more convenient for them. Two houses have black married couples as head residents.

The appointment of the committee to study integrated residence at Smith is a recognition of two factors new to the college's experience, the largest enrollment of black students in the college's history, and the housing of most of these students primarily in one area of the campus.

It is the committee's task to study the specific and immediate problems which these two new factors have brought to the campus, and to make a report and recommendations to the Committee on Student Affairs which could be acted upon for the second term.

Conscription Discussion Continued On "Focus"

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will continue discussion of military conscription in America with a careful examination of possible alternatives to the present draft lottery system: a volunteer army and universal national service.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's special guest will be Arlen Brunson of the Western Massachusetts Committee to Repeal the Draft, a local chapter of the National Council to Repeal the Draft in Washington, D.C.

Mosakowski and Brunson attended the "People's Hearing on the Draft" held at Boston University on Veteran's Day. Tonight's program will begin with a tape-recording of one of the statements presented at the "People's Hearing"-- a speech on "The Concept of National Service" by Arthur Condliffe, legislative assistant to Representative Jonathan Bingham (D--N.Y.). Live commentary will follow the recorded speech.

Interested listeners are invited to call in their questions during tonight's program at 545-2425 or 545-2876.

Christian Scientists Discuss Thanksgiving

The Christian Science Organization welcomes the university community to a special meeting on the subject of Thanksgiving tomorrow night at 6:45 p.m. in Room 911 of the Campus Center.

The service will be identical to those being held in all Christian Science churches on Thanksgiving Day.

Readings from the Bible and from the Christian Science textbook, Science and Health, by Mary Baker Eddy, will be used in the discussion on "God's unlimited provision for Man."

After the readings, the meeting will be open for the giving of testimonies of healing, remarks, and ideas concerning Thanksgiving. Also, the spiritual basis of both receiving what is good and subsequent gratitude will be examined.

Cotton Bowl-No. 2 Notre Dame, 9-0, vs. the Southwest Conference champion, either No. 1 Texas, 8-0, or No. 6 Arkansas, 9-1.

Sugar Bowl-No. 8 Tennessee, 8-1, vs. No. 10 Air Force, 9-2.

Orange Bowl-No. 3 Nebraska, 10-0-1, vs. an opponent to be named.

Gator Bowl-No. 12 Mississippi, 7-1, vs. No. 13 Auburn, 7-2.

Sun Bowl-No. 17 Georgia Tech, 7-3, 7-3, vs. No. 19 Texas Tech, 8-3.

Astro Bluebonnet Bowl-Alabama, 6-4, vs. Oklahoma, 6-4.

The Peach and Liberty bowls still have not named either of their teams.

Penn State, ranked 20th, turned down a Peach bid Saturday after beating Pittsburgh 35-15 to complete a 7-3 season. Coach Joe Paterno instead challenged 16th ranked Dartmouth, the unbeaten Ivy League champion, to a post season game. The Indians whipped Penn 28-0 Saturday for a 9-0 finish.

William & Mary also earned a bowl berth, despite a losing record, by shading Richmond 34-33 to capture the Southern Conference championship. W&M will take on unbeaten, 15th ranked Toledo in the Tangerine Bowl.

NEW YORK (AP)—Quarterback Al Woodall engineered a 71-yard drive in the third quarter for the tie-breaking touchdown and the New York Jets went on to defeat the Boston Patriots 17-3 Sunday in a National Football League game.

George Nock's two yard touchdown smash with 1:47 left in the quarter snapped a 3-3 tie cread dy offsetting field goals by the Jets' Jim Turner and the Patriots' Gino Cappellotti.

Sharing honors with Woodall and Nock was a strong Jets' defense that completely throttled the Boston offense led by quarterback Joe Kapp. Kapp compled only four of 17 passes for 70 yards before he was replaced in the fourth quarter by Mike Taliaferro. The Patriots managed to gain only 80 yards the entire day.

In reflecting back upon this game, upon the whole season, upon the people who made up the UMass team, one is very disappointed that the final record has to be a losing one, but he is nevertheless proud to have been associated with this tam whether it be as one of many ticketbuyers, or a ballboy or a towelboy or one who covers its games for the school newspaper.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Persons born under Cancer have a strong sense of self-preservation. These people know when to come in out of the rain. They can make mistakes, but they seldom compound their errors. These are the persons who usually know — in advance — which way the wind is blowing. Once a Cancer individual gains an advantage, he is likely to make a complete climb up the ladder to success. Among famous Cancer-born natives are Art Linkletter, Jane Russell and Jack Dempsey.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on marriage, partnerships, relations with public. Take it easy. Play waiting game. Don't be rushed, forced, pushed or inveigled. Time is on your side. Act accordingly.

TAURUS — (April 20 - May 20): Connections with military, special service or responsibility — these are highlighted. Not wise to shirk basic duty. Relations with associates become more important.

GEMINI (May 1 - June 20): Good lunar aspect highlights romantic interlude. You make decision about whether to continue relationship. Key is to take long-range view. Think creatively.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Your attachments to places and persons can be seen in clear light. Discard what is superficial. Hang on to what is meaningful. Clear away emotional debris. Stress new start.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Feeling of new-found freedom persists. You express yourself in more positive manner. Travel, variety, additional spice to life —these are on agenda.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Accent on how to gain what you need. Genuine bargain is available. But you have to be versatile — do some comparison shopping. Social contact will prove significant.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Stress fresh approach. Be independent. Adhere to your own style. Cycle is high-set pace. Be willing to tear down in order to rebuild. You can be at right place at right time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Be discreet. Someone may be trying to extract information which is confidential. Key is to be alert. Don't reveal more than is necessary. Message will become clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Steer clear of senseless dispute with friends. You may be caught in middle. Your task should be to harmonize, not to provoke. Act accordingly. Make concession to family member.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Your potential is put to test. Means you get chance to display abilities. Accent on ambition, civic duties. Stress willingness to fulfill obligations.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20. - Feb. 18): Open communication lines. Write, publish, gain added knowledge through written material. Study prospects. Know where you want to go — and why. Form definite policy for future.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Matters associated with money belonging to another are emphasized. You may have to tread lightly. Some are apt to be supersensitive. State case clearly but diplomatically.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are restless, anxious to obtain answers. Some say you are impatient. It is true. You are impatient with lethargy and indifference. You recently made a move which changed environment. Now, you go through a period which tests emotional stability. Don't give up something for nothing.

Listen for the sounds of love...

Where do you hear them?

In a plea for help from someone who needs it? In a dialogue between students and the Establishment? In a talk session for a marriage-on-the-rocks? At a Catholic Mass conducted in an Episcopal Church?

You'd be surprised.

The sounds of love are everywhere — anyone can hear them. If they listen.

The Paulists listen. But, like everything in life, the things that matter most are the hardest.

It isn't easy being a Paulist. But then, the best things in life never are.

Fatal UMass Miscues Leads To BC Win, 21-10

by BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Capitalizing on two costly UMass mistakes, the highly-touted Boston College football team won a hard fought, 21-10, victory over an inspired Redman club at Alumni field on Saturday before the largest home crowd of the season of 17,200. The Eagles, with one game remaining, boasted 7-2 mark while the Redmen ended their 1970 season just under the .500 mark at 4-5-1.

What seems to be a recurrent pattern in UMass-BC encounters developed in this one, too. The teams battled evenly for most of the contest with the outcome finally being occured on a dropped punt and a breakdown in blocking on a UMass punt. Both resulted in Boston College touchdowns.

The UMass defense ended the season just as it had begun it. Facing its toughest opposition of the season, the Redmen determinedly held the high-flying Eagles to a total offense of only 271 yards, only 66 yards more than UMass accumulated. Although classy quarterback Frank Harris enjoyed a fine afternoon in the air striking for 157 yards and three touchdowns, the Redman defense was typically relentless against the rush.

Coming into the contest, the Eagles boasted of one of the finest running backs in the country, namely Fred Willis. Although admittedly Willis was suffering from a badly bruised right thigh, the senior halfback was limited to a season low of only 47 yards in 17 carries. Despite this low total, Willis became the second leading ground gainer in Eagle history passing Mike Holovak, a press box observer.

Getting back to the contest itself, it appeared early that the game would develop into a defensive battle. Neither side could put any points on the board in the first quarter although the Eagles narrowly missed.

On UMass' second series of downs in the game, linebacker Al Dhembe picked off a Ken Hughes aerial for the Eagles and returned it back to the UMass 32. It was to be the first of many holes that the Redman defense would find itself in on this cold and windy afternoon.

Relying entirely on running plays, Harris brought his team down to the UMass 20 from where it faced a third and twelve situation. Harris hit a key pass to split end John Bonistalli but the big receiver was gang tackled at the nine, one precious yard short of the first down. Instead of going for the field goal, the Eagle brain trust decided to go for sit.

With both lines stacked up, Willis tried to make the short yard up the middle. But John Farrelly and the interior of the UMass line were there to meet him and the Eagle star was well short, UMass had won the first battle of the contest.

The offense, however, finding itself deep in its own territory was unable to move and John O'Neil boomed a 42-yarder into Eagle territory.

It seemed as if the Eagles had discovered that they could not run inside against the Redmen and Harris turned to Willis sweeps and passes to move his team. This combination proved successful as the tri-captain brought the Eagles deep into UMass territory.

The key play was a 27-yard pass down the left sideline to George Gill who carried it down to the UMass 6. Two plays later, Harris screened to Willis on the left side and he went in easily behind some good blocking for the initial score of the contest. Larry Berridge kicked the point after to put the Eagles on top at 0:50 of the second period, 7-0.

About this time, the UMass offense began to get untracked as the offensive line opened up some holes for Pat Scavone, Art Corsaletti and Dick Cummings. In ten plays, Hughes marched UMass from the BC 45 down to the five, using only one pass play. Scavone was doing the brunt of the work mainly on the familiar sweep.

On third and goal at the five, Hughes went back to pass. He tossed a short pass on the right side and Scavone turned around at the last second to nab it at the two. With an impressive display of determination, the shifty senior dragged two Eagles for the final two yards and just managed to slip into the far corner of the end zone for the touchdown. With Denis Gagnon's conversion, UMass had tied the surprised Eagles, 7-7, and there was still a great deal of football to be played.

At this point, it seemed that UMass would have been happy to take a 7-7 tie into the locker room at halftime. And it looked as if they would until the first of UMass' fatal mistakes occured in the closing minutes of the half.

With the Redmen at their own 42, O'Neil was set to punt on a fourth and nine situation. But the Eagles

WILLIS SEES RED—That's about all BC back Fred Willis (33) can see as he is stopped cold on key fourth and one play deep in UMass territory. In on the play for UMass are John Farrely (54), Jim Rendle (31), Bill DeFlavio (76) and Dick Cronin (64). (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre) blew through the middle of the Redman line and O'Neil's only alternative was to try to sweep around this rush in an attempt to make the first down. Unfortunately for UMass, he didn't make it and the Eagles took over 42 yards away from paydirt.

After Harris had completed two passes to Gill and one to tight end Jim O'Shea, the Eagles had a third and five on the eight. With a great defensive effort, Harris was barrelled under on an attempted keeper by Farrelly, Dennis Keating and O'Neil and apparently the Eagles would have to settle for the field goal. Or so everyone thought.

Harris, however, the holder, took the snap and set up to look for a receiver. He faked a pass over the middle and then dunked a screen on the left side to Willis. With a perfect wall of four blockers in front of him, Willis waltzed 13 yards for the score and suddenly the stunned Redmen found themselves a touchdown behind once more. Berridge made it 14-7 at 14:19 of the quarter.

UMass drew first blood in the second half, thanks mainly to a diving interception by Bill Bush. On the play, Bill DeFlavio put a strong rush on Harris and he threw before he was actually ready. UMass took over only 35 yards away from the tieing score. The Redmen drive, paced by an inside reverse for nine yards by Mark Russell on a third and five play, made it down to the BC nine before stalling. Gagnon came off the bench and, with a strong cross wind of about 20 m.p.h., wrapped one around the goal post from 26 yards away to put the Redmen only four points behind, 14-10, with 7:46 gone in the third quarter.

But then came the play that broke the Redmen's heart. With BC forced to punt from its own 45, it appeared that UMass would have a shot at going in front. But the punt was fumbled at the 17 by Steve Schubert and the loose ball was pounced upon by Bonistalli for the Eagles.

One play later, Harris hit Gill on a crossover for 17 yards and the final score of the day. Berridge's boot raised the count to 21-10 and although there was still over a quarter to play, everything seemed to change.

The Redmen still had their opportunities but the Eagle defense proved to be tough in its own right.

On the ensuing kickoff, Hughes found a hole in the left side of the Eagle defense and expoited it by sending senior fullback Dick Heavey through it three straight times for 45 yards. UMass drove deep into Eagle territory and, in fact, had a first down at the ten. But on a fourth and three, an attempted Hughes delayed keeper was stopped after a two yard gain and another opportunity went by the boards.

Midway through the final stanza UMass saw another opportunity go up in smoke. With a fourth and one inch at the BC 36, Hughes again tried a quarterback sweep. Unfortunately he fumbled the ball and although he recovered, he was shy of the first down.

So ended the game. UMass could not make the big play when it was needed and the Eagles took advantage of some Redmen mistakes. However, BC was extended to the fullest by this dedicated UMass footall team and the Redmen deserve a lot of credit. But as UMass head coach Vis Fusia said after the game.

"There is no such thing as a moral victory. The game is to win. Even though there is a great effort like today, there is no moral victory."

REDMAN RANTINGS-The statistics broke down like this: UMass had 11 first downs, BC 14, UMass has 180 yards rushing and 25 passing, BC had 114 yards rushing and 157 passing...Harris was 15 of 23 while Hughes had five of ten for 25 yards and one touchdown. Both Q's had one interception...Scavone, along with being the leading UMass ground gainer, was the only receiver, catching all five Hughes passes...For BC, Gill had five catches for 74 yards and a TD while Willis had three receptions for 22 yards and 2 TD's....In ground gaining, Cummings had 11 carries for 27 yards, Scavone 13 carries for 71 yards, Heavey six carries for 55 yards, Corsaletti had nine carries for 29 yards....Willis ended up with 47 yards while fullback Gene Comella had 56...It was the last game for 14 UMass senior. They are Tom Holmes, Hughes, Scavone, Russell, Heavey, Corsaletti, Bill Byron, Don Dotson, Farrelly, Dick Dyer, Bob Pena, Bill Sroka, Russ Wood and Jim Kelliher...In other conference action, UConn tied Holy Cross, 20-20...This was only the second losing season in Fusia's time at UMass. The last was in 1968.

Redmen Remembered As Winning Team With Losing Record

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

The most unlikely team this side of the Berkshires has just completed its football season as a loser. It's the team that represents UMass. Its final record reads four wins, five losses, one tie. It has just lost to powerful Boston College, 21-10.

These UMass Redmen played their hearts out against BC, only to lose and suffer the awful consequence of a losing season. This team will be remembered as a winning team that was dealth a losing record.

Right after the BC defeat Saturday, the head man of this team, Vic Fusia, was asked if he felt like the coach of a 4-5-1 football team. He started out his answer by saying, "This is one of my favorite teams."

He elaborated, "Our team, inspite of defeat, stuck together and gave their finest effort in their last game with the odds stacked entirely against it."

Then he gave the answer, "No, I don't feel like the coach of a 4-5-1 team."

And well he shouldn't, especially after the effort it gave against the BC Eagles. BC came into Alumni Stadium touted as one of the best yard outfits in the East with the potential of getting itself invited to a post season bowl game. The Eagles were expected by a lot of outside observers to simply crust the Redmen.

Well, aside from not crushing the home team, the visitors were fortunate to leave for home with the win, their seventh against two losses. They outgained UMass, but not by very much. They managed three more first downs then the Redmen, no big deal.

The Eagles found themselves very much in a ballgame, right up until time ran out in the fourth and final period. But, as was the case so many times this fall, the Redmen were not hurt as much by their opponents as they were by themselves and their untimely mistakes.

This UMass team commits errors at the worst possible moments. Here are some examples. In the third quarter, the homemen had crept closer to the leading Eagles, 14-10, on a fieldgoal. Things looked very good.

CONGRATULATIONS—UMass linemen Clarence Brooks (69) and Ron Marino (56) rejoice with halfback Pat Scavone (20) after the senior runner had scored UMass' only touchdown in Saturday's game against BC. Scavone was the leading ground gainer and receiver for UMass in the contest. (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre)

The Redman defense, which deserves heartiest congradulations.....again, pushed BC backwards and forced it to punt the ball on fourth and 23 from its own 45. Get a pretty decent return and the offense should be in pretty good 'shape, right? Not UMass! In dispiriting fashion, a Redman punt-returner bobbled the fourth down kick to present the Eagles with a first and ten, only 17 yards shy of paydirt. Next play: BC TD. All of a sudden the lead is 21- 10.

Another mistake, in the middle of the fourth quarter, sealed UMass' fate. This season has been labled a mumble- jumble one for the Redmen. That can be changed to a fumble-jumble season as UMass was faced with a very crucial fourth and inches situation here, made the inches by inches, only to loss its grasp on the pigskin. BC ball and it tucked away another win over the team from Amherst.

Fusia was the first to admit that his team had been beaten by its own mistakes, and he dreaded that the miscues had arrived on a bad schedule for the Redman victory cause.

But the coach was not down on his team. Who could be after it had given such an excellent account of itself, not only on this day, but all throughout the ten-game campaign?

He pointed out that there are two teams, among the ten he has coached here at UMass, that stand out as his favorites. One is the squad he led in 1966; the other is the present group. Fusia praised the 1970 Redmen, "This team had everything stacked against it and just slugged it out...You can't help but fall in love with them."

Extra effort is a very applicable label to attach to the type of play UMass showed on Saturday, and one person in particular was the epitome of extra effort out there. His name is Pat Scavone.

The head coach called the performance of Scavone, "just outstanding". And, to further emphasize the character that the whole squad showed on this afternoon, Fusia related an incident that involved Scavone just before the start of the se cond half of what was to be Scavone's last game.

As the team was returning to the playing field from its lockerroom, Fusia walked up to Scavone and put his arm around him, an excellent display of coachmenship when one considers the circumstance. Scavone had something to say to his coach, "I'm going out there and give the best 30 minutes of my life." His performance spoke well for his

Arts And Crafts Center Almost Complete

By ANN GURNETT
Staff Reporter

Around this time of year Southwest becomes a wind tunnel. The open plaza, surrounded by the towers and the low-rise dorms, is full of pockets where the wind collects and alleys that it rushes down blowing the remains of autumn along ahead of it Left over from last year's "biology class project," is a small log cabin, nestled on the concrete plaza in front of McKimmie House. Students worked long and hard on the project; planing bark and carving the long straight pine trunks.

The spring semester ended abruptly in the beginning of May and the half-built structure lay dormant until the Southwest assembly made two grants amounting to $400.00 for the completion of what will become the retail outlet of an Arts and Crafts program slated to begin next semester for interested residents of Southwest.

The shop will be operated by student volunteers and will be run on a consignment basis. Anyone who wishes to sell articles simply walks into the cabin, makes himself at home, and tries to interest passers-by in his wares. All profits fo to the individual who made or sold the item.

John Whalen, Roger Lynch and Conrad Holuk are the people who have done the most work on the building. Whalen said, "We've been working on the cabin since October 1st. It will be finished within a couple of weeks, hopefully before the first snow."

Vacation Security For Central Area Clarified

By KAREN DeGRACE
Staff Reporter

Responding to an article in yesterday's Collegian which told of plans to "chain" shut the dorms in the Central Area during the Thanksgiving holiday, Assoc. Dean of Students Dan Fitzpatrick said that the emphasis of the article was somewhat "exaggerated".

Fitzpatrick emphasized that the chains are being used for reasons which include the fact that some of the dorms have issued keys to the residents. Not all of the dorms will be chained, claimed Fitzpatrick.

Mike West, also an Assoc. Dean of Students, yesterday informed the Collegian that because "6 master keys for six buildings" this week were missing in the Central Area, chains would be placed on all the dorms in Central Area and provision made to allow janitors and heads of residence easy access to the dorms.

As usual, other dorms will be locked during the vacation and no other special security measures will be taken.

According to West, the extra security measures in the Central Area were requested by the Central Area Council.

The Campus Center will be used to house those students who choose to remain on campus during the Thanksgiving holidays; no dorm will be set aside for such use. At the present time, only six students have signed up for accomodations.

However, this is not to be considered a first step in a new policy; the Campus Center, at least as present views indicate, will not be available during all vacation periods, commented Fitzpatrick. The reason for this is primarily economic, he added.

The Campus Center is used for conference purposes; were student allowed to occupy $9 rooms at a daily rate of only $2.50, money would be lost. Then, in order to make up the loss, student fees would have to be raised. Such a move, Fitzpatrick indicated, would not be at all popular.

Indicating an understanding of student concern over strangers being housed in their rooms during vacations, Fitzpatrick said that there would be more steps taken to study ways to alleviating such student inconvenience.

New Method Discovered For Treatment Of Phosphates

WASHINGTON (AP) - A research development of a new method of removing phosphates - a major polluter of streams and lakes - from municipal sewage.

The company, Biospherics, Inc., of Rockville, Md., said that in laboratory tests its method removed at least 95 percent of the phosphate from municipal waste water, compared to almost no removal by conventional waste treatment plants.

Gilbert V. Levin, company president, told a news conference the method could be adopted by existing treatment plants at relatively low cost.

Phosphates, chemical compounds of the element phosphorous, are essential to living things including tiny water plants called algae which provide much of the dissolved oxygen needed by other forms of aquatic life.

But human activity dumps excess phosphates into streams and lakes, largely in detergents, sewage, and fertilizers.

The excess phosphates encourage the algae to grow so thick they become a serious form of pollution themselves, choking out other forms of life.

Phosphates can be removed from municipal waste water by chemical treatment, but the process requires costly construction and operation.

Levin said his method makes use of biological treatment which is already a common feature of municipal treatment plants.

By stepping up aeration sewage bacteria can be forced to consume phosphate at high rates.

Then, by cutting off their air supply they are forced to release the phosphate in a concentrated form requiring less chemical treatment.

The process has been used in a laboratory sized pilot plant to process 500 gallons a day of waste water tapped from the Baltimore sewage system, but it has yet to be demonstrated in a full scale plant handling millions of gallons.

Levin estimated his process would cost less than half as much as all chemical treatment, the principal method now under consideration.

The development of an effective, economical phosphate removal process would go a long way toward curing the phosphate pollution problem. But it would leave unsolved the large problem of phosphates washed from farmland into streams.

Solving that problem, Levin said, would probably take improved agricultural practices. The detergent industry, under federal prodding, has been cutting down the phosphate content of its products and is seeking chemical substitutes.

But substitutes might raise other, unknown pollution problems and officials admit prospects so far are not bright.

Ticket Holders Get Say On D.C. Questionnaire

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Meal ticket holders will be given the chance next week to voice their opinions on the quality of the food services, in a constructive way. 10,000 questionnaires will be handed out Thursday in the dining commons to be filled out at that time. According to Robert Chiller, Student Senator in charge of the questionnaire, this is a chance for students to tell what they want for changes in the commons in a way that they will be listened to.

On the questionnaire, students will be able Io indicate such things as how many meals per week they want to be charged for; interest in being served an "a la carte" breakfast; and if they desire meat (bacon, sausage, ham) with breakfast.

They will also be allowed to rate the meals now being served, as to the quality of the food itself and its preparation. One item will deal with the number of times a week people would like to have various main dishes served. There will also be provision for comments on the eating environment itself in each commons.

This questionnaire was formulated by a Food Services Committee which is a branch of the Student Senate Services Committee and which is made up of about 30 students working closelywith the managers of each of the dining commons and their assistants. Committee Chairman Chiller says that Food Services Director Joel Stoneham and Assistam Director Arthur Warren back the efforts of the committee and are very willing to listen to the students as they respond to the questionnaire. They are very receptive to instituting changes requested by the students.

The Food Services Committee already came close to making a major change for next semester. They almost instituted a ten meal per week ticket but dropped the plan for next semester because an increase in rates would be necessary. Where students are now paying $265 a semester for 15 meals a week, the new plan would have made available 10 meals a week for $240, but the cost of a 15 meal ticket would have risen to $290 for the semester.

The $25 increase would be necessary because the current rate includes a 20% refund from the start. There is a 20% absenteeism at meals in a week now which keeps the cost of a 15 meal ticket 20% lower than it would be otherwise. A 10 meal ticket would cut out the 20% absenteeism so the 15 meal rate would have to be increased.

One change which may well go into effect next semester, according to Chiller, is the serving of meat at breakfast. Students would be able to purchase 20¢ tickets to hand in for servings of meat at breakfast. The special coupons could be used on any day and by anybody, under the proposed plan.

Two other possibilities now being considered by the committee are the serving of a brunch between breakfast and lunch and the closing of one of the commons in Southwest. It would be possible to close a commons because the plan calls for making the meal ticket no longer mandatory in Southwest for students 21 or older or married. The vacated commons would then be used as a classroom building.

While these and other plans are still only remote possibilities, the Food Services Committee is working right now on smaller innovations which they hope will make the commons more pleasant. They will take much of their direction from the results of the next week's questionnaire, which will be available almost immediately.

Anyone interested in working to improve the quality of the Food Services should join the committee in charge of the questionnaire, according to its chairman. Chiller emphasizes that change is very possible, especially if students respond to the questionnaire and if more students join the committee to help follow it up. Anyone interested in joining the committee should leave a note in Chiller's Student Senate mailbox or contact his own dorm president. Representatives are wanted from each dorm.

Mobe Rally To Protest Aborted Invasion

By STANLEY OLSON
Staff Reporter

The Student Mobilization Committee announced plans for a demonstration today at 1 p.m. on the South Terrace of the Student Union in reaction to the recent step-up of U.S. military actions in North Vietnam.

To inform students about the demonstrations, the group intends to have leaflets distributed and post signs in the SU lobby this morning.

The decision to protest Friday's helicopter-lifted foray into an area about 20 miles west of Hanoi, as well as the increased bombing of the North, was made at a Mobe meeting in the Student Union last night. The planned demonstration is in accord with National Mobe's anticipations of much larger rallys in New York City and Washington, D.C.

Student Mobe spokesman Sid Finehurshsaid that the committee's position was not opposed to American prisoners of war. "We don't want to see them rotting in jail either," he added. "The issue is that American troops have invaded North Vietnam."

Several points were made concerning the events in North Vietnam.

-That this is the first time any American troops have gone into North Vietnam, that the action was close to the country's capital city and that large numbers of men were probably used to search for the major POW camp.

-That the invasion came soon after the November elections here.

-That resuming intensive bombing on the pretext of protecting U.S. reconnaisance flights is absurd.

Emphasizing that Friday's raid is evidence of Nixon trying for a military victory in Vietnam rather than a planned withdrawal, Finehurshsaid, "This is a sign of what's in store for the future."

Tippo No Stranger To Campus Media

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

When Chancellor Oswald Tippo gives a speech at a Freshman convocation of the like, he generally will somehow get around to talking about when he "was here as a freshman...they called it Mass Aggie back then."

The campus was smaller back then, but the Chancellor seems to recall that they had dormitory crowding and other problems, too. When he entered Mass. Aggie, he lived in a building which stood near the present location of South College

Looking through some very old editions of "The Massachusetts Collegian", then a four page weekly, one gets a sense of the way things were. Take, for example, the front page of the first paper during the Fall semester, September 26, 1928.

The front page headlines blares out "Over Two Hundred Enrolled in Largest Freshman Class in History of M.A.C. (Massachusetts Agricultural College), two hundred and nineteen students invade campus and swell total enrollment."

At "Freshman Reception", the class, 36 students larger than the previous year, heard "Miss Skinner... give an interesting talk on the advantage of the college" and the the "Reverend Hawley...asking freshmen to give the churches a chance to prove their worth." The reception had been held in a "crowded" Memorial Hall.

Then President Roscoe W. Thatcher told the freshman class that the "seemingly senseless treatment" they were receiving was "necessary for an Aggie Man...although you may not see the value of it now", (refering to the rigorous schedule required of freshmen "you will realize the advantages in the future."

Among the "Aggie Men" of '28 were names like;

Dawson A. Bray, Holyoke
Webster Clark, W. Deerfield
Harry Smart, Waltham and Oswald Tippo, Jamaica Plain, our own "Aggie" man.

Nixon Approved 'Daring Raid'

WASHINGTON (AP) - A small task force of Army and Air Force volunteers staged a commando style raid deep into North Vietnam last Friday in a fruitless effort to free American prisoners, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced Monday.

Laird told a news conference the rescue team found no prisoners when they landed in helicopters inside a prisoner of war camp at Son Tay about 23 miles west of Hanoi in past midnight darkness. The camp recently had been vacated, he said.

The daring raid, first ever inside North Vietnam, was approved by President Nixon several hours before it was mounted. Many earlier efforts to rescue individual pilots downed in North Vietnam have been made but this was the first camp raid.

Laird said he recommended the operation because of "new information we received this month that some of our men were dying in prisoner of war camps."

At the White House, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler issued what amounted to a warning to North Vietnam against taking reprisals against American prisoners because of the unsuccessful rescue effort.

"I think," he told a questioner, "it is apparent that the prisoners would not have had anything to do with the rescue operation and it is inconceivable that there would be any reprisals taken against the prisoners of war. But if there were reprisals, the United States would hold the leaders of North Vietnam personally responsible."

But he said he was unprepared to take a question as to what this country would do in the event of reprisals.

Ziegler said the answer was "no" on whether this country intends to conduct activities in North Vietnam with U.S. ground personnel.

The press secretary said he was not prepared to say when Nixon approved the mission, and that he did not know whether the President had taken any members of Congress into his confidence beforehand.

The commando raid took place around 2 a.m., North Vietnam time, about the time some 250 U.S. warplanes were hitting at antiaircraft missile and gun positions in the panhandle further to the south.

Laird said those "protective reaction" air strikes were not intended as a cover for the attempted prisoner rescue operation. However, they may have served to somewhat confuse the North Vietnamese as to what was happening.

Laird said the U.S. Navy undertook a small diversionary air mission, dropping flares over the North Vietnamese coast above the 19th parallel to help carry off the rescue attempt.

The defense secretary made his startling disclosure about four hours after a Pentagon spokesman steadfastly refused to say whether U.S. warplanes operated above the 19th parallel during the "protective reaction" strikes which were billed as retaliation for North Vietnamese downing of a U.S. reconnaissance plane more than a week ago.

The spokesman's refusal to say anything about operations above the 19th parallel left the United States at a distinct propaganda disadvantage in light of North Vietnamese claims last Saturday that U.S. war planes had hit a prisoner of war camp, wounding a number of American captives, and struck in the vicinity of Haiphong and Hanoi.

Laird previously denied that any American prisoners had been harmed in the bombing strikes and the Pentagon had spoken only of retaliation against the North Vietnamese air defenses and "related facilities."

Local Bust Nabs Two Students

Three persons were arrested yesterday in Amherst on narcotics charges in a joint State and Amherst Police operation.

Two of those arrested, Robert J. Berg and Jeffrey J. Oppenheimer, both 20, were UMass students living at the Amherst Motel. The third, Steven J. Gould, of Sunderland, was arrested separately.

Berg and Oppenheimer were picked up at 7:35 p.m. Gould was caught at 8:05 p.m.

Berg was charged on 5 counts; sale of marijuana, possession with intent to sell, possession of narcotics, conspiracy and being in the presence of narcotics. Oppenheimer is being held on 3 counts; sale of marijuana, possession of marijuana and possession of narcotics. Gould was arrested on 2 counts; possession of marijuana and being in the presence of narcotics.

Four State troopers and one Amherst policeman took part in the arrests.

The arresting troopers were Trooper Deleva, Trooper Garvin, Trooper Cauley, and Trooper Patnod. The assisting Amherst officer was Sgt. Clarence Babb.

The State Police would not give out the exact location of the arrests in Amherst.

Judging by the limited attendance of the rally for student rights last night at the Top of the Campus, students aren't too concerned about "anti-student" policies practiced by Center officials. (MDC photo by Barry Penn)

Campus Center Rally Virtually Unattended

By LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

"I only wish that the people who had legitimate complaints about the Campus Center had been here tonight to express their views." Such were the feelings of Harold Koltin following the disappointing turnout which greeted him at last night's rally held to discuss anti-student policies at the Top of The Campus.

Discussion centered around student employment and the hiring of student entertainment for students. It was stated that despite the widespread contention that students were not being employed at the Top of The Campus that students make up 78 per cent of the employees there.

In response to contentions that Michael Eagen, Manager of the Top of the Campus was not allowing students to audition for recommend or perform at the restaurant it was noted that although Eagan does have final say on who appears as entertainment, it is not his decision alone. It was noted that each perspective group must audition before a committee made up of Eagen, Jim Schwartz and three students appointed by the President of the Student Senate. This group which accepts auditions from all groups, students and non-students, attempts to determine the groups which have the type of talent which is most acceptable to the prospective audiences. Eagan then makes the final decision based upon their recommendations.

In response to further inquiries concerning the type and caliber of music performed, Peter Fink, and band leader who currently holds an open contract, stated that efforts are made to insure that there is a student playing actively in the band every weekend. He also added that there is a constant attempt to find new student talent which will be experienced enough to perform adequately in the surroundings.

He went on to explain that the design of the room and the variable composition of the audience which attends the restaurant demand a performer who is able to adapt to changes in audience composition and who will still be able to create the proper atmosphere. He went on to add that many of their auditioners possess great talent but are unexperienced in playing to the type of audience which is generated. "There are very few who have the ability to perform under those conditions without experience." He went on to add that is any such group did audition it would probably be favorably received.

It was also stated that specialty groups are presently performing or will soon be hired to provide specialized entertainment during Happy Hours and other times during the week. Koltin's reply to this and many of the other points concerning entertainment and employment at the Top of The Campus was that there "should be more student input rather than special non-student and outside groups".

In The Nation And The World

Helicopter Raid Stirs Anger World-Wide

SAIGON (AP) - The United States kept up spy flights over North Vietnam Monday in the face of mounting protests and a move by the Communists to boycott the Paris peace talks because of the heavy weekend bombing raids over the North.

The reconnaissance flights went out to get photographs of the damage inflicted in the bombing strikes even as the controversy over the raids increased.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird revealed that U.S. Army and Air Force volunteers made a daring but futile helicopter raid near Hanoi to rescue American prisoners of war. He said the camp was found abandoned and the raiders departed safely. That was the "only operation that took place north of the 19th parallel" in North Vietnam over the weekend Laird said, while some 250 U.S. fighter bombers were pummelling the North Vietnamese panhandle.

And in Paris, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegations to the peace talks announced they would boycott the next session scheduled for Wednesday although they said they would return to the conference table Dec. 3.

While the controversy raged, there was fresh fighting in Cambodia and Laos.

Reports from Laos said the North Vietnamese and Pathet Lao forces had captured four Laotian government positions in the opening thrust of the enemy's dry season offensive.

An estimated force of three North Vietnamese battalions overran two major positions on the southeastern edge of the Bolevens Plateau in southern Laos and forced government troops to give up a third position nearby. A fourth government position, 155 miles north of Vientiane, also was overrun by a mixed North Vietnamese Pathet Lao force.

In Cambodia, the Phnom Penh government claimed its troops had cut up a Communist force 57 miles north of the capital. It was the only triumph claimed to offset a series of setbacks to government forces in the last three days.

While reconnaissance flights continued over North Vietnam, scores of American warplanes roamed over Laos and Cambodia, supporting embattled government troops in both countries and bombing North Vietnamese supply routes running southward.

The American strike force was beefed up by 85 of the fastest and most advanced combat planes from the newly arrived aircraft carrier Ranger, the second largest warship in the Pacific Fleet.

In South Vietnam, ground fighting was at a low level, with only small actions reported.

The U.S. Command reported American troop strength in South Vietnam dropped by 3,800 men last week to 360,000, the lowest total in four years. It is scheduled to be reduced further, to 344,000 men, by the end of this year under the fifth phase timetable of the U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam.

U.S. Headquarters also reported that an American helicopter gunship fired by mistake into South Vietnamese troops and killed one government soldier and wounded seven more. Headquarters said the accidental firing in the central highlands Sunday is under investigation.

Hanoi To Boycott Peace Talks Wed.

PARIS (AP) — The Communist side in the Vietnam peace conference announced Monday it will boycott Wednesday's scheduled session as a protest against the weekend bombing of North Vietnam by U.S. planes. The Communists said they would be back for the next session, Dec. 3.

It was the second time the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong decided on such action as a result of American bombing raids on the North. The first time was last May.

North Vietnam's minister of state, Xuan Thuy, head of Hanoi's delegation, announced the decision at a news conference. The Viet Cong delegation made a similar announcement in a communique.

The United States and South Vietnam agreed on holding the next session of the talks-the 93rd - on Dec. 3.

Thuy read a statement saying: "The Nixon administration must bear the full responsibility for the obstacles to the works of the Paris conference on Vietnam and for all other serious consequences arising from its actions."

The American bombing raids were described by Washington as "protective reaction" against the shooting down of U.S. reconnaissance planes. The last such plane was knocked down Nov. 13.

Thuy sought to make it clear that despite the raids, the North Vietnamese would continue firing missiles and antiaircraft guns at any American craft north of the 17th Parallel.

Guinea Continues Fighting Invaders

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) - Guinea's 5,000 man army battled for a second day against invaders Monday and a number of European advisers to President Sekou Toure's Marxist oriented government have been killed, radio Conakry reported.

It also said the invaders had been trained by Col. Jean Schramme, a Belgian born white mercenary who fought in the Congo.

The broadcast repeated the contention of the Guinean government that the invaders were mercenaries dispatched by Portugal, which has anoverseas territory bordering on Guinea on the West African bulge.

Radio Conakry said two of those "cowardly murdered" were West Germans, but it gave no details.

In Bonn, the West German Foreign Ministry said it had received word that an employee of a German firm in Conakry had been killed. It identified him as A. von Thiesenhausen. The Foreign Ministry said it had no reports of other West Germans being killed.

Information on the hostilities came only from sparse communiques issued by radio Conakry.

"The battle has not ended," the radio said at midday. "The Fascist enemy is still here. Its ships are still in Guinean territorial waters. The Portuguese mercenaries have not beer disarmed."

Late Monday, Nigeria, with black Africa's biggest standing army, offered to send Guinea military assistance.

Portugal denied any role in the fighting and welcomed the U.N. Security Council's plan to send an investigative team to Conakry. Antonio Spinola, governor general of neighboring Portuguese Guinea, dismissed the Guinean charges with a statement that they were a smokescreen to hide internal problems.

With the exception of a U.N. observer's report, no independent information on the fighting was available. After saying the invaders were repulsed Sunday night, radio Conakry reported Monday morning that the "second day of the war that Portuguese imperialism imposed on us" had begun with a new attempt to land troops.

Unstable since its independence from France in 1958, Guinea has been marked almost yearly with announcements of foiled imperialist coups to overthrow Toure. The president repeatedly asserted this year that foreign mercenaries were planning to mount an attack on his regime.

Estimates on the size of the invading force ran from 350, a figure cited by a captive, to 800, the number given in a speech in Brazzavilla by President Marian Ngouabi of the Congo Republic. He said his left wing government was threatened by "the same mercenaries."

Guinea's armed forces received assistance in the past from West Germany and the Soviet Union, but the Russians were understood to no longer be involved in the army's training. The Soviet Union gave bout a dozen MIG 17 jet fighters, which made Guine's air force one of the most modern in West Africa.

Nigeria's government said it had "clear evidence of foreign involvement" in Guinea.

Its foreign minister, Dr. Okoi Arikpo, said in Lagos that the Nigerian government learned from its embassy in Conakry that onS Sunday morning at about 2 a.m., 12 boats - "four of them large and eight small" - landed 300 armed men, "most of them white and 50 of them Africans believed to be Guinean rebels or defectors."

"From all indications it appears that they took off from the neighboring territory of Guinea, which is under Portuguese control," Arikpo said.

Radio Conakry gave no details in its midday broadcast of Col. Schramme's alleged involvement.

Schramme, also known as "Black Jack," has been described as a wealthy farmer with a taste for adventure. He settled in Katanga Province for the Belgian Congo before it became independent Congo in July 1960. He joined the secessionist forces of Moise Tschombe in 1961 and fought with him until the United Nations ended the war in January 1963. Schramme then took his men to Angola, another Portuguese territory next to the Congo. Schramme returned to the Congo in 1964 when Tschombe became premier and fought leftist rebels.

In 1967, he led a revolt of mercenaries and Congolese soldiers in the eastern Congo. It lasted four months and he and his men fled to neighboring Rwanda. He returned to Belgium in 1968.

Government Asked to Stop Financing Abortions

BOSTON (AP) — Eighteen doctors and educators announced Monday they have asked President Nixon in a letter to stop "government paid abortions in Federal installations."

The group, including members of the recently formed Value of Life Committee in Boston, asserted that a recent Defense Department order on military dependents "allows abortion on demand in Department of Defense installations in the several states."

The letter said, "We find bone chilling similarities in the anti life stance of sectors of American society and the Nazi propaganda and practice but a third of a century ago."

The signers, chiefly from the Boston area, included the president of the committee, Joyce M. Dwyer, associate professor of maternal and infant nursing at the Boston College School of Nursing.

School of Ed Develops Counseling Week Program

In an attempt to improve the advising process for the Undergraduate Education major, the School of Education has developed a Counseling Week Program.

General Information:

Evaluation forms are being mailed to Senior and Junior Undergraduate Education Majors this week (Nov. 23-28) in attempt to assist you in choosing your Spring Courses. Particular attention should be paid to the required courses that you still have to take for your degree program. If you have questions regarding your requirements or undergraduate programs in general, it is highly recommended that you stop by or call the Undergraduate Affairs Office (UAO, R. 123A 5-1543-4) at the School of Education.

For Counseling Week, it is not required that Undergraduates have the signature of an Undergraduate Advisor. However, in the case of a By Permission of the Instructor course of Independent Study, the instructor's signature is a prerequisite for officially enrolling in the course.

Counseling Week Schedule:

Monday-Counseling will take place in the School of Education Library where all Centers will be represented from 9:00 - 4:00. The Undergraduate affairs Office will be open from 9:00 - 5:00 and from 7:00 - 9:00. Counselors will be available in the Southwest dormitory area from 7:00 - 9:00 (check bulletin board for exact location).

Tuesday through Friday-Center representation will be held in the following areas for the remainder of the week.

Asethetics	Room 225
Non-Center	Room 225 outside
Humanistic	Room 105
International	Montague Attic
Research	Room 208
Teacher Ed	Room 128
Media	Room 22
Foundations	Room 14 - outside
Early Childhood	Room 4 - outside
Administration	Room 222
Human Relations	Wysocki House
Voc. & Tech. Ed	Room 112

The Undergraduate Affairs Office will be open from 9:00 - 5:00 and 7:00 - 9:00 for the remainder of the week.

Tuesday - Counselors in the Northeast Dorm - Crabtree
Wednesday - Counselors in the Central Dorm - Van Meter
Thursday - Counselors in the Orchard Hill Dorm - Dickinson

Draft Counselor's Corner

SSS Works Up New Hassle

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

There's a couple of issues that should be considered today. One concerns medical deferments; the other has to do with a new thing being put together to hassle Conscientious Objectors.

First, medical deferments.

Too many people fail to take proper advantage of the deferment possibilities offered by the SSS. There is a tremendous range of physical disabilities which could gain you an opportunity to not kill people in Vietnam.

The physical demands which may be made on you by the military far exceed those made on you by normal, or even strenuous, civilian life. Basic training puts unusual stress on weak muscles, healed bone fractures, old operation scars, etc. Duty assignments can expose you to climatic conditions which might aggravate respiratory diseases or skin ailments. Strict military diets could expose you continually to foods which cause allergic reactions.

The list is mearly endless. The point to remember is that what might be simply a minor inconvenience-- or no bother at all- could become a major disability to the military. They do not want to have to worry about giving you special duty assignments to cater to your allergies, or about your recurrent headaches or dizzy spells keeping you out of the action at a crucial time, or a possible flareup of an old case of asthma, or similar problems. Above all else, they don't want to have to pay you disability for an old injury or disease which military training or duty causes to return.

What all this boils down to is the simple fact that you should not assume that you don't have a right to a medical deferment simply because you have both legs and are not constantly under a doctor's care. If you have a history of a problem, or have something which you haven't yet seen a doctor about, check into it. It may qualify you for a deferment. If in doubt, check with a draft counselor.

There will be more information in a later column about how to apply for an document a medical deferment.

Now, the new hassle for Conscientious Objectors.

It seems that the new depression is putting some pressure on the SSS. They foresee a problem in being able to place CO's in alternative service jobs. This is primarily due to the fact that there simply ain't no more jobs to be had by anyone, anywhere. Of course, it would be too simple to allow someone who is opposed to killing or to war to get away scot-free.

Instead, Selective Service Director Curtis W. Tarr is considering proposing a new form of retribution for those with a conscience and the strength to demand that their conscience be recognized. Work camps will be opened up, on the model of the old Roosevelt-era CCC camps, especially for CO's if this proposal is made and accepted.

This is obviously another attempt by the Selective Service System to deprive you and your brothers of your freedom. It is a form of punishment for refusing to kill or participate in a death machine. For many CO's, it will make jail perferable to requesting that the SSS "approve" their consciences. For others, whose feelings are not so strongly deveploped, it might make them afraid to request a I-0 at all because of it's similarity to a prison camp or detention center.

This could possibly be the beginning of the heavy repression of those who say no to killing. Opposition to this plan is needed NOW.

I urge you to write to Tarr and tell him that you oppose this and any other plan of retribution for Conscientious Objectors. This nation must provide freedom for people to act on their consciences. Write to: Curtis W. Tarr, Director, Selective Service System, Washington, D.C.

Diet Lines Opening In Two Commons

Two diet lines will be opening in the dining commons on Tuesday, December 1, one in Worcester (north) commons and one in Hampden (#7 in Southwest).

According to Assistant Director of Food Services Arthur Warren, the lines will be open the same hours as the regular lines, but may be adjusted later according to dieters' demand.

Calorie numerical values will be placed on all food in the diet lines so dieters will be able to keep track of calories as they pick up their meals. Many of the meals used in the regular lines will be repeated minus butter, potatoes, etc.

In most cases, two meals will be offered but in the case of "universally accepted" meals, dieters will be offered one plate.

Approximately 800 people are estimated to take advantage of the new system in each dining commons during the first day. However, Mr. Warren expects a "leveling off" to about 200 people on each line to occur within time.

Mr. Warren feels that if 200 people take advantage of each line, the system could be termed an accomplishment and "would be worth the staff's time and labor."

Classics Faculty-Students to Meet

The Classics, Latin, and Greek teachers invite all interested students to a student-faculty night, Monday, November 30, from 7 to 9 p.m. in Herter 301. Up to date information on courses for the second semester both at the University and the neighboring colleges will be available, and teachers will be present to answer questions about their courses and to help you plan your program for the second semester. Your attention is called to the fact that certain changes in staffing and offerings are being made, and as a result the Descriptive Guide to Courses published by the Collegian is not wholly accurate. Refreshments served. For further information, call 545-0512.

Goodell Plans Information Series For Sociology Grad Students

Stumped and frustrated by Goodell Library? Want some short cuts to the information you need? The staff of the Reference Department would like to help you.

They have planned a series of Information Forums for graduate students in the Social Sciences and Humanities. The series will be given at two different times and will consist of three sessions each. These sessions will explain how materials are organized in the University of Massachusetts Library System, will introduce you to some important reference tools, and will discuss how you can use other libraries either directly or indirectly. And the librarians will try to answer your questions about the particular problems you have faced when using the Library.

These three hours will not tell you all there is to know about using libraries, but they will help you to save time and avoid frustration. Plan to come to Room 613 of Goodell for either:

Series A on Tuesdays at 3 p.m.
December 1, 8, 22
or
Series B on Thursdays at 8 p.m.
December 3, 10, 17

IRS Calls For Quick Action on W-2's

The Internal Revenue Service is issuing an appeal to all employers in New England and New York, including state, city and town officials, to issue withholding Forms W-2 to their employees early in January.

The appeal is being made so IRS can send an estimated eight million taxpayers, due refunds, their checks earlier, and simultaneously reduce processing costs at its Service Center in Andover, Massachusetts.

Although the law requires Forms W-2 issued by January 31, IRS said it is making the appeal in the interest of economy. Taxpayers must have their Form W-2 and/or Form 1099 to properly make out their return.

IRS also announced that requests for extension of time to issue these documents will not be approved except in unusual hardship circumstances.

Why, What and Who

The United States bombed North Vietnam the other day. What can I say about something like that. I simply will call for the resignation of Richard Nixon. That makes twice this month, and he hasn't resigned yet, but I feel it would be in the best interests of all concerned. Agnew too, of course.

UCLA beat USC badly the other day. Those who care about such things will remember that last year Sam Dickerson caught a Jim Jones pass in the last minute to give USC a 14-12 victory and the Rose Bowl. Two years previous to that, in Gary Beban's final game against USC, the Bruins lost by one, as Zenon Androshyshn missed an extra point and a field goal, and O.J. Simpson broke one for 64 yards and the winning touchdown. Now you have to realize that I'm a UCLA fan. I've suffered through three frustrating years waiting for UCLA to win. The oddsmakers had USC favorites by seven points. I knew that Dennis Dummit of UCLA was going to have a good game though, so I picked the Bruins to run away. When I turned it off it was 54-20, in favor of UCLA. I was very happy.

Roger Daltry

I heard "Superstar" for the first time this weekend. It is a rock opera about Jesus Christ. The idea behind it is good, but I don't know about the singing. The songs sound like they may be good, but they're sung in a schreeching manner that I really didn't like. The thing has potential.

I heard Tommy this weekend for the umpteenth time.

It is still good.

I was lying on the floor in a position and a condition to really get into Tommy. You have to see "The Who" live to really appreciate their music. Lance and I sat there comparing past Who concerts we've seen. They're so theatrical. Rolling Stone once described Roger Daltry "as every teenyboppers idea of what a rock star should be." Well Rolling Stone has this problem that comes from too many years of trying to be hip. Certainly The Who would tug at the heartstrings of the pubescent idolworshipper. But their stage performance, with Daltry whipping around the microphone, Townsend battling his guitar, punishing it, leaping into the air and thrashing the air with his arm as he brings it down to strike the next chord, while Keith Moon throws drum sticks off his skin to bounce backstage and makes faces while playing some of the best drums around; it's really something. (I apologize for the unwieldiness of that last sentence. I got going and I didn't want to stop so we'll leave it as is with an apology).

The Who are one of the most dynamic exciting acts ever to come down the road. If you ever get the chance again, see them. Peace.

The Octopus Lives, Alas

Occasionally I get this irrepressible urge that compels me to flop down in an easychair, light up a pipe, and submerge myself with the archaic melodies of the previous decade ("Oldies-but-Goodies"). Saturday I had just such an urge, and knowing that continued repression of an irrepressible urge can lead to all sorts of psychosomatic nasties, I succumbed to the urge.

I stacked up seven platters from bygone days on an equally bygone stereo. The platters ranged from 1961 to 1968. Dave Clark. Leslie Gore. Nat King Cole (I'm not sentimental, just reminiscient). The Beach Boys. Arlo Guthrie. ARLO GUTHRIE?!! Then it dawned on me. Whatever happened to the Alice's Restaurant Movement of which Arlo was the catalyst? Whatever happened to Lew Hershey and Dr. Spock? What has happened to the draft as a major political issue? Has it died out?

It's apparent that the issue of the draft has been placed on the rear burner while other causes boil into evaporation on the front burner. By limiting ourselves to draft councilling and not launching an all out offensive against Selective Service (Servitude) we are merely slashing the tentacles when we should be clobbering the octopus. And one finds that the tentacles continue to reach out so long as the octopus remains alive.

Now is not the time to relax. Melvin Laird's reassurances that the draft will be PHASED out does not mean that he intends to abolish the draft and replace it with a volunteer system, which would be far more efficient from a military standpoint and far less authoritarian from a political and moral standpoint. What is needed is a non-partisan Committee to Abolish the Selective Service. It's function would be to coordinate educational activities to convince others that the draft should be abolished, and to convince congressmen likewise. Nationwide publication and demonstration in favor of the Goldwater-McGovern amendment to repeal the draft is an obsolute necessity. Those interested in forming an anti-draft Committee should drop by the Draft Counseling Office in the Student Union and sign your name on the list so designated. If a committee can be formed, our activities can be coordinated with similar organizations on other campuses. The President must be forced to live up to his campaign promise to abolish Selective Service. Many members of Congress are already in outspoken opposition to the draft, and several individuals who won seats in Congress this past month, notably Stevenson, Tunney, Buckley, Taft, Brock, Drinan, Abzug, Dullems, and Harrington all have come out against the draft. The cause should be intensified. Seize the time. Smash the Octopus!

Middle America Comes Back

WASHINGTON--Will Middle America forgive? We'll know the answer to that question before the 1972 elections.

The Saturday Evening Post has just announced it's going back in business, as a quarterly. Beurt Ser Vaas, an Indiana publisher who bought up most of the Curtis Publishing stock, says the new magazine will look like the old Saturday Evening Post in the days when Norman Rockwell's covers reigned supreme.

"The Post will represent Middle America," said Ser Vaas, "and will not be sophisticated or blase. It will have the qualities of kindness, sympathy, nostalgia and optimism that made it a favorite of Americans for many generations."

All well and good, and I wish Mr. Ser Vaas a lot of luck, but I believe he should be aware he faces a very serious problem.

When the Saturday Evening Post was struggling for its life a few years back, it decided to cut 2 million subscribers from its 6 million circulation list. A computer was hired to weed out older people, small towners and people who didn't have the buying power The Post advertising people thought they should. The magazine announced publicly it only wanted a young class of readers.

This was a blow for the people who loved the Saturday Evening Post the most--and when they received a notice from the Curtis Publishing Company telling them they had no class and they were being struck from the subscription list, they couldn't believe it.

Some became embittered, others depressed and a few committed suicide. Most people who were cut have not gotten over it.

Unfortunately, these are the same readers Mr. Ser Vaas is going for. How can he get those people whom the old SEP had declared non-persons to subscribe again?

Here is a suggested letter he might send out:

Dear Middle American,

Two-and-a-half years ago, a computer in our company went berserk and canceled your subscription to the Saturday Evening Post. This computer, which we have since discovered was an effete intellectual snob, had decided, without conferring with anybody, to drop everyone from Middle America and only send the magazine to those who lived in the high-rent districts of this country.

The computer worked alone at night, when no one was in the building, sorting out people by ages and income brackets. Anyone over 40 and who made less than $20,000 a year was erased from its tape.

In the morning when we came to work, the computer pretended that everything was A-okay. None of us here at Curtis Publishing had any idea of the disloyal components that were working against us.

It was just by accident, when we received 2 million letters protesting cancellations of our magazine, that we suspected foul play.

The computer denied any wrongdoing, but we were so certain it was lying that we applied electrodes to its auxiliary condenser. The agony was too much and it fed out a confession.

The reason it gave for its perfidy was that whenever it made a mistake in an address, the circulation manager kicked it.

The computer said it decided to revenge itself on the company.

You will be happy to know that this computer is no longer with us. After being stripped of all its tapes and fuses, it was sold to the Soviet Union where it is now computing salt mine production in the Urals.

Knowing that as a loyal, patriotic American you would not hold a traitorous computer against us, we are asking you to re-subscribe to the Saturday Evening Post.

Our new computer has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI, has been cleared by the FBI...

In The Beginning Was The Match

In case you're interested, certain matches self-extinguish when the match is only half-consumed. To my knowledge, the only ones consistently exhibiting this unique characteristic are those coming in a gold matchbook advertising a certain Amherst bank. My search for other has led to the most remote matchbooks of the world. I have ignited the flames of Coke matchbooks, Salem matchbooks, insurance company matchbooks, correspondence course matchbooks, ad infinitum. But to no avail. For the flames of all these burn, almost without exception, for the entire length of the match, leaving nothing but charred remains.

There are two schools of thought on the death of a flame at half-match. Those on the Amherst bank side feel that by the time a flame has burned half-way down the match, it has usually outlived its usefulness. (In any cases where half a match wouldn't be enough to light a cigarette, or whatever, there are usually outside factors, such as wind, working against the flame, minimizing its chances of surviving the length of the match, even if it could. However, these cases are extreme and may be overlooked in the interests of simplicity.) In other words, the flame's prolonged life would be of no benefit to the user and could even serve to his disadvantage by burning his finger.

On the other hand, proponents of the charred remains theory feel that you must allow the flame to realize its full potential. They tend toward extremism in their fight against the premature death of a flame. Their position overlooks the fact, sad but true, that few match flames are allowed to outlive their functional use.

Well, you may be wondering, "Is there no solution?" Admittedly, the question is a difficult one; more research is needed. But most likely, it will go down in the annals of time, unresolved, buried under more esthetic pursuits, while in the eternity of some obscure past, Prometheus gives his liver in vain.

WMUA Tries Harder

To The Editor:

To reply to the namecaller with typical Dickinsonian insight (letter, Nov. 23, "Campus Comment;;0;

1. Miss Letalien states that Seventh Floor says no because they will loose a 'multi-facility' ironing room". All attempts by WMUA to compensate for the loss of the room have been completely ignored, and we have received no support for further discussions regarding the resolution of this problem. I might add paranthetically that in my several visits to the Hill, I have not once seen any one in or using the room.

2. The question of "interference and damage to the roof" has been completely explained with data from engineering reports and statements of fact from Physical plant engineers used to substantiate WMUA's case. But at this point, empirical data and logic take a second seat to emotion.

3. Speaking of the money being wasted....The whole attitude of Dickinson seems to be an assertion of the basic principle that students should be able to govern their affairs with the common student welfare in mind. Somewhat contradictory actions have resulted, since thousands of student dollars have been spent to ultimately benefit the welfare of the whole student body here at UMass Amherst, yet the selfish interests of a very small minority of students are being voiced.

WMUA has continually tried to explain the why's and wherefore's of the power increase, at the same time trying to maintain an amiable relationship between students. Dickinson, in Miss Letalien, calls WMUA "rinky-dink". One must reflect on the true nature of that statement and conclude that the issues are, at this point, completely unimportant by Dickinson's reasoning, and emotion has taken over where reason should exist.

Miss Letalien speaks of priorities....an ironing room vs. a power increase. It is absurd to even delve into the time, effort, and money students have already spent in the whole affair and subsequent delay, and weigh the situation on a priority basis,particularly when one considers the fact that five other "multi-facility ironing rooms" exist within the dorm.

WMUA, however, has not treated the loss of the room as a minor issue, but to reiterate, attempts at compromise have failed.

So "rinky-dink" WMUA will continue to try to affect a fair and reasonable solution, confronting the emotion and irrationality which residents such as Miss Letalien spew forth, in hopes that ultimately the entire student interests be served.

Fight For Peace?

To the Editor:

Your article about the Dow Chemical "Mock Kidnapping" was a masterpiece of misplace emphasis. We read about the security precautions (purely routine, as we had told Bromery two days before that the kidnapping was to be a guerilla theatre piece), and the reaction of YAF, but no coverage of the content of the event, or statement by one of us discussing its meaning.

We wrote that ambiguous leaflet, not because we wanted "something to happen", as a previous Collegian article stated, but because we wanted people to think about terrorism as a real possibility and their reactions to it. For people no longer believe that this society and university can be changed in any basic way without terrorism. Everyone knows that the normal channels all work for the status quo, and see no alternative except in violent, terroristic acts. Rationality, discussion, debate, are clogged by people who are either intimidated or paid off or blocked by the structural limitations of authoritarian institutions. Thus a meaningful demonstration is possible only if it threatens terrorism, and this we did, but explicitly and with exaggerated emphasis, so as to call attention to that very important feature of our current situation.

Our main message was this: first, the university is still educating killers with great, naive enthusiasm; and second, the whole learning structure of the university is geared to the production of a commodity corporations want to buy: well-trained, well-adjusted, cooperative, unthinking simpletons. We wanted to call people's attention to the fact that corporations are still making and selling the tools of destruction to be used against innocent people; and that the university is as uncritical of American capitalist activity as the local Kiwanis on Main Street.

We also want to suggest a course of action: organized non-cooperation and organized non-violent disruption. When students and faculty see the ways in which they are manipulated and dehumanized by this university and the society it serves, and refuse to cooperate any longer in their own oppression, the society will change; and if terrorism comes it will come from the establishment (as it has in the past), against those who are beginning to refuse the inducements to cooperate, be quiet, and do nothing.

Their Share

To The Editor:

I would like to correct some errors in the letter by John Grahame that appeared in the Nov 23 MDC.

First of all, you need only be a resident of Amherst for six months to be eligible to vote here. This means that off campus students become able to "participate" in local government after only one semester.

Secondly, the local police have set foot in Log's upon many occasions, for reasons varying from telling people to move their cars from the gas station across the street to looking for "suspicious" persons.

And by the way, Mr. Grahame, if you have any doubts about police and other harassment of the owners and patrons of Log's, just step on down and rap with them and you'll get your "hazy" facts straightened out. Ask about arrests for drunk and disorderly where drunkometer tests were denied. Ask about futile attempts to bail out people. This is not an endorsement of Log's, bu. they do get more than their share of shit.

Do you see that little streetlight? Well, it's been there since last summer. And do you see the big streetlight? That's been there for god knows how long. Anyway we're wondering why there are two lights, and why only one is working.

It seems that the little, unused light could be moved to say V Lot, or the rapist's paradise. But I'm sure it won't be, after all, that makes sense.

MDC Close-Up

Curry Hicks Cage: Proud But Old

The inadequacy of the Cage as a gathering place for students has recently come into sharp focus due to the homecoming concert disturbances there. There have been plans underway, however, to replace the 40 year old Cage as a gathering place with an athletic-convocation center capable of accommodating a university community the size of UMass.

Dean of Physical Education and Director of Athletics Warren McGuirk, co-chairman of the proposal committee for the center, discussed the advantages and needs of this 'utopian facility' in a recent MDC interview. The committee, which is comprised of students and faculty, has proposed this project which will provide seating space for 12,000-15,000 persons, plus space for all campus programs and activities.

The plans for the athletic-convocation center will be based on what's been done recently on other campuses. One model preferred by the committee is that of the new center at Notre Dame. However, McGuirk stressed that they don't necessarily plan to copy the design, but the function.

The Notre Dame facility is comprised of a large basketball arena which seats 12,000, and can also be used for concerts and theater productions. Adjacent to it is a large field house which includes an indoor track and a hockey rink which seats 6,000. The UMass center will include this and also space for theater groups, practice rooms for all sports, and a communications center with radio and television facilities.

McGuirk said that they hope to be able to provide adequate seating for students and make arrangements for all campus groups to make use of the facility. He doesn't think that the building can be considered too large for the UMass campus, and he added that he considers it an important and much needed facility.

The proposal for the center estimates that $16 million dollars will be necessary for its construction. At present, Jack Littlefield, director of University planning, feels that the state legislature will not provide the funds for another 10-12 years. The center is low on the list of building priorities for the Amherst campus. Until the University is able to provide the necessary amount of square footage per student in academic buildings, all monies from the state will be used to construct academic buildings.

It will be another 5 or 6 years, Littlefield said, before the university catches up on its building. This means that considerations for the center won't come up until that time.

Aside from looking to the state for funds, Littlefield said that a self-liquidating student fee could be enacted. But the question arises here as to whether or not this would be agreeable. He said that in the long run, the cheaper concert fees might offset or balance the student fee, but it might be continued to provide maintenance funds.

However, it is felt that the increasing of student fees is too touchy. Dean of Students William Field is opposed to any additional fees because of the cost squeeze the students are feeling already.

Dean Field put the problem this way: "We can decide on what should go in, but not who should pay" for the new center. He also said that "we are at a point where costs are rising so fast that I really think it unfair to add a $30 or $40 a year fee" on the students.

The UMass Building Authority on campus is a determining factor in whether or not the project will be built, Littlefield explained. One major factor in this decision is whether or not the building will be student supported. Field, and Littlefield, both agree that to get the project off the ground, the students will have to initiate it themselves.

But, they also stress that action will have to be taken soon. "The longer we wait," "the more costly it's going to get.'

Another problem that arises is whether or not enough money will be provided for the project as it is now planned. If construction expenses go too high, a reduction in the size or facilities, or both, might be called for. This would be unfortunate because it would also 'reduce the long term potential of the building.'

The center would be available most of the time to the university community. There would be limited schedule constraints -- mainly for basketball and hockey games. Except on these occasions, the facilities will be opened to everyone.

Associate Provost David Bishoff, another committee member, discussed the advantages of the building beyond the athletic aspects. The structure's provision for more seating would cut down on the need for dual concerts, and would therefore mean lower admission fees. Also, he explained, there would be better chances of getting bigger groups to perform on campus with the improved facilities.

There is no question, Bishoff said, of the need for the sports facilities. 'But unless the student feel the building will have more potential than as an athletic structure, it shouldn't be built." he added.

The proposed site for the athletic-convocation center is the farm area across from the physical plant buildings. The committee chose this location because they considered it conveniently accessible to parking space. Plans will also be made for a 2,000 car parking lot on the east side of the center.

McGuirk hopes to have something on the drawing board soon so work can begin. He considers it very important to "envision the future usefulness of the facility" in regards to the projected University growth.

This athletic-convocation facility is considered by its proposal committee to be a very important contribution to the University community. As committee member Associate Provost Bishoff put it, the University should be a "total experience", rather than just an educational one. He feels that this project would be a valuable contribution to such an experience. But at the same time, the committee feels that students will have to help to get the project started, if they really want it.

Fulfilling A Need Then, Creating A Problem Now

Curry Hicks Cage was completed in the spring of 1931 as a multi-purpose facility, similar to ones built at Harvard and Amherst College at the same time.

The hard-packed dirt floor has felt the footsteps of many varied and sundry people, from the rubber-soled wedgies of perfumed matrons out for a day at the flower show, to the stamping boots and sneakers of the student body as it urges the Redmen on.

Originally designed a gymnasium, the Cage has housed events ranging from cattle shows to state-wide conventions. The Cage is now used mainly for varsity basketball games, practices, and until recently, major concerts.

The need for a physicial education facility was expressed in the middle and late 1930's by the man for whom the building is named, Professor Curry S. Hicks, Head of the Department of Physical Education. Known in those days as Mass Aggie, this school had a total enrollment of about 800. There was virtually no place on campus to serve as a home for the physical education dept., except for Drill Hall, built in 1884.

Hicks' idea for a new facility caught on with Aggie alumni and they were the ones who took on the responsibility of raising the $375,000 the building was projected to cost. The senior class of 1928 was the first group to contribute. They kicked in $200 from their class coffers to get the ball rolling.

Pressure was put on the state legislature to contribute and a compromise plan was finally reached. Donations from individuals would be matched by money from the state. The bids were let out on June 5, 1930 with J.G. Roy and Sons of Springfield getting the contract. Surveying work began on June 7 with a hoped-for completion date of August 1, 1931. The state has contributed a total of $172,500 to the construction costs.

Professor Hicks envisioned the building as a center for the campus' physical education dept. The number coeds enrolling at Mass Aggie was climbing year by year, and Drill Hall had no locker room facilities for them. The plans for the building called for men's and women's locker rooms, special exercise rooms, a pool, lecture rooms, and a dirt floor recreation hall measuring 160 by 180 feet. The actual building varies a little from the initial plans, mostly in the way that the rooms and the pool were placed.

The Cage was not used for any major varsity athletic functions until Warren McGuirk present Director of Athletics, arrived here in 1948. As one of his first acts in his new post, McGuirk brought a portable wooden floor for basketball into the Cage. Prior to this basketball, was played in Drill Hall, occupying the plot that Bartlett now stands on and which was finally ripped down in 1954.

As Mass Agie grew over the years and became the University of Massachusetts, the Cage seemed to grow smaller and older. The original glass roof deteriorated and began to leak. At one point, a basketball game was called off when the floor became too wet to play on. The waves of hot air that poured out of the ducts into the Cage would rise and disappear through the cracks and holes in the roof, making the Cage a cold and clammy place in which to play anything. In the summer and fall of 1969, the entire glass roof was replaced by a new plywood one. The leaks were plugged up and the whole place sealed up so well that Curry Hicks now resembles a steam bath without Turkish towels and soggy newspapers.

Needless to say, a 4500-seat facility used for major events on campus of 20,000 gets a lot of use. Last year a total of 122,000 people passed through the dirty, green double doors of the Cage. Of these, 58,000 were there for an athletic function of somesort, while 64,000 attended a non-athletic function.

Major events held recently in Curry Hicks include the state Democratic convention and a concert that may prove to be the first chime of the death-bell for Curry Hicks.

What Can Be Done With Curry Hicks?

Curry Hicks is an out-dated and out-grown building that demands replacement. Sitting on a prime spot near the center of campus, it almost cries out loud for the wrecker's ball. Unfortunately, the Cage will be with us for a few more years, or at least until someone comes up with $16 million dollars for a new facility. When asked to comment on the possibility of a new convocation center, Trustee John Haigis, chairman of the committee on Buildings and Grounds, only chuckled and said that UMass is a long way away from any such building.

But the fact remains that the Cage can no longer be expected to serve the campus in the role of a convocation center. It may be fine for basketball practice, which itself has been known to draw a crowd of a few thousand, but what happens when game-time rolls around? Get there at 4 or you don't get a seat. What can be done?

The obvious answer is to build a new building. But this takes time and most importantly, money. The Cage cost $375,000 to build, financed in large part by alumni, with about half coming from the state. Nowadays it isn't as easy to get money from either. The state will give money only for academic buildings, which UMass is about five years behind in building, and alumni aren't known for their charity to their alma mater. UMass can either ask its students to foot the bill, as in the case of the Campus Center, or UMass can wait 10 to 12 years until the legislature loosens the purse strings. It will be a building for students: if they want it, they can get it.
